

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

+ Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.

+ Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.

+ Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.

+ Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter `http://books.google.com` durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1879.

The Royal Agricultural Society's Show at Kilburn, opened on Monday last, is very suggestive. We are now in the first week of July. The ground upon which the Show was located up to a very late period had been so saturated with rain as, according to a witness of large experience, to have exceeded the mud-field of Balaklava in the earlier period of the Crimean War. By dint of incredible labour this disagreeable state of things was sufficiently overcome to limit within tolerable bounds the inconvenience to which visitors were exposed on the opening day. The weather was then genial, but the attendance was not numerous. Since Monday we have seen what we have seen, and it has cast us upon speculative inquiries as to, we will not say the probabilities, but the possibilities, of the coming harvest. The prospect before us is not calculated to raise enthusiastic anticipations. A late crop is certain, whether it will prove to be an abundant one is by no means so. The atmospherical conditions of the first seven months of the year have, in agricultural as well as in other respects, been abnormally trying. Hot weather during this month and August may yet redeem the effects of the cold and wet which may be said to have prevailed in this country, with very few and trivial exceptions, from the beginning of the year. But time is rapidly on the wing, and, unless a decided change takes place within a few days, it can hardly be hoped even by the most sanguine that the agricultural produce of 1879 will much exceed, even if it equals, that of either of the preceding seasons.

We need a bountiful harvest, more especially in breadstuffs, if only for the sake of our public Revenue. The decrease of both our Customs and Excise Duties in the quarter ended June 30, as compared with that of the same period last year, is serious; and, although more than made up for by the increase accruing on the Property and Income Tax, indicates, after every modification of the result by temporary circumstances has been taken into consideration, if not a declining, at any rate a still languid, state of industry and trade. Things may not be quite so bad as they have been, nor so bad as, at first blush, they would seem to be. But neither here, nor in our Colonies, nor in India, nor on the Continent of Europe, have there sprung up as yet any unmistakable symptoms of revival. It is true that the public Revenue may fail to show a favourable progress in trade and commerce for several months after such a revival has set in; but collateral evidence does not at present yield much support to the inference that day dawn is approaching, and it is quite possible that the alteration of tariffs in a protectionist direction in some of the largest States of Europe will, for a time at least, intensify the difficulties with which we are struggling. A "roaring" time of prosperity, therefore, even if it were desirable, must be regarded as afar off, and for individuals as well as for the nation the chief weapon of defence is, and for some months to come will be, strictly economical expenditure. We must contract our outgoings if we would bring them down to a level with our incomings.

There would appear to be a growing disposition to look to the Imperial Parliament for a palliative, or perchance a remedy, for the financial deadlock which has overtaken us. With this view, the proposal is made to inquire into the causes of depression which now threatens the agricultural interest with extensive dislocation. Such an inquiry, if it did not excite fallacious hopes, might at least do no harm, and, by disclosing facts as they stand—and especially as they stand in relation one to another—might diffuse abroad much-needed knowledge. It cannot be doubted that there is much suffering among those whose vocation may be fairly described as agricultural. Farmers are being ruined. Landlords are, in not a few instances, returning to their tenants twenty or even twenty-five per cent. of the rent they have been accustomed to receive. Husbandry is rapidly being succeeded by stock-feeding. Under present conditions, no Tenant Farmer can hold his own. Such, at least, is the allegation, and, in a great degree, we believe it to be true. The remedy, however, is not within the reach of direct legislative power. The fact is that our present land system has outgrown its capacities. Farming, as a business, does not stand upon the same basis, nor is it governed by the same laws, as it would be if regulated exclusively by commercial principles. It will have to come back, or rather to be pushed forward, to these conditions, before it will prosper, and it is better for both Landlords and tenants, to say nothing of the country generally, that it should do so. In fact, the interest must be relieved from artificial restraints and placed upon a natural level with other great interests of the Empire. Protection is dead. It never commended itself to one's sense of justice. It was at best the result of favouritism. The nation has condemned it. The people will not have it. No Ministry could be found to propose it. To confess the truth, the agriculturists know this, and hence Parliamentary inquiry would seem to be purposeless.

There is one direction, however, in which honest investigation at the present time might be fertile of profitable results. No one can question that the exclusive attention paid of late to foreign affairs has helped to enhance the difficulties of the present situation. All industries have been affected by a general want of confidence. There is plenty of money in the country—more than enough, indeed, for the ends to which it is applied. But enterprise and capital do not, as in previous times, walk together. The one is timorous because the other is mistrustful, and this has resulted from a mania for War. The Armaments of Europe are excessive. They must be lightened, or a great catastrophe may be expected at no very distant period. Unhappily, as we think, England has not altogether escaped the infection. She is in danger of becoming more Imperial than domestic—of caring more for national glory than for national good. It is an expensive game. It diverts vitality from that part of the organism which most needs it. Our is a wide, a very wide, dominion. We need not add to it a sort of political supervision of the world at large.

THE COURT.

The Queen invested Lady Conynghame (wife of General Sir Arthur Conynghame) with the Imperial Order of the Crown of India yesterday week at Windsor Castle. Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold were present. Her Majesty afterwards held a private investiture of the Order of the Bath, at which General Sir Arthur Augustus Thurlow Conynghame was introduced to the Queen, who invested him with the ribbon and badge of the Military Division of the First Class, and delivered to him the star of his dignity in the order. The following Knights Commanders were invested by her Majesty with the insignia of the Civil Division of the Second Class of the order—viz., Sir Francis Sanford, Mr. Ralph Walter Robert Lingen, and Mr. John Lambert, the latter gentlemen being knighted. The Queen also held a private investiture of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, at which the Right Hon. Lord Odo William Leopold Russell was knighted by her Majesty, who invested him with the ribbon and badge of a Knight Grand Cross and delivered to him the star of his dignity in the order. The following Knights Commanders were knighted, and were invested with the insignia of the Second Class of the order—viz., Mr. William Taylour Thomson, late Envoy and Minister to the Shah of Persia; Mr. George Welsh Kellner, late Financial Commissioner in Cyprus; and Mr. Edward William Stafford, formerly Prime Minister of New Zealand. Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold were present with her Majesty during the ceremony. FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Captain Frederick Gustavus Burnaby, Royal Horse Guards, and Miss Elizabeth A. F. Hawkins-Whitshed, only child of the late Sir St. Vincent Bentinck Hawkins-Whitshed, Bart., of Killincarrick, in the county of Wicklow, was celebrated last week by special license at St. Peter's Church, Onslow-gardens, as briefly announced in a large portion of our last issue. The entrances to the church and the reserved portion for the wedding party were kept by non-commissioned officers of the Royal Horse Guards, and troopers of the regiment lined the centre aisle. The band of the regiment, under Mr. C. Godfrey, filled the north gallery. The bridegroom came, accompanied by Captain the Hon. Oliver Montagu, his best man. The bride arrived at four o'clock, and was received by her cousin, Mr. Arthur Bentinck, who gave her away. The bride wore a gown of white satin duchesse, trimmed with Brussels point and fringes of orange-blossoms, and over a wreath of orange-blossoms a large tulle veil. Her jewels were a tiara of diamonds, a present from the bridegroom, and a diamond bracelet and pendant, the gifts of her mother. The bridesmaids were the Ladies Madeline and Blanche Keith-Falconer, Miss Venetia Bentinck, Miss Benira Pollard, Miss Greta Erskine, Miss Rhita Hancock, and Miss May Des Vœux. They wore dresses of white silk, trimmed with Indian muslin, Bretonne lace, and bunches of roses; and mob caps of Indian muslin, also trimmed with Bretonne lace and roses and maidenhair fern. Each also wore a crystal locket with gold double horseshoes, bearing the names of "Lizzie" and "Fred" respectively, and gold borders of turquoise blue enamel, the gift of the bridegroom. The application was granted.

THE ZULU WAR: "READY!" AT GENERAL NEWDIGATE'S HEAD-QUARTERS, LANDMAN'S DRIFT.—SEE PAGE 6.

THE ZULU WAR.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, contributes two Sketches of the camp of Major-General Newdigate at Landman's Drift, where the division commanded by that General, and accompanied by Lord Chelmsford with his head-quarters Staff, remained till May 28, removing on that day to Kopje Allein. These two places, with Conference Hill, which was at the same time occupied by Brigadier-General Evelyn Wood, form a triangle in the Utrecht district of the Transvaal territory, bordering on the western frontier of Zululand, and separated from it by the Blood River, a tributary of the Buffalo, their junction being at Rorke's Drift. The isolated rocky hill named the Kopje Allein, which commands a drift or ford over the Blood River, on the main road from Utrecht into the Zulu country, is the most advanced position yet held, preparatory to the invasion of Cetewayo's kingdom. Major-General Newdigate's division consists of the 2nd Battalions of the 21st Fusiliers and 24th Foot, the 58th, and the 94th; the Cavalry Brigade, under Major-General F. Marshall, composed of the King's Dragoon Guards, 17th Lancers, and Lonsdale's Horse; the Artillery, under Colonel Reilly, C.B., M and N Batteries, 6th Brigade R.A., a Gatling Battery, and two companies of Sappers, under Lieutenant-Colonel Harrison, Acting Quartermaster-General.

One of our Artist's Sketches in camp shows the evening promenade in front of the tents of the Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st regiment of the Line) to the rousing strains of their kilted "pipe major." This takes place almost daily before the officers' dinner-time, when friendly visits are exchanged from tent to tent, and there is an hour of social relaxation. It is to be hoped that bag-pipe music is equally agreeable to the Englishmen and to the Scotchmen in that part of the camp. It is the only music in the division.

The second Illustration is that of troops practising the manœuvres which belong to the defence of this fortified camp against a possible attack. Every morning, an hour before daybreak, they are exercised in striking the tents and occupying their allotted positions on the parapet, which is lined by half the men, in single rank, while the other half stand in support; each company having its own allotted position. The second battalion of the 21st, and the 58th Regiment, can strike their tents and occupy their positions in less than two minutes after the order being given. They are constantly practised also in volley-firing by sections. Lieutenant-Colonel W. Pole Collingwood, commanding the 21st or Royal Scots Fusiliers, has been placed in command of the 2nd Infantry Brigade, consisting of the 24th and 94th Regiments.

While at Fort Pearson, on the Lower Tugela river, soon after his arrival in Natal, our Special Artist made a Sketch of the graveyard in which are buried a few soldiers of the 99th Regiment, who died there in March last. This furnishes another Illustration of the Zulu War.

With reference to the war against the insurgent Basuto chief Morosi, in the mountain region west of Natal, around the sources of the Orange river, an Illustration of his formidable natural stronghold appeared in our last. It was from a Sketch by Mr. Watermeyer, of Graaf Reinet, in the Cape Colony.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

In Saturday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the general debate on M. Ferry's Education Bill was brought to a close, and it was decided by a large majority to proceed to the discussion of the separate clauses of the measure. On Monday the Chamber declared urgency for M. Ferry's Bill, the effect of which decision is that a single reading suffices to procure the definitive adoption of the Bill. The Chamber then proceeded with the discussion of the measure, negatived the counter-project of MM. Langle and Mitchell, Bonapartists, and afterwards rejected, by 350 votes against 176, the Bill submitted as a substitute by M. Bardoux, who proposed to restore to the State the right of conferring degrees, but to concede to religious confraternities the liberty to teach under State control.

A special requiem mass for the late Prince Louis Napoleon was on Thursday week celebrated in the Church of St. Augustin, at Paris, and was attended by Prince Jerome Napoleon, accompanied by his sons, Princess Mathilde, the ex-Queen of Spain, the members of the diplomatic body, and all the Bonapartist notabilities. A meeting of Bonapartist Senators and Deputies was held on Monday in Paris, when M. Rouher read the will of Prince Louis Napoleon. The Empress has asked that this document should not be published; but some of the papers give an outline of its contents, from which it appears that the Prince requests his mother to afford to Prince Victor her heartiest co-operation in the event of his having to sustain the burden of the Empire. M. Ferdinand Barrot and Prince Murat were deputed by the meeting to communicate these documents to Prince Napoleon. M. Rouher declined to undertake the commission on the ground that he had now determined to take no further active part in political life. Prince Napoleon, on receiving the communication, simply acknowledged its reception.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso presided on Monday at a meeting of the members of the Academy of History, Madrid, held to commemorate the foundation of that institution, and in the course of his address said that the members of the Academy should direct their efforts to fostering a proper appreciation of the greatness of the Spanish people as illustrated by their past history, and to developing the national patriotism. "After having ruled the world," added his Majesty, "it now suffices for Spain to rule herself."

Thursday week being the anniversary of the death of the late Queen Mercedes, a solemn service was celebrated in the chapel at the Escurial, where the remains of the late Queen were placed. The King and the Royal family were present at this service, which was celebrated by the Primate of Spain.

The Marquis Orovio, Minister of Finance, on the same day presented the Estimates for 1879-80. The expenditure is put at over thirty-three millions sterling, and the probable revenue at thirty-two millions. The Estimates show an increase of expenditure, owing to the interest on the debt and the heavy army expenses. The Minister fixes the probable revenue at a higher sum than the returns for the current year, admitting a deficit on the Estimates as well as on the floating debt of the Treasury of over three millions sterling.

In consequence of the outbreak of yellow fever in Portugal, the Government has ordered the performance of three days' quarantine for all arrivals from that country.

ITALY.

After a debate extending over two months the Chamber of Deputies on Monday approved, by 257 against 96 votes, the Ministerial Railway Bill, which provides for the construction of 6020 kilometres of railways within a period of twenty-one years, at an annual expenditure on this account of 60,000,000f.

Prince Alexander of Bulgaria was on Thursday week conveyed in a Royal carriage and escorted by Royal cuirassiers to the Quirinal Palace at Rome, and received by the King and Queen. Their Majesties have since entertained him at a State dinner, and the German Ambassador at Rome has given a diplomatic dinner in his honour.

BELGIUM.

The preamble of the Ministerial Financial Bill for an increase of taxation presented yesterday week in the Chamber of Deputies states that the proposed augmentations are estimated to yield to the Treasury an additional sum of 7,350,000f., whereas the deficit to be covered amounts to 12,000,000f. The Government, therefore, reserves to itself to propose, when expedient, the conversion of the 4½ per cent Rente.

The total cost of the new Palace of Justice at Brussels is estimated in the report addressed to the Chamber of Deputies at about 44,000,000f. It will still require five years to terminate the building.

HOLLAND.

The funeral of the late Prince of Orange took place on Thursday week at the Hague. The King and Princes Alexander and Frederick were chief mourners. One of the wreaths with which the coffin was covered was sent by the Empress Eugénie.

GERMANY.

The German Parliament on Thursday week agreed to a Government proposal for the acquisition of a site in the most fashionable part of Berlin, near the Victory Column, for the new Parliament Houses; and it was decided to refer the matter to the Budget Commission, and to await their report. The House also voted a sum of 400,000 marks for the completion of the national memorial of the war of 1870-1, erected on the lofty ridge of Niederwald, opposite Bingen. On the following day the Reichstag first passed, on a third reading, a bill for the construction of more railways in Alsace-Lorraine, and then resumed the everlasting tariff debate. The discussion chiefly hinged on those clauses of the bill referred to by the Tariff Commission, whose decisions as to the customs proposed by the Government on drugs, &c., glass and glass ware, paper and pasteboards, leads, zinc, and tin were hastily approved, with but few unimportant amendments.

The persistence with which Prince Bismarck insists upon his Tariff Bill being carried out in general accord with his own ideas has caused the resignation of Herr Hobrecht, the Finance Minister, of Dr. Friedenthal, the Minister of Agriculture, and of Dr. Falk.

DENMARK.

The Grand Duchess Maria Feodorovna of Russia (Princess Dagmar) arrived at Copenhagen with her four children last Sunday, and was received by the members of the Royal family. Her Imperial Highness proceeded immediately to the Royal summer residence at Bernstoff.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

The change of Government in Egypt, which had been expected for some time, was made on Thursday week, as was stated in a portion of our last issue. The Khedive received in the morning an order from the Sultan requiring him to abdicate in favour of Prince Tewfik, and his Highness at once complied with the demand. From a Daily News telegram we learn that the proclamation of Prince Tewfik as Viceroy of Egypt, with the title of Tewfik I., was made at six o'clock in the evening at the citadel of Cairo, and salutes of 101 guns were fired simultaneously at Alexandria and Cairo.

A Constantinople telegram states that the Porte has addressed a despatch to the European Powers abolishing the iradé of 1873, which authorised the Khedive to conclude treaties with foreign Powers and to maintain an Egyptian army. The despatch adds that the Porte will exert its influence to restore the finances of Egypt and remove the abuses existing there.

The new Viceroy, Prince Mohamed Tewfik, is the eldest son of the deposed Khedive, and was born in 1852. He married, in January, 1873, Princess Emineh, daughter of the late Prince El Hamy Pasha, and has two sons, Prince Abbas Bey, born in 1874, and Prince Mehemet Ali Bey, born in 1876; and one daughter, Princess Nazleh Hanem, born in 1877. Prince Tewfik was President of the Council at the recent coup d'état of the Khedive, but resigned that post immediately afterwards.

Ismail Pasha, the ex-Khedive, and his second and third sons, Princes Hussein and Hassan, started for Naples at six o'clock on Monday evening on board the Khedive's yacht Mahroussah. On their departure salutes were fired by an English and a French man-of-war.

AMERICA.

In the United States Senate on Wednesday week a concurrent resolution was introduced in favour of the complete remonetisation of silver. Mr. Burnside introduced a joint resolution stated that the people of the United States could not view without serious inquietude any attempt of the Powers of Europe to establish under their protection and domination a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and that such action could not be regarded otherwise than as a manifestation of unfriendly disposition towards the United States. The two bills into which the vetoed Judicial Bill has been subdivided by the Democrats were reported on Thursday week in the House of Representatives. The Finance Committee of the Senate amended the Trade Dollar Bill passed by the House by providing that trade dollars shall only be received at bullion value. The Committee also struck out the stipulation that recoinage under the Act shall not be accounted part of the coinage of silver required by the present law, and it further decided not to report the bill until December next. The Senate yesterday week passed the Judicial Appropriation Bill; and the House of Representatives passed the Judicial Appropriation Bill without the clauses objected to by President Hayes; the bill prohibiting the payment of deputy-marshals at polls; and the joint resolution of the two Houses for entering into a further treaty with Mexico, with a view to preventing border troubles.

President Hayes on Monday approved the first Judicial Bill, voting supplies for courts, but vetoed the second bill, voting marshals' salaries, because of political restrictions. The House immediately voted on the question, "Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the President's objections?" The result was 83 to 63. There not being a two-thirds majority, the bill failed. The President visited the Capitol to attend the closing hours of the Session; but when the Senate Democrats attempted to pass a resolution closing the Session at four o'clock the Republicans objected, and the adjournment question was postponed until Tuesday. The President then sent to each House a special message suggesting that appropriations should be made for Marshals before the Session closed. The Senate, by 23 votes against 22, referred to the Finance Committee the resolution which was introduced in the Senate on the 25th ult. declaring in favour of the complete remonetisation of silver. The Session of Congress closed on Tuesday afternoon, the Times correspondent at Philadelphia says, "to the intense satisfaction of the public, people being disgusted with the protracted political quarrel." Before separating both Houses passed, by large majorities, a Bill exempting salts of quinine and sulphate of quinine from Customs duties.

A telegram from Ottawa, dated June 26, states that the Hon. J. Macdonald, the Dominion Minister of Justice, and the Hon. C. The Times weekly telegrams from India state that cholera is very prevalent among the troops which are returning from Afghanistan. One or two more murders by fanatics are reported. Sir John Strachey's financial circular of June 16 has not (the Calcutta correspondent of the Times says) had the reassuring effect it was evidently intended to produce. It has been severely criticised by almost all papers; while the public generally look upon it as affording a further proof of the weakness of the present Government in matters of finance.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"Il Rè di Lahore," an Italian version of M. Massenet's "Le Roi de Lahore," was produced with great success on Saturday. The work was first brought out at Paris, in 1877, with a success beyond that achieved by any previous production of its composer. Of his skill as an orchestral writer previous mention has been made in reference to his characteristic "Suites" performed at Madame Viard-Louis's concerts and instrumental selections from "Le Roi de Lahore," and from his music to "Les Erinnyes," given at the Crystal Palace last year.

The original French book of "Le Roi de Lahore" was written by M. Louis Gallet, the Italian version having been adapted by Signor Zanardini, and the English text by Mr. Josiah Pittman. The scene is laid in India, and the action is supposed to take place at the period of the invasion of Lahore by the Sultan Mahmoud, in the eleventh century. The first act occurs in the Temple of Indra, whence Scindia, the Prime Minister of the King, endeavours to tempt away Nair, a priestess, who has a secret lover. This proves to be Alim, the King. The threat of Scindia's vengeance is fulfilled in the next act (in the encampment in the desert), in which he mortally wounds Alim in the encounter with the victorious Muesulman troops advancing on Lahore. Alim dies, and is received into the Indian Paradise. His request for renewed earthly existence is granted by Indra, the Indian Deity. This, however, is on condition of his returning to earth in an obscure position, and that his death shall be simultaneous with that of Nair. Accordingly, Alim reappears in the fourth act, and encounters Scindia surrounded by the splendours of the nuptial procession after his marriage with Nair. Alim's wrath and his upbraidings of his successful rival endanger his life, which is saved by the intervention of Timoor, the High Priest, and his associates, who shelter Alim in the temple. Nair also seeks refuge there, intending flight with her lover, but is pursued by Scindia and his followers, who prevent all escape. Nair, in despair, stabs herself, and thus involves the death of Alim. The back of the Temple opens, and discloses them, transfigured, in the Indian Paradise, at the feet of Indra.

The opera is preceded by an orchestral prelude, n which is some characteristic writing—with strong contrasts, and much picturesque instrumentation—several leading themes of the opera itself being anticipated. In the first act, the most noticeable pieces are a graceful chorus of priestesses, an effective duet for Nair and Scindia, and the finale, in which are some dramatic passages for the principals, and some good choral and orchestral writing. Much of the music of the second act is very characteristic in its illustration of the martial situation. Here occurs a pretty duet for Nair and Kaled, a young slave, and a pleasing romanza for the latter. The closing music of the act comprises some good declamatory passages for Nair, Alim, and Scindia, and a well-written duet for the first two, very expressive of the despair of the dying Alim and the grief of Nair.

The third act (the scene of the Indian Paradise) contains some of the best music in the opera; very charming indeed being the celestial march and chorus; while the incidental ballet-music is full of spirit and variety, a movement à la valse having specially pleased. The finale includes some good declamatory phrases in which Alim pleads for renewed life; another such instance being his long soliloquy at the opening of the fourth act, when finding himself before the palace formerly his. The following music, illustrating the rage of the deposed monarch and the usurper, is also very dramatic. An "Arioso," expressive of Scindia's love for Nair, called forth an enthusiastic encore. The incidental cortége music of this act is very striking in its quaintness of character and the brightness of its instrumentation, the finale containing some dramatic effects in its combination of chorus, solo voices, and orchestra.

The specialty of the last act is an important scena for Nair, and an effective duet for her and Alim; the opera closing with some passages expressive of the wrath of the baffled Scindia and some phrases of the previously heard celestial chorus.

The performance was throughout of great excellence. Mdlle. Turolla has scarcely yet appeared to so much advantage. In every important situation for Nair, that lady's vocalisation and acting were alike of a very high order, and were so recognised, her fine delivery of the scena in the last act having produced a special impression. Signor Gayarré as Alim gave his music admirably, particularly the declamatory passages, above all that at the commencement of the fourth act, in which the singer elicited enthusiastic applause. Another specialty in the representation was the performance of M. Lassalle as Scindia, which character derived its utmost importance, vocally and dramatically, from the exceptional powers of the artist. In acting, gesture, and by-play nothing could be finer, while the music served to display the singer's rich baritone voice and highly cultivated style. In strong contrast to his impressive delivery of the declamatory passages was the sentiment with which the "Arioso" in the fourth act was rendered, the enthusiasm excited having been quite as much due to the executant as to the composer. Mdlle. Pasqua deserves favourable mention for her delivery of the "Romanza" in the second act and of the other incidental music for Kaled; Signori Silvestri and Capponi having contributed much to the general effect by their impressive singing respectively as the High Priest and Indra.

The opera has been mounted with that stage splendour which has for many years been specially associated with this establishment. Messrs. Dayes and Caney's scenery (particularly the view of the gardens of the Indian Paradise) is very beautiful, the costumes are superb in their rich variety and contrast, and the processional and ballet groupings are admirably arranged, the skilful dancing of Mdlle. Zucchi and the Mdlles. Reuter having been a feature herein. The energy and ability of Signor Vianesi were notably evidenced by the correctness of the performance ensured by his direction, and by his previous superintendence of the rehearsals. This gentleman, Signor Tagliafico (stage manager), and M. Hansen (director of the ballet arrangements) received a deserved tribute by being called before the curtain, a compliment that was paid to the principal singers on several occasions during the evening. "Il Rè di Lahore" was a decided success, and will doubtless prove attractive. It was announced for a second time on Thursday.

On Monday Rossini's "Semiramide" was given for the first time this season, the performance having included the brilliant vocalisation of Madame Adelina Patti in the florid bravura music of the title character, and the fine singing of Madame Scalchi as Arsace. These were special features in last year's performance of the opera, a novelty on Tuesday having been M. Gailhard's assumption of the part of Assur, in which that gentleman achieved a fresh success. The parts of Idreno and Oroe were filled, respectively, by Signori I. Corsi and Capponi.

A grand operatic concert was given at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, when a varied—but familiar—selection of music was rendered by some of the principal artists of the Royal Italian Opera. Among many effective performances were Madame Patti's fine singing in Gounod's "Ave Maria" (founded on a prelude by Bach), and her brilliant execution of the aria "Bel raggio" from Semiramide. The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh were present.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"Lohengrin" was given here on Thursday week, with Madame Christine Nilsson as Elsa, and other characters, excepting that of Lohengrin, filled as in previous performances. On the occasion now referred to, M. Candidus sang with much success in his first assumption of the part of the hero of the opera, his declamation having been most successful in the later portions of the music. On Saturday Mdlle. Hamakers met with a deservedly favourable reception on her first appearance in England, as Margherita di Valois (in "Les Huguenots), the florid music of which she sang with good execution and artistic style. The cast of the opera was, in other respects, as before. On Monday Madame Gerster appeared as Dinorah, it having been her first performance of that character here. Her brilliant vocalisation produced a great effect throughout the opera, particularly in the Shadow-song, which was enthusiastically encored. The part of Hoel was filled for the first time by M. Roudil, who maintained the good impression created by his previous performances as Rigoletto. He was much applauded in several instances, and encored in the Romance in the last act. The cast was efficiently completed by Signor Frapolli as Corentino, Mdlle. Tremelli as the principal Goatherd, and Mdlle. Lido, and Signori Franceschi and Tecchi in the other characters.

The revival of "Mignon" is announced for Tuesday next.

We have had previous occasion to speak in high terms of the merits of Mr. George Magrath, the American pianist. These were again manifested at his Recital at St. George's Hall on Monday afternoon, when he played, with much effect, a varied selection from the works of Bach, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Liszt, Henselt, and others, his programme having been varied by violin solos executed by M. Franko.

The Gluck Society gave its second concert on Monday evening in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music. The programme was an interesting one, having comprised Purcell's ode, "The Yorkshire Feast Song," and scenes from Lully's opera "Roland," and from Gluck's "Orpheus." The solo vocalists were Mdlle. Philippe, Misses A. Williams, A. Brookes, M. Hughes, and S. Smith, and Messrs. Ferris, Orme, and Marzials. There was a full band and chorus, and the performances were conducted by Mr. Malcolm Lawson.

The closing concert of the thirty-fifth season of Professor Ella's Musical Union took place on Tuesday afternoon.

The eighth and last concert of the sixty-seventh season of the Philharmonic Society took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday, when a new symphony by Professor G. A. Macfarren was produced. Of this we must speak next week.

The last of the four interesting chamber concerts given by Messrs. Ludwig and Daubert, in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, took place on Thursday afternoon; when, also, M. Saint-Saëns gave a pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall.

The second of a series of recitals given by Signor Papini, the eminent violinist, was to take place yesterday (Friday).

The miscellaneous concerts of the week have included those of the esteemed pianist Madame Kate Roberts, on Tuesday; Miss Beata Francis, on the same day; MM. Van Biene and Blandford, also M. Niedzielski, on Wednesday; and of Miss Hopekirk (pianist), on Thursday, Messrs. J. Ludwig and H. Daubert's fourth chamber concert being on the same day.

Madame Leona Fabre's concert will be given next Monday at the French Embassy, Albert Gate, by permission of his Excellency the Ambassador.

Triennial musical festivals will be held this autumn at Hereford (Festival of the Three Choirs), at Birmingham, and at Bristol.—The Birmingham festival takes the lead, and will be held in the last week in August. The principal vocalists engaged are Madame Gerster-Gardini, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Trebelli, Madame Patey, Messrs. Lloyd, Cummings, Maas, Vernon Rigby, and Santley, and Herr Henschel.—The Hereford festival takes place in the week commencing Sept. 8, and is under the patronage of the Queen, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Duke of Cambridge. The principal vocal performers will be Madame Albani, Miss E. Thursby, and Miss Anna Williams, sopranos; Mdlle. De Fonblanque, Madame Patey Whytock, and Madame Enriquez, contraltos; Mr. W. Cummings and Mr. Barton M'Guckin, tenors; and Mr. Santley and Mr. Thurley Beale, bass. The conductor is Mr. Langdon Colborne, Mus. Bac, the organist of Hereford Cathedral.—The Bristol festival will not be held until October.

A report just issued by the Education Department shows the extent to which singing is systematically taught in elementary schools, and the proportions in which various methods are used. In England and Wales 697 schools use Mr. Hullah's system, 534 use the old notation with the movable do, 44 use more than one system, and 2297 schools use Mr. Curwen's Tonic Sol-Fa system. The remaining 19,921 schools, by far the larger proportion, teach by ear. In Scotland, only 10 schools use Mr. Hullah's system, 105 use the old notation with the movable do, 25 use more than one system, and 1338 use Tonic Sol-Fa. The remaining 1404, a less proportion than in England, teach by ear.

THEATRES.

GAIETY.

The Comédie Française continues to attract and interest fashionable audiences. "Hernani" was given last Saturday afternoon, with Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt in her favourite rôle of Doña Sol. The only novelty of the evening's entertainment consisted of "Le Dépit Amoureux" of Molière, reduced from five acts into two. After the bright comedy came "Le Sphinx." "Ruy Blas," by M. Victor Hugo, with Sarah Bernhardt as the Queen and Mounet-Sully as the hero, produced on Monday, is now in the ascendant. It was also performed on Wednesday evening, and is announced for Saturday next, when, by special desire, it will be represented at the last matinée of the season. The week's programme is full of interest, including "Ruy Blas," "Mercadet," Regnard's "Joueur," "Les Fourberies de Scapin," and "Les Femmes Savantes." This afternoon the "Phèdre" of Racine will be given, in which Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt will again be the great attraction. Mdlle. Bernhardt, having resigned her place among the Sociétaires of the Comédie Française, will, after her return to France, her engagements here having been fulfilled, proceed to carry out her intention of going to America next November.

OLYMPIC.

A new play was produced last Saturday afternoon, entitled "Sweet Bells Jangled." The piece is in three acts, by an author not named, but who was represented by his agent, Mr. Hastings. After the performance that gentleman addressed the house, in favour of the writer as an "unacted dramatist." It will be recollected that it was Mr. Hastings who first introduced Mr. Albery and his "Two Roses" to a London audience, and his success then has emboldened him to repeat the experiment. Confidence may, indeed, be reposed in his judgment; that it is a sound one, his second success in this novel direction goes far to demonstrate. "Sweet Bells Jangled" interested the audience, and the curtain fell to decided applause. Nevertheless, the author's name was suppressed, as he desired to test his talent by a more ambitious attempt before he made it public. We understand that he has written several pieces, and is no longer young, several years of disappointment having already elapsed since the composition of his earliest drama. His case is one of too many, and Mr. Hastings deserves praise for having given him a long-coveted opportunity. The drama has considerable merit. The plot turns upon the accident of mistaken identity. Two brothers are so much alike that the wife of one of them mistakes him for the other, and supposes that she has married a man already wedded and having a child. The interview between the parties illustrates the painful error into which they have fallen. The lady's sanity suffers for awhile, but a friendly doctor initiates a psychological experiment, which is tried in the third act, and which brings healing to the wounded mind of the heroine. Miss Emmerson impersonated the part, and acted with much pathos and judgment. The remaining characters were judiciously interpreted It is to be hoped that Mr. Hastings will be able to find a permanent home for the piece on the boards. Miss Fanny Josephs deserves much commendation for having permitted its initial performance.

ROYALTY.

The new extravaganza, "Venus," can hardly be deemed worthy, from a literary point of view, to follow Mr. Sims's still-popular comedy of "Crutch and Toothpick." Mr. Edward Rose and Mr. A. Harris are named as the authors of "Venus," and Mr. Rose is so graceful a writer that probably he should be credited with work the goodness of which may have been drowned in the noise and obtrusive horse-play of the first night's representation. The extravaganza, however, was possibly merely intended to serve as a vehicle for the exhibition of the majority of the mythological deities, from Venus (Miss Nelly Bromley) to Adonis and Mars, who find comely representatives in Miss Alma Stanley and Miss Phœbe Don. Subdued to a tone more in keeping with the smallness of the house, "Venus" may now run smoothly, and the vivacity of Miss Kate Lawler as a dashing Cupid would certainly be appreciated none the less for a little moderation. But "Venus" will not be a second "Ixion."

FOLLY.

This little theatre is now under the direction of Madame Dolaro, who has signalised her management by the production on Monday of a new farcical comedy, entitled "Lord Mayor's Day," the plot of which is founded on a French comedy, entitled "La Cagnotte," written by MM. Eugène Labiche and Delacon. Everything in the composition is sacrificed to rapidity of action, which is exceedingly pantomimic. More is done than said, and all parties are placed in the funniest situations. A country family and its friends resolve on seeing London on Lord Mayor's Day, and, owing to their ignorance, incur numberless perils. They order a lunch of real turtle and other expensive dainties, incurring a debt of seven pounds, which they object to pay. They find themselves at the police-station, and are treated as a gang of thieves, a watch having tumbled out of the umbrella of one of them. Not knowing how to defend themselves, their persons are officially examined and all their money confiscated. Driven to desperation, they endeavour to break out of the place of custody, and are conveyed to the police court; but, owing to the crowds attending the city procession, they are enabled to escape from the cab, only to incur new dangers. They manage, however, to keep an appointment with a matrimonial advertising agent, and we are introduced to an amusing example of the astute manner in which this speculatist conducts his business. An old lady candidate, for instance, is referred to his maid-servant. She proceeds up stairs, and then returns attired in a costume which conduces to her juvenile appearance. When confronted with the intended bridegroom, she discovers that he is a gentleman of her own party, with whom she has had daily acquaintance for twenty years. Ultimately it turns out that the mysterious watch has been dropped into the old gentleman's umbrella by a thief in the crowd at the show, who confesses to the fact before the magistrate; and, thus rehabilitated in character, the party return to their country quarters without further harm. The Tom and Jerry style of acting required by the spirit and structure of the drama was well carried out by Mr. G. W. Anson, Mr. Harry Nicholls, Mr. F. Leslie, Mr. Denbigh Newton, Mr. Arthur H. Forrest, and Mrs. John Carter, who are one and all to be praised for the alacrity and decision of their movements. Altogether, they made a lively impression, and secured the approbation and laughter of the audience.

LYCEUM.

The series of Irving-plays at the Lyceum as advertised was completed on Monday with the performance of "Charles I." Arrangements have been made for July, consisting of "The Bells" and "The Lyons Mail," in addition to "Charles I.," "Hamlet," "Lady of Lyons," and "Richelieu." Mr. Irving's annual benefit on the 25th and 26th will terminate the present season.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

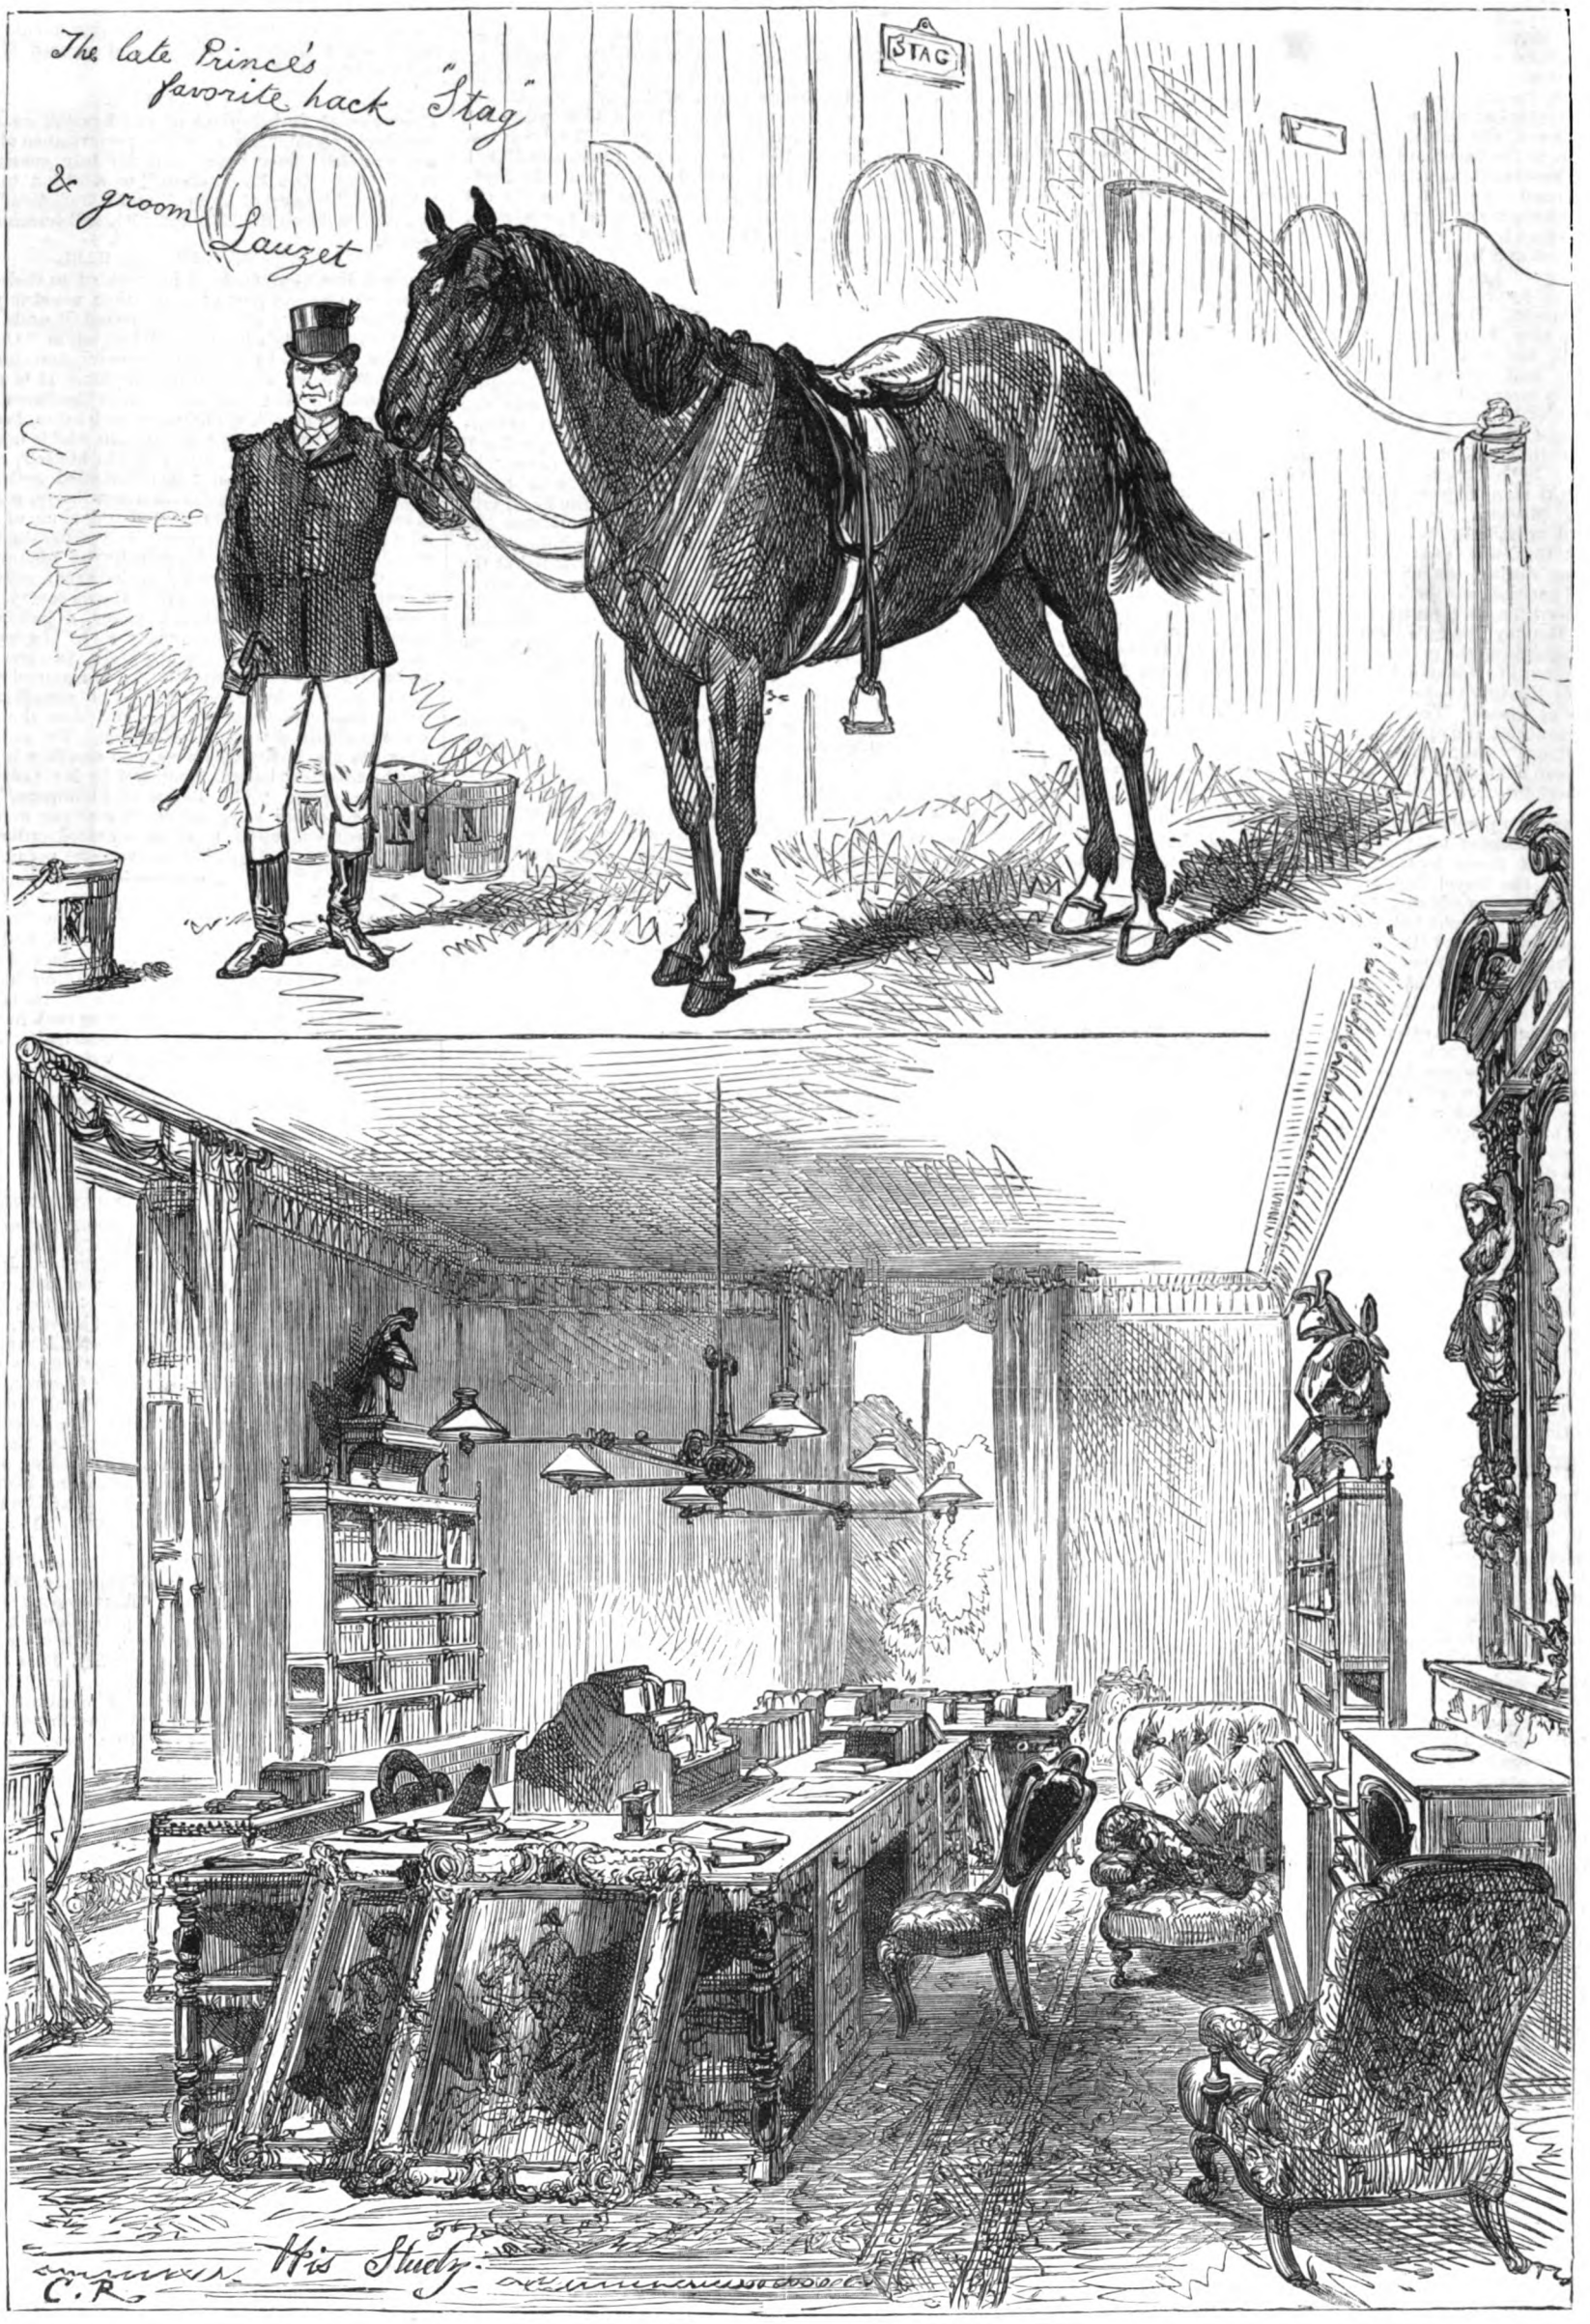
Mr. and Mrs. German Reed have added to their general entertainment a second part of more than usual importance. The entertaining farce of "One Hundred Pounds Reward," and Mr. Corney Grain's instrumental sketch of "Our Calico Ball," are now followed by a completely new entertainment, deserving special notice as a substantive drama. It is entitled "Back from India." The tale is as old as the Saxon heptarchy. A lover and his friend, confiding in each other, become interested in the same young lady; but the one who is intrusted to report of her charms falls in love with her himself, and makes such report of her as induces her intended suitor to leave the country. The faithless friend, accordingly, marries the lady. However, Captain Rapier (such is the name of the gentleman who has been deceived) returns, and concealment is no longer possible. Mr. Oswald Grassleaf, the offending party (Mr. Alfred Reed), tries in vain, by ludicrous misrepresentations, to anticipate the consequences of the discovery. Mrs. Grassleaf (Miss Edith Brandon) has, however, a judicious sister, who manages matters so charmingly as to engage the Captain's attentions. He consequently falls in love with the fair mediatrix, and thus forestalls the threatened chastisement of her delinquent brother-in-law. The situations are managed in the most whimsical manner, and thus the utmost amusement is obtained from the situation. The author of the little drama is Mr. Henry Stephens, and its effect is much enhanced by the excellent ballads composed by Mr. Cotsford Dick. One of these, called "The Rajah of Piclilipore," is remarkably effective, besides being illustrative of the actual story. The whole entertainment is of an elevated order, in an artistic point of view, and will obtain extensive popularity.

Mr. A. P. Burbank, an American elocutionist, gave an entertainment at the St James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. His programme consists both of the tragic and the comic; but he is stronger in the latter, and has indeed a special vein of humour, which was particularly perceptible in his rendering of some scenes from "Rip Van Winkle." He is also effective as a whistler, and displayed his talent as such in "The Last Rose of Summer." His selections are principally from Bret Harte, Mark Twain, and other American writers.

Miss Carrie Lawrence presented a fashionable audience at Langham Hall, on Monday, with an eccentric series of dramatic recitals, which were favourably received.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE-MEETING.



The programme of the forthcoming prize-meeting of the National Rifle Association has been issued. The camp will be ready for occupation next Saturday, July 12, and the shooting will begin on Monday, the 14th, at nine o'clock. The first great event will be the declaration of the winner of the Silver Medal and Badge, on Thursday, the 17th. The winner of this much-coveted distinction is the champion large-bore shot of the meeting. The St. George's contest, which is now second only in interest to the Queen's, will be shot for on Friday, the 18th. The Lords and Commons match is fixed for the afternoon of Saturday, the 19th—ten shots at 200 and 500 yards. On the same day the National Challenge Trophy and the China Cup will be shot for; and the shooting for the Prince of Wales's Prize (£100 and badge) will be concluded. On Sunday, the 20th, there will be the usual church parade and Divine service at eleven. The second stage of the Queen's Prize and the Public Schools Veterans' Trophy will be shot for on Tuesday, the 22nd, and the other principal events are fixed as follows:—Wednesday, the 23rd, Donegall Cup, Oxford and Cambridge, Albert (second stage); Thursday, the 24th, Elcho Shield, Kolopore Cup, Ashburton Shield (Public Schools), Spencer Cup, Volunteer Cadets' Match; Friday, the 25th, Dudley (any rifle), Bass (military breech-loader), and the Loyd-Lindsay. The prizes will be distributed on Saturday, the 26th. The executive committee will be the Earl of Wharncliffe, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Wilmot, V.C., M.P., Earl Stanhope, Lieutenant-Colonel Malcolm, and Lieutenant-Colonel J. S. Oxley; and the rest of the staff is the same as last year. The prize list is largely increased, and there is every prospect of the number of entries being larger than ever. The difficulty with the refreshment contractors has been got over, and the preparations at Wimbledon are in a forward state, everything foreboding a successful meeting. An important addition has been made to the programme at the last moment. On the last Saturday there will be a contest among troopers from each regiment of Household Cavalry and Cavalry of the Line for the "Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy," the conditions being similar to those of the Loyd-Lindsay contest.

Lieutenant-General Stephenson, C.B., commanding the Home District, made his annual official inspection of the 37th Middlesex last Saturday in the grounds of the Foundling Hospital. The regiment paraded to the number of 824 of all ranks, Lieutenant-Colonel Stedell being in command.—Colonel Burnaby, Grenadier Guards, inspected, on the Horse Guards Parade, the 2nd London Rifles, which had 740 of all ranks, besides nearly 100 recruits. Lieutenant-Colonel Vickers was in command.—The annual inspection of the Tower Hamlets Brigade took place in Regent's Park on Saturday last, when 670 men were on parade, under the command of Colonel Mapleson. Several field evolutions were performed, and after a lengthened series of manœuvres the men were formed into a square, and Colonel Gipps (the inspecting officer) expressed his satisfaction at the manner in which the work had been done.

The oration in honour of Dr. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was given on Thursday week, at the Royal College of Physicians, by Dr. Wilks, F.R.S., one of the censors of the college and physician to Guy's Hospital. The president presented the Baily Medal to Mr. Charles Darwin, accompanying it with a warm eulogy of his writings.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

According to the Paris Gaulois, the will of the gallant and ill-fated Prince Louis Napoleon was opened in London "in the presence of thirty witnesses, in conformity with the provisions of the English law." As a matter of fact, the Prince's testament was opened on June 27 at Camden Place, Chiselhurst, in the presence of a number of members of the Imperial family and personal friends of the deceased. These gentlemen subsequently signed the procès verbal, or formal statement of the proceedings, not in conformity with English law but with French custom.

The document is in itself a remarkably touching one; but on its pathetic side I refrain from dwelling. It has another aspect well worthy of consideration; showing, as it does, how intently the youthful Prince had studied the Napoleonic legend, and the minutest traditions of the house of Bonaparte. In reading the preamble to the will made at Chiselhurst on the 25th of last February, and in which the Prince declares that he dies in the Catholic and Apostolic Roman Religion in which he was born, and that he desires to be buried by the side of his father pending the time when the ashes of both "shall be transferred to where the founder of our house reposes in the midst of the French people, whom we have, like him, dearly loved," the mind of the student of history recalls another will—that made at St. Helena, in April, 1821, by Napoleon I. Thus does the testament executed at Longwood by the "Conqueror and Captive of the Earth" begin—

> I die in the Apostolic Roman Religion, in the bosom of which I was born more than fifty years ago. It is my wish that my ashes shall repose on the banks of the Seine, in the midst of the French people, whom I have loved so well.

There are two passages in the will of Chiselhurst and the will of Longwood which may be contrasted and read with curious interest. The First Napoleon writes—

> I die prematurely, assassinated by the English oligarchy and its . . . . The English nation will not be slow in avenging me.

The Fourth Napoleon writes—

> I shall die with a sentiment of profound gratitude towards her Majesty the Queen of England, towards all the Royal Family, and towards the country where I have received during eight years so cordial a hospitality.

It will not fail to be observed that the Prince in the signature to his will for once claims the Imperial dignity. He signs no longer "Louis Napoleon," but "Napoleon."

I committed a terrible crime last week—nothing less than homicide. But it was inadvertent; and the gentleman whom I killed in the "Echoes" is quite alive in the flesh, and writes very kindly to me to say that he does not mind my having killed him a bit. Alluding, in a paragraph respecting the Comédie Française, to a capital book on the Theatres of Paris, published in 1846, I spoke of the work in question as "by the late Mr. Charles Hervey." Mr. Charles Hervey, I rejoice to say, is vivant et très vivant, and takes as lively an interest in theatrical matters as ever he did. I fancy that when I stupidly killed him there must have been running in my mind the names of two other gentlemen with somewhat similar appellations. One was formerly the Editor of the Athenæum; the other was Mr. A. Hervieu, the artist.

Practical aeronauts and students of the science of aerostation please to look at Mr. John Tenniel's exquisitely drawn frontispiece to the seventy-sixth volume of Punch, published this week; and tell me whether there is not a trifling error in the arrangement of the balloon, on the rim of the car of which the triumphant figure of Mr. Punch is perched. The neck of the balloon, which is sailing in mid-air, is either tied in a knot or has some kind of ligature tied round it. Now, if my slight experience of ballooning does not mislead me, it strikes me that the neck of a balloon should be only closed while the machine is on the earth, prior to ascent; the object of the closure being to prevent the admixture of the atmospheric air with the gas in the balloon. In the days when I went ballooning, the ligature was generally a pocket-handkerchief in a slip knot; and so soon as the machine had well cleared the crowd the neck was freed. I am sure of this, because the aeronaut would sometimes allow his passengers to peep through the neck into the body of the balloon. On a fine day, the rays of the sun shining through the silk into the gigantic spheroid produced an astonishingly superb effect.

Experto credo. I may have told you ere this that some eight-and-twenty years ago I made a balloon ascent from poor Alexis Soyer's "Symposium," at Kensington, on the site of which now stands the Albert Hall. The aeronant, in his hurry to liberate some toy paper balloons, which were to sail about to amuse the spectators, omitted to liberate the slipknotted handkerchief by which, while we were on earth, the neck of the balloon had been secured. The consequence was that, the gas becoming more and more rarefied as we ascended, the valve line not being pulled, and there being no means of gas-escapement either above or below, the balloon, when we were about a mile high, burst. We fell, a distance which I cannot calculate, just as a stone falls; but the presence of mind of the aeronaut, in instantly cutting the cord which attaches the neck of the balloon to the hoop, thus allowing the mass of silk to "belly up" at the top of the netting, and the fact of there being yet some gas left in the balloon, enabled him almost instantaneously to convert the machine into what was virtually a parachute, in which we descended among the cabbages at Putney, taking no greater harm than an indefinite number of bruises, and some not very courteous nor honest treatment on the part of a gang of market gardening roughs, who cut us, floundering and kicking, out of the network, which had fallen atop of us. A narrow escape; and it naturally recurred to me when I saw Mr. Tenniel's frontispiece.

What is the matter with the Old Masters? Have the "Young Missises" of Mr. James Tissot knocked the ancient professors of art entirely "out of time"? At Christie's last Saturday a portrait of Philip IV. of Spain, by Velasquez, fetched only a hundred guineas; a Giovanni Bellini, from Lord Shrewsbury's collection, sold for £79 16s.; a landscape and figures by Teniers (which Teniers?) was knocked down for £32 11s.; a Carlo Veronese (?) realised £16 16s.; and (hear this!) Titian's "Tarquin and Lucretia," a large gallery picture, formerly in the collection of Charles I., afterwards purchased for the King of Spain, and subsequently carried away from that country and imported to London, was adjudicated for the comparatively insignificant sum of £273. The art-critic of this Journal will probably have something to say about the portrait of Rembrandt by the artist himself, which has been successively the property of Lord Portarlington and Lord Dorchester, by the former of whom the picture was contributed to the Exhibition of Old Masters at Burlington House. The Rembrandt went on Saturday for £1439 10s., a sum, according to the Times, considerably below the reserve price. What can have come to the Old Masters, from a commercial point of view?

Having for some weeks petted, fondled, caressed, flattered, and idolised Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt, a certain section of "Society," grown tired perhaps of their toy, have begun to vilify, to disparage, to calumniate, and to sneer at the poor little lady. She has more genius in her little finger than the whole of her professional sisters put together have; but she has lacked some prudent friend to tell her that genius is "a general capacity directed into a particular channel." An admirer as judicious might also have warned her that Art is a very jealous mistress; and that genius is best utilised when it is directed into the "particular channel," and in that groove retained. Sir Christopher Wren was a universal genius. Read the "Parentalia," and you will be astounded at the list of the things done in almost every department of art and science (the vivisection of a dog among the rest), by Dr. Wren, F.A.S. But Sir Christopher was, happily for mankind, led to direct his general capacity into the "particular channel" of architecture. Mdlle. Bernhardt is most assuredly a great actress. May not the "particular channel" which should suffice her be the art which Rachel and Siddons, which Mars and Raucourt, and O'Neill, which Ellen Tree and Helen Faucit have ennobled? As for the insults which have been lately lavished on Mdlle. Bernhardt in print, her anonymous assailants seem to have wholly forgotten two trifling circumstances: first, that she is a foreigner and a stranger among us; and, next, that she is a woman.

NIAGARA IN SUMMER.

There is scarcely any spring-time in Canada. Directly she is quite sure that surly Winter has called away his ruffian blasts to his arctic home, the fair young Spring trips it right merrily, but showers her sweets around her with such liberal hand that she awakens Summer from her luxurious couch sooner than is agreeable to our sleepy English dame; at any rate to such good purpose that she does not retire to her bed-chamber until September—which, alas! is more than can be said of her sweet grace of England.

June is a brilliant month in Canada: deliciously balmy, and emphatically the "leafy month." The backwoods are then beautiful as anything the earth can show. Yet even in June—always in May—vestiges of winter are still discernible. The ice is a long time breaking up in the great chain of lakes in the west, but below Niagara there is little trace of the Frost-King's reign after May; for the rotten masses of ice that come floating down the lakes into the Niagara river are dashed into a thousand pieces when they are hurled over the famous precipice.

It is not until July and August that the Falls are to be seen in all their glory. Then the abundant vegetation—on the islets in the river, and on the river banks—is in the prime of its growth, and the blending of colours most fully appreciated. Now that the Atlantic passage can almost be made in a week, Niagara is visited every summer by increasingly large numbers of "Britishers." It is a pity that the Falls are almost invariably approached by the route least calculated to impress one with their sublimity. The Niagara is a broad deep stream, about thirty-five miles long, connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario. The Falls, which are midway, are usually approached from the Ontario side; this, as I shall try to explain, is a mistake. The first visit should unquestionably be made from the Erie side, that is from above the cataract. To my mind the very best starting-place in the summer is Chippewa, a pretty little village two miles and a half above the Falls. The fast-flowing stream and the dull roar ahead are excellent stimulants for a walk along the river-bank: added to which the scenery, on the Canadian side, is highly picturesque. Every step you take the mad stream becomes madder still, and you have scarcely walked a mile ere, unable any longer to control itself, it bursts into what we call the Rapids: foaming and splashing, and roaring and leaping into the air, it dashes on; suddenly it becomes more sedate, and the next moment the mottled green and white—now smooth almost as glass—glides over the shelving brink into the deep gorge below. You have now reached Table Rock—or all that remains of it—and gaze before you at the great horse-shoe curve of rushing water, and down into the seething cauldron, whence issues a cloud of foam and spray; and there to the left, yet almost in front of you, on the other side of Goat Island, you can just discern through the gauzy cloud of spray another mighty cataract—the American Falls. If the wind be blowing towards you, you will walk fifty yards or so farther on, so as to escape the spray, when the full view of the double cataract will burst upon you.

But Clifton, a mile and a half below the Falls, is a railway terminus, and has consequently become the invariable starting-place for a visit to Niagara. The walk being along a road that runs parallel with the river on the high ground above its precipitous bank, the first view you get of the Falls is nearly a mile and a half distant. Of course you keep looking ahead at the famous waterfalls; but you are disappointed: their width, your own altitude, and the distance, combine to dwarf them immensely. The river attracts you more than the cataract. The banks being high and rich in vegetation, the reflection cast upon the broad, deep stream paints it a bright green, which contrasts well with the darker tints on the banks and the clear blue sky. The river looks very beautiful on a warm summer-day, as it glides peacefully down the deep channel it has cut out for itself; too peacefully for one who has never seen Niagara before, for he expects to see nothing but foaming passion. The great plunge the river makes on either side of Goat Island is to all appearances its only sign of fury. All the way from that mighty plunge, for two miles down, the river shows not the slightest symptom of rage, and so wonderfully calm and peaceful is its bosom that it scarcely seems to flow at all. To the stranger it is utterly incongruous, in the face of that terrific roar in front of him.

But he who has seen the mad stream at Chippewa and the Rapids, knows that underneath all that apparent calm the waters must be raging furiously, and is not very much surprised to see them two miles down stream rise to the surface with scarcely diminished rage, and run headlong down the ravine, until their angry haste is checked by the rock-bound watercourse turning off abruptly at a right-angle, forming the celebrated Niagara whirlpool.

After the first visit, Clifton is perhaps the best place to put-up at, though there are three excellent hotels in the immediate vicinity of the Falls. But do not be persuaded into going over to the American side for your hotel, unless you have plenty of time and a heavy purse: the views, too, are not anything like so grand as on the Canadian side. During your visit you will want to get over there to explore Goat Island and the tiny isles adjacent, which are connected by dainty little bridges; but for nothing more.

The different aspects of the Falls—from above, below, and underneath—and the river scenes are wellnigh inexhaustible. But of all the changing aspects none are more exquisite than a view of the Falls by moonlight, from the Canadian side. When the night luminary has risen from behind the dark, dense cluster of trees on Goat Island, the soft light she casts upon the surging waters beyond, but especially upon the slanting edge of the waterfall, is beautiful in the extreme. A solemn gloom is thrown over the gulf below by the shadow of the cataract itself; but, further on, the tender white light falls with strange pathos upon the metamorphosed river, as it glides peacefully through its high dark banks to our left.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

The lamentable misadventure which brought about the mournful death of Prince Louis Napoleon in Zululand has been touched on again and again. On Monday the Earl of Beaconsfield communicated to the House of Lords the steps which would be taken to do honour to the Prince's remains on their arrival in England. Albeit the Government will not formally propose that there should be a public funeral, they will arrange that when H.M.S. Orontes arrives at Sheerness the body is to be transferred to another of her Majesty's ships for conveyance to Woolwich, whence members of the Royal Artillery will accompany the remains to Chiselhurst, "and in due course to the grave." With singular brevity had the Prime Minister, earlier in the sitting, replied to the inquiry most feelingly put by Earl Granville as to what tribute would be paid to the memory of the late Lord Lawrence. Lord Beaconsfield contented himself with answering that "the great services of Lord Lawrence" would be "honoured and remembered," and that his body would be interred in Westminster Abbey. Returning to the loss of the Prince Imperial Lord Truro on Tuesday lifted his voice to animadvert on the general recklessness with which the Zulu campaign had been conducted, citing as the latest instance of this recklessness the indiscretion shown in allowing the Prince to depart on the scouting expedition with so small an escort. Lord Bury could find no more satisfactory way of replying than that of casting doubt on the "statements of irresponsible journalists."

The Lord Chancellor's definition on Monday of the aim of the Government's Irish University Bill (which is to take the wind out of the sails of The O'Conor Don's measure) was marked by his usual clearness of exposition. The greater part of the speech was occupied by a commentary on the existing Universities of England and Ireland; and the object of the bill was summed up in a few words. Simplicity itself is the measure. The Government could not countenance the endowment of denominational colleges in Ireland. But it is proposed by this bill to found a new University for Ireland, comprising a Chancellor and a Senate, with a Convocation composed of graduates who obtain their degrees at this University. A body of examiners would be appointed and degrees granted in all faculties save theology; but, following the example of the London University, there would be no lecturers or professors. The University of Ireland once constituted, the Queen's University would be dissolved, the graduates of the latter then becoming graduates of the new University. The bill was read the first time, criticism being postponed to the next stage. It may here be mentioned that the same evening the Duke of Richmond informed Lord Winmarleigh that the Government had advised her Majesty to grant a charter for a new University for the north of England, to be named the Victoria University; and that on Tuesday, in the Lower House, Mr. H. Vivian and other eloquent Welsh members, strengthened by Mr. Gladstone's support, vainly endeavoured to persuade the Government to agree to a motion declaring it expedient to consider the best means of encouraging the movement for supplying Wales with higher education. Mr. Vivian's motion, slightly amended, went to a division, and was negatived by 105 to 54 votes.

The Earl of Carnarvon was, on the 26th ult., so far successful in objecting to the bill for widening London Bridge that is was referred to a Select Committee. The same noble Earl, the next evening, hopped from London Bridge to Armenia, in order to inquire whether her Majesty's Government had carried out the foreshadowed reforms in that portion of the Sultan's dominions. To which the Marquis of Salisbury could only reply that he was doing all that diplomacy could do to bring about "those salutary changes by which alone the Turkish Empire can be maintained." On Tuesday, despite the opposition of Lord Granville, Earl Stanhope secured the second reading (by 115 votes against 65) of the Public Health Act Amendment Bill, which proposes to settle the Burial difficulty by enabling local authorities to establish cemeteries, and to control them.

The "scene" in the House of Commons on Thursday week (fully described in the latest edition of our last Number) appears not to have been thrown away on the Secretary for Ireland, the replies of Mr. Lowther to Irish members on the following evening having lacked the dry "chaff" which moved Mr. O'Connor Power to wrath, and the right hon. gentleman's subsequent speeches on the condition of children in Irish workhouses, and on the "Spencer System" of improving small farms, having been unexceptionable in tone.

On Monday the Army Discipline Bill dragged its slow length along a little further, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to threaten a Saturday sitting if quicker progress should not be made with the remaining clauses. Previously to the discussion of the Welsh University motion, on Tuesday, there was an important debate on the East India Railway Bill, the object of which is to transfer the property (for about thirty-two millions) from the East India Railway Company to the Indian Government. Mr. Hubbard moved that the measure, as amended, should be considered; but ultimately the debate was adjourned, and this motion of Mr. Fawcett's was accepted by the Government and agreed to by the House:—

> That this House, adopting the recommendation contained in the special report of the Committee to which this bill was referred, is of opinion that its provisions should not be regarded as a precedent for defining the terms on which the Indian Government may hereafter exercise its right of acquiring possession of the other guaranteed railways in India.

On Wednesday the East India Railway Bill again incited Sir George Campbell, Mr. Fawcett, and Mr. E. Stanhope to silvern speech. The measure, as amended, was agreed to. Mr. O'Sullivan then obtained the second reading of the Spirits in Bond Bill, remarking that the aim of the measure was to compel distillers to keep spirits in bond for a year, by which time the deleterious fusel oil would evaporate. Sir Wilfrid Lawson elicited a laugh by suggesting as an improvement that spirits should be kept in bond for one hundred years. The hour for adjournment came whilst the Irish Landlord and Tenant Bill was being discussed, and it was, accordingly, "talked out."

Spiritual Lords attended the Upper Chamber in strong force on Thursday, in the expectation (which was not realised) of having to take part in a debate on the Earl of Belmore's Divinity School Bill for the Church of Ireland. The Speaker of the House of Commons had previously been called to the bar to hear Royal Assent given by Commission to various bills. On his return to the chair, the general flow of Ministerial answers was placid, as when the Chancellor of the Exchequer repeated that the Zulu War cost half a million a month, and that the War bill would be presented in July; and Mr. Cross sought to calm Mr. Macdonald by assuring him that the most searching inquiry should be made into the cause of the Blantyre accident. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach exhibited some signs of querulousness, which vanished under the firm treatment of Sir William Harcourt. A Saturday sitting was announced by Sir Stafford Northcote, albeit more than one member pointed out that Saturday was the day fixed upon for the funeral of Lord Lawrence. The stage being once more clear, the interminable Army Bill again came up for discussion in Committee.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Despite the continued bad weather, seldom has a busier four days' sport called for comment, either in the North or in the South, than that just concluded. The heavy going doubtless militated against correct running in some instances, and also made matters underfoot most unpleasant, but, taken altogether, the Newcastle week was as important and interesting as of yore. Clearhead's victory in the Northumberland Plate was a very popular one, and could hardly cause much surprise, when the good form he had shown at Catterick Bridge was taken into consideration, although the horse was not a local fancy; but had either Glendale or Roehampton won, it would have caused as much enthusiasm as in the days of old, when Caller Ou and Underhand were victorious. Glendale has twice disappointed Lord Durham in his attempt to gain the trophy, and on each occasion after a very severe struggle. What the result would have been had he not interfered with Roehampton will never be known, but certainly neither could not have benefited by the occurrence, and ultimately he was only defeated by the shortest of heads. He may be justly, therefore, put down as an unlucky horse over this course, for it was a hard thing to have to meet such a nailer as Hampton at 12 lb., and he was set no mean task when called upon to concede 17 lb. to a horse of Clearhead's calibre, in addition to the unfortunate mishap with Roehampton. Lartington certainly did not run within pounds of his Manchester form; probably he is not a great stayer; and, in addition, the heavy going might have militated against his chance. Glendale occupied the same position, at about the same distance, that he did to Hampton two years ago; but it must not be overlooked that he has a fine opportunity in the Liverpool Cup and may compensate Lord Durham for previous disappointments, as 7 st. 12 lb. is not a great amount of weight for a six-year-old to carry. A very good-looking three-year-old who ran at the meeting is Reveller (a brother to Hilarious), although he undoubtedly had the best of the weights with both Coromandel II. and Fabius, while on his Ascot running he must be quite 14lb. behind Chippendale. On Thursday the racing was again of a good character, the chief event being, of course, the Seaton Delaval Stakes, for which a dozen competed, Fire-King being in most request; but the "home bred" Tyro filly upset the lot, and won in a common canter by half-a-dozen lengths. She made her début in this race, and must undoubtedly be a very smart filly, although she started at very long odds, and her stable companion, Arne, was deemed to be the better of the pair. There was some good racing at Stockbridge on Thursday and Friday, although the incessant rain during the early portion of the meeting interfered with the enjoyment. Warrior had a good time of it, and there is no doubt that over his own course he is a good horse, whilst the unlucky Lunette was twice second to Lord Rivers's horse and once to Dunmow. The Stockbridge Cup, which in its time has brought out the fastest horses of the day, well sustained its old memories, as the meeting of such celebrities as Avontes, Placida, Kaleidoscope, Silvio, and Lollypop fully attest. Although Silvio ran well, the distance was hardly suitable for him to show his best abilities, so no wonder need be expressed at his defeat, especially as he was giving away 12 lb. to such cracks of the T.Y.C. as Avontes and Placida, and 10 lb. to Kaleidoscope. Lollypop cut out the work, but was in trouble at the distance, and Avontes, with Fordham up, coming through, won by a neck from Placida. Proctor, the winner of the Mottisfont Stakes, is a smart youngster, and is not far removed from the top of the tree; but the remainder of the running requires no comment.

The opening day of Henley was very wet, rain falling from early morn till the close of the day's proceedings, and on the towing-path were some six inches of mud, and only one or two spectators could be found at any time between the horse barrier and the starting-point. A strong wind blowing at first across and afterwards down the course increased the labour of the competitors, and, especially with those who had the outside station, gave stroke side more than their fair share of work, and the Berks station was more than ever an advantage. The feature of the day was the fine form of Jesus, who won their heats in the Grand Challenge, Stewards', and Ladies'. The crew, stroked by Prest, and composed almost entirely from the 'Varsity eight of this year, is a very good one. The two most exciting finishes of the day were between Thames, London, and Trinity for the second heat of the Thames Cup, and between London and Kingston in the first heat of the Wyfold. Playford, the Amateur Champion, won his heat in the Diamonds with ridiculous ease. The second day showed a great improvement both with respect to weather and attendance, being fully up to the average of former years, if not better. Jesus took the Grand Challenge very easily, and the Stewards' Cup also, but after a hard struggle with Lady Margaret. As the winners of the Grand Challenge did not go for the Ladies', Eton were left to meet Lady Margaret. The "boys," a very fine and fast crew, who rowed 38 to 40 strokes a minute nearly all the way, lost, after a most plucky race, by half a length. London was successful in the Goblets and the Wyfold Cup, but were defeated for the Thames Cup by Twickenham; while F. L. Playford was beaten somewhat easily by Lowndes in the Diamond Sculls, which was probably owing to a dispute that arose respecting the station. Mr. J. G. Chambers and Mr. Risley shared the duties of umpire between them.

Last Saturday the summer meeting of the London Athletic Club took place, and, being favoured with delightful weather, a capital afternoon's sport was enjoyed by members and their friends, numbering some 3000. C. L. Lockton, as usual, was well to the fore; and Cortis, again riding in splendid form, won the Three-Miles Bicycle Handicap from scratch.

The Oxford and Cambridge cricket-match, begun at Lord's on Monday in fine weather and in presence of a fashionable gathering numbering several thousands, could not be continued on Tuesday in consequence of the rain, and ended on Wednesday in the Light Blue team winning by nine wickets, thanks to the batting of the Hon. A. Lyttelton, Mr. A. G. and Mr D. Q. Steel in no small degree. By nine wickets also did Yorkshire beat Notts at Sheffield on Wednesday.

Lord Mount-Edgcumbe has resigned the chairmanship of the Cornwall County Sessions, his duties as Lord Chamberlain preventing him from attending the sessional meetings.

The Duke of Devonshire has consented to preside at the opening of the "Stephenson Memorial Hall," Chesterfield, on Monday, the 14th inst.

According to the revenue returns the national income during the quarter ending June 30 was £18,922,050, a net increase of £104,355 upon the amount in the corresponding period of last year. The revenue for the twelve months has been £83,220,327, a net increase of £3,506,201. There is a considerable decrease in Customs and Excise; but that is more than counterbalanced by the increased receipts from the Property and Income Tax. The Miscellaneous receipts show a considerable falling off, but there is a large increase in the item of stamps.

NEW BOOKS.

HISTORICAL.

Excellent reasons are given for re-telling what appears upon the face of it to be an old and trite story in the two volumes entitled The Youth of Queen Elizabeth: by Louis Wiesener, edited from the French by Charlotte M. Yonge (Hurst and Blackett), the period of time embraced in the work including some twenty-five years—from 1533, when Elizabeth was born, to 1558, when she became Queen of England. The contents of our Record Office and the archives of the French Ministry for Foreign Affairs are the principal sources from which the author has drawn such new information as justified him, especially when we consider that his work was intended in the first instance for French readers, in reopening questions which, with the assistance of Mr. J. A. Froude, the ingenuous mind might have been inclined to regard as settled. But it is partly to counteract the influence of Mr. J. A. Froude, whom our author describes as "a brilliant writer, but perhaps the least reliable of all living historians," that a new treatise was, from the practical point of view, considered desirable. From the speculative point of view, the author lays "great stress upon the psychological history" of the Princess Elizabeth's youth, "as being one of those curious and instructive pictures that are rarely open to analysis." And, in connection with this portion of his labours, it is quite droll to observe that careful study has led him to shrink from conceding to the Royal lady whom he has analysed the possession of just that quality which has made her known all over the world as "good Queen Bess." Admirable qualities she had, he freely acknowledges; but goodness, the quality "which puts a finish upon all others, and is so graceful in a woman," she lacked altogether. Yet we live at an epoch when the tendency is towards a general whitewashing; when even Lady Macbeth's "damned spot" might have a chance of being taken "out," and when there seems to be little fear lest Beelzebub should have his blackness exaggerated. Let "Good Queen Bess" be so called from her lack of the suggested quality, and we can understand the more easily how the Eumenides came by that appellation, and how the famous derivation of the Latin word for "grove" recommended itself to general acceptance. Let it be assumed henceforth that popular epithets, which have endured through centuries, should be interpreted, like dreams, in the contrary sense, and are due only to that pleasant vein of irony which distinguishes the populace of all nationalities. Not that our author is here being mocked, as if he failed to exhibit sound arguments for his conclusion. It may be that, if the theory of ironical epithets be abandoned, the Princess Elizabeth changed with the change of her circumstances; or that, which is far more likely, the populace, caught by present appearances which cannot impose upon the closer though posterior student of character, bestow an epithet which sticks like a burr but is equally out of place as an appendage of a human being. However that may be, our author presents us with a very interesting piece of historical and psychological investigation. In the first volume we have a very touching account of Elizabeth's neglected childhood during her father's lifetime, followed by a sketch of her condition during her girlhood under her brother's rule, together with many details concerning the scandal against Princess Elizabeth in respect of her dealings with the handsome and audacious Thomas Seymour, with a chapter devoted to a dissertation upon the studies she pursued and the learning she acquired, the rest of the volume being occupied chiefly with the difficulties of her position after her sister Mary's accession, the intrigues of Simon Renard on behalf of Philip and of Noailles on behalf of Courtenay as candidates for Mary's hand, the insurrection of Thomas Wyatt, the death of Lady Jane Grey, and the arrest of Elizabeth at Ashridge. In the second volume Elizabeth's vicissitudes succeed one another rapidly. First we have her a prisoner at Whitehall, and then at the Tower, where she is treated for a while with severity. Anon, her treatment becomes less harsh, and ultimately she is released. Her destination is Woodstock; and, during her residence or imprisonment there, her sister marries Philip of Spain, an event which has a favourable influence over the fortunes of Elizabeth, who, strange to say, found a friend rather than an enemy in Philip. There is some idea, however, of getting her out of the kingdom altogether by marrying her to the Duke of Savoy. She escapes the marriage, which was very repugnant to her, but our author differs from Mr. Froude as to the cause of her escape. Before long she is received at Hampton Court by Philip and Mary, first as a prisoner and afterwards without any guard at all. Now is the time for more scandal against the Princess Elizabeth, who is said to owe the favour he shows her to the shameful passion he is suspected of feeling for her. Soon Philip is summoned abroad, and Elizabeth moves from Hampton Court to Greenwich, where Philip and Mary part, and from Greenwich through London to Hatfield. Now comes the plot associated with the name of Anthony Kingston, and Elizabeth is once more in danger. Once more she is indebted, as it appears, to Philip's goodwill or policy for her freedom if not her head; and soon after this she is in disgrace again for again refusing to have anything to say in the way of marriage to the Duke of Savoy. She this time also weathers the storm; and, after a renewal of intercourse with her sister, Queen Mary, is nominated by the latter to succeed to the throne. Queen Mary's last illness ends in death on Nov. 17, 1558, and Elizabeth, after all her changes and chances, is proclaimed Queen. She might well fall upon her knees, saying, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." That "she would not pay the legacies and the debts of the sister who had bequeathed her a crown" (which, by-the-way, she would certainly have obtained by the will of the people) is not to her credit, unless there be some explanation undiscovered or unstated by our author; but our author's sneer at her "account of the tears she had shed at her sister's death" might have been omitted, had he reflected that Elizabeth was not the sort of woman to blubber much in public. What the duties of a person who edits such a publication may be is doubtful, but they do not seem to include the correction of some very ugly but not otherwise important blemishes.

The truth of the saying that "murder will out," a statement much shaken by late experience, so far as the general acceptation of the meaning is concerned, will receive a little welcome confirmation from the two volumes entitled The King's Secret, by the Duc de Broglie (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), which, to say nothing at present about the intrinsic value and interest of their contents, go to prove that a dark deed is sure to be brought home, sooner or later, to the perpetrator. No doubt, as in this case, the perpetrator may have gone to his long home some time before his misdeeds are brought unmistakably to light, and may be beyond the reach of any chastisement likely to affect him; but it is always satisfactory to have a mystery cleared up [unless you wish to trade upon it] and to find that suspicions long entertained were not unjustly harboured. Now, Louis XV. of France, whose character would not have gained him a place as footman in any respectable family, was suspected during his lifetime, and after his death was officially acknowledged by his successor, to have carried on a secret correspondence "with his diplomatic agents, without the knowledge of his Ministers." But, for many years the nature of that correspondence was entirely enveloped in mystery, until, in 1866, M. Boutaric lifted the veil by the publication of "Correspondence secrète inédite de Louis XV. sur la politique étrangère avec le Comte de Broglie, Tercier, etc.," pointing out, however, that the revelation was far from complete, and, indeed, was very fragmentary, partial, and obscure, by reason of the scanty and difficult materials at his disposal. Now the Duc de Broglie's curiosity was excited and his interest was aroused by the mention of his great-uncle, Comte de Broglie; and the Duke, therefore, buckled to and rummaged among his family papers and other records, with the assistance of M. Faugère and others, to such purpose that he can assert without hesitation—"Owing to the various items of information acquired from different sources, I am enabled to lay a complete picture of the origin, the aim, and all the vicissitudes of the secret diplomacy of Louis XV. before my readers." Those readers will not be astonished, probably, to learn that the reputation of Louis XV. "will not gain, I fear, by the new light that is thrown upon it;" and they will, no doubt, sympathise with the Duke in the conviction he expresses that the character of his relative, Comte de Broglie, will "present to them the always pleasing spectacle of a mind to which lofty political views were familiar, and of a soul filled with passionate desire for the public welfare." The Duke at the same time warns his readers, and it may be worth while to record the warning, that "this book does not contain matter of a kind which its title may perhaps lead them to expect. They will find in it no romantic history, very few Court intrigues, and not a scrap of scandal." Those who desire something new and naughty about the Pompadour, the Du Barry, and tutte quante, must look elsewhere. The main interest of the book is centred in the marvellous contrast which it exhibits to view, and which is pretty clearly indicated in the following remarks: "By a singularity perhaps unexampled, that which the feeble Louis XV. carefully concealed for twenty years from his subjects as well as from his Ministers, was the best that was in himself. If he indulged in the strange whim of employing two ministries at the same time, the one active and the other for consultation, at least he did not resort to that complication for the sake of securing relays of flatterers and establishing a rivalry in subserviency between the two orders of his servants. On the contrary, while he too frequently abandoned the exercise of his authority to courtiers who were favoured by his own favourites, he privately sought the advice (though not, indeed, that he might act upon it) of stern politicians, who were frank with him even to harshness; and it was under the triple seal of a correspondence in cipher that he gave vent to sentiments worthy of a king, and to such passing desires for the public good as still remained at the bottom of his heart." The book may now be left to make its own way with readers; it is far too long for anything like a brief summary, and it does not appear to present any particularly salient feature upon which one might fasten as a striking phenomenon. It seems to be just the sort of book which must be read as a whole before a proper idea of its weightiness and significance can be obtained. The translation is unacknowledged, but the reason why is left to conjecture; the execution will probably meet all requirements and be generally considered highly creditable, if certain parts be fair samples of the whole.

With the third volume, lately published, of the History of the English People: by John Richard Green, M.A. (Macmillan and Co.), we reach that intensely interesting period, from 1603 to 1683, during which the old order of things changed and gave place to a new one, passing through various stages of gloomy and sanguinary transformation, though not without certain gleams of glorious light as well as many flashes of mock and meretricious splendour. It can scarcely be necessary to say that the author depicts the different scenes in vivid colours, and describes in admirable style the details of the spectacle presented. Not that he ever stops in his flowing narrative to execute a striking piece of distinct word-painting; the charm of his manner is in the ease and continuity with which he runs on, carrying the reader trippingly with him and, without interrupting the course of narration, producing the desired effect by a sudden, dexterous turn of the sentences. His new volume begins with a very stirring and eloquent exposition of the way in which at the death of Elizabeth the spirit of Puritanism, as matters present themselves to his eyes, became a permeating force and operated powerfully upon the political as well as the social and personal life of the nation. Then comes a by no means flattering but probably correct portrait of the King of the Scots, the first King James of England, with a severe but very likely an impartial and just estimate of his character and conduct, his intellectual capacity, and his general folly and weakness. We are bidden to observe that James, at his death, had been successful in one only of his many schemes, but that the single success was "the most fatal of all his blunders; for in the marriage with Henrietta Maria lay the doom of his race. It was the fierce and despotic temper of the Frenchwoman that was to nerve Charles more than all to his fatal struggle against English liberty. It was her bigotry—as the Commons foresaw—that undermined the Protestantism of her sons. It was when the religious and the political temper of Henrietta mounted the throne in James the Second that the full import of the French marriage was seen in the downfall of the Stuarts." That, at any rate, is the author's view; his readers may gainsay it, if they please. It would be loss of time to follow the author through the pages in which he makes out his case, as he no doubt would maintain, by the plain evidence of ascertained facts, through the troubled reign of Charles I., through the Protectorate, through the Restoration, down to the date of the Rye House Plot; for it all belongs to the history of England, and, whatever name be given to it, is neither more nor less, so far as the substance of it is concerned, an old story re-told. It must suffice to say that the story is re-told in a manner very delightful to read, a manner eminently calculated to command the attention as well as to enlighten the minds of the "people," for whom it seems to be especially intended, and that, though novelty of incident was of course out of the question, the writer can evidently put old wine into new bottles of his own original shape and make without damage to either and rather with advantage to both. His style is clear as the day, and full of freshness and vigour.

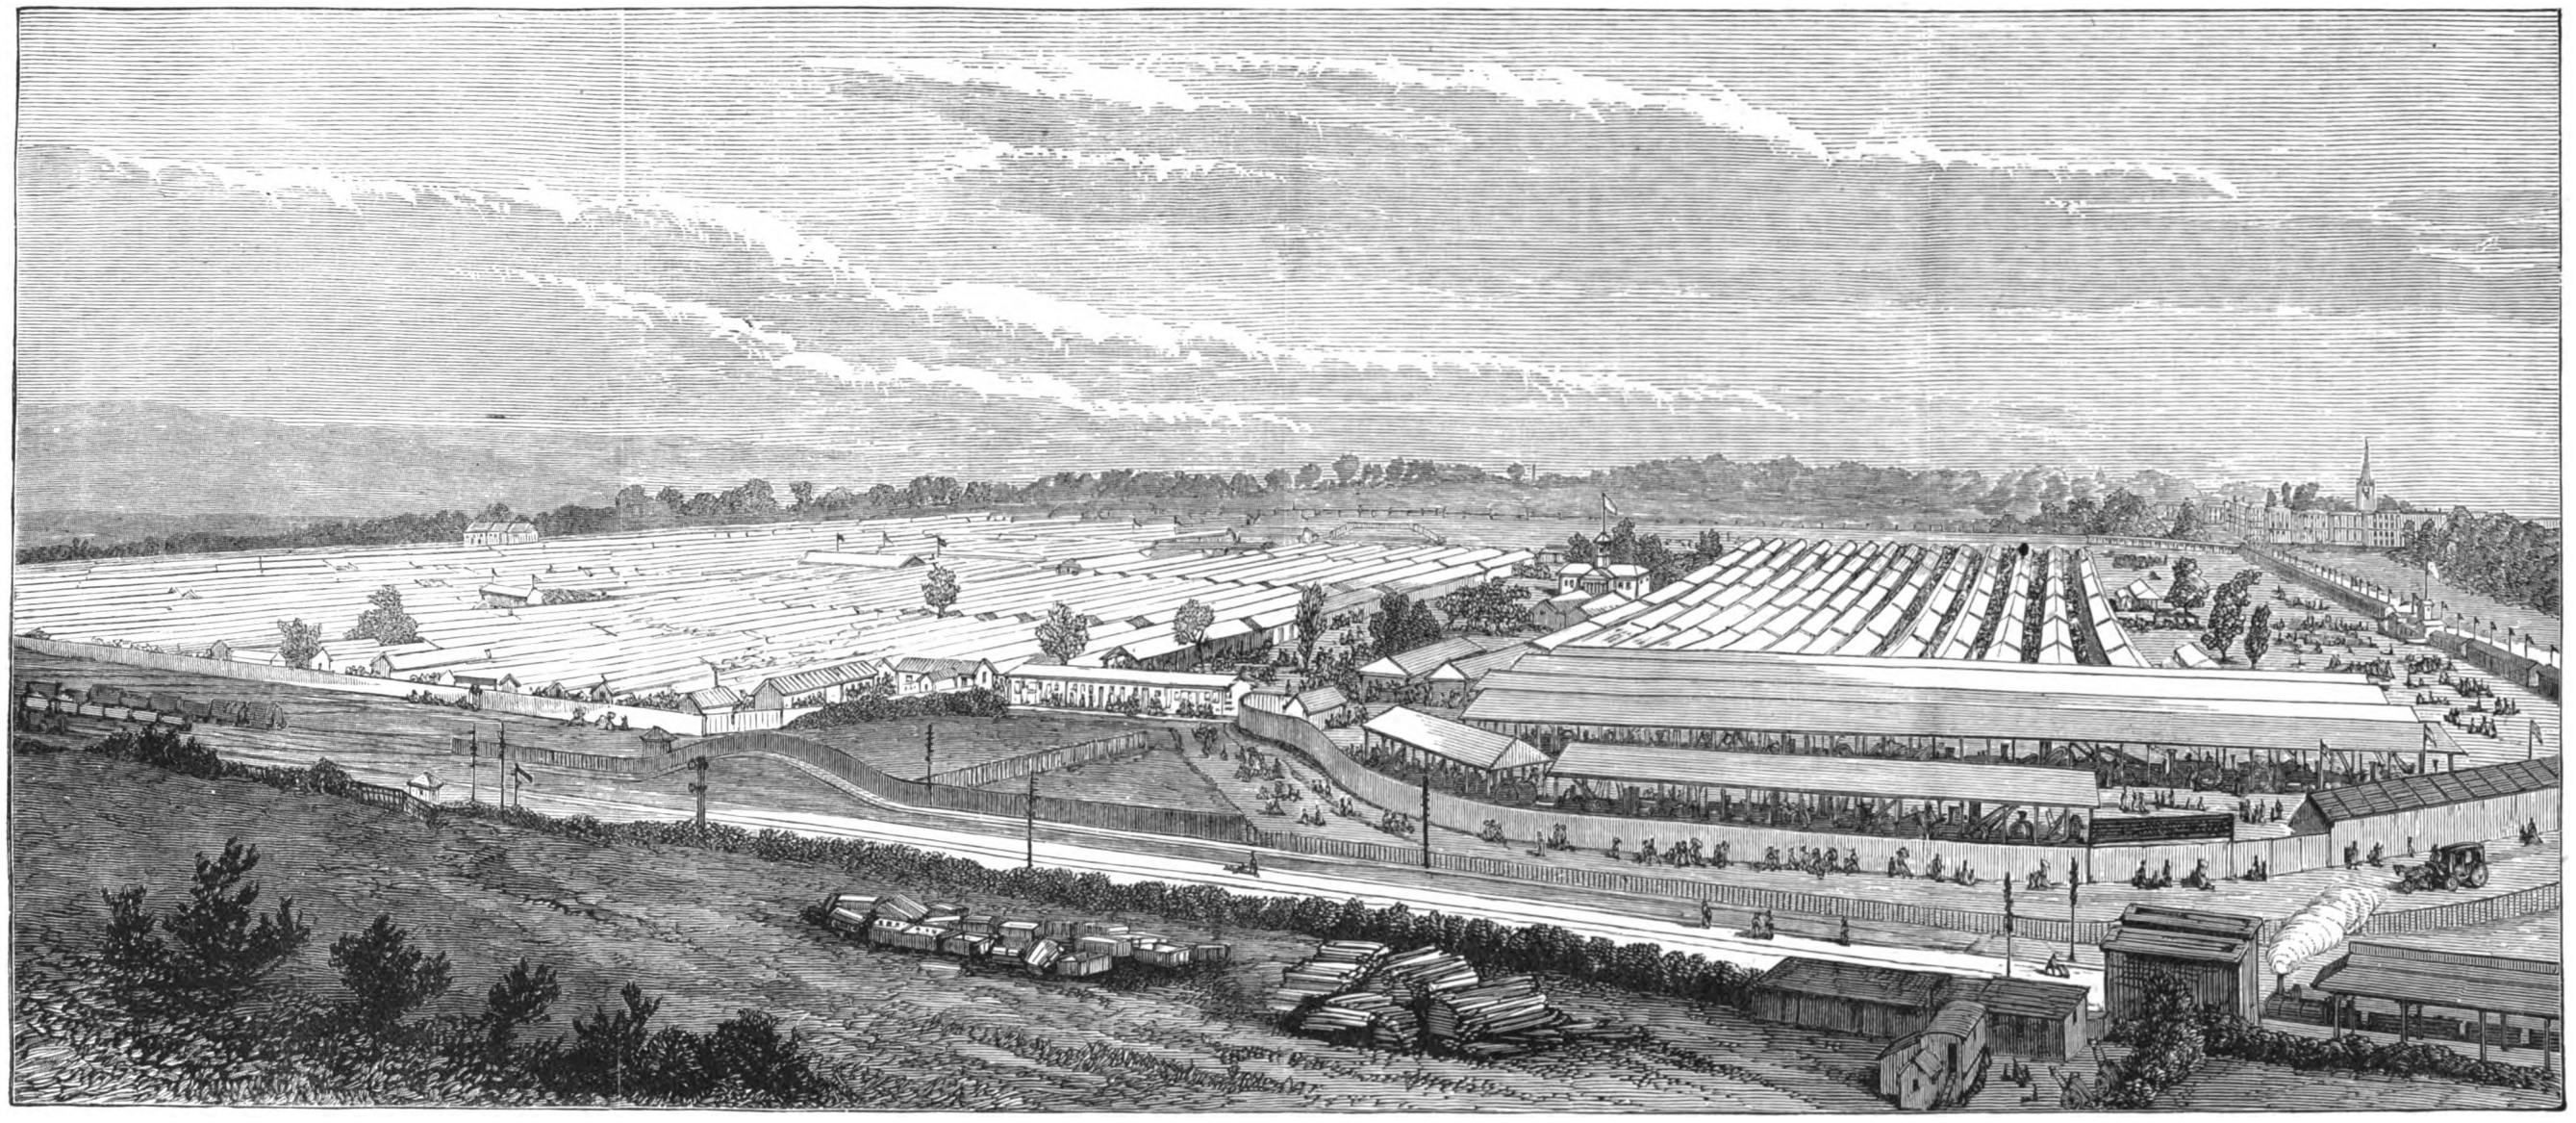
COLLECTION OF AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.



The loan collection of comparative ancient and modern implements at Kilburn, in connection with the International Exhibition of the Royal Agricultural Society this week, furnishes the subjects of a page of Engravings. This collection has been skilfully arranged in the proper chronological order by Mr. E. L. Box. We here proceed to notice the particular objects shown in our illustrations, following the order of the engravings as arranged on the page.

No. 1 is a Crimean three-furrow plough, as formerly used in that country, but now superseded by the modern three-furrow iron plough. No. 2 is the Java plough, as made in that island, and used in the present day. No. 3 is the Egyptian plough, still made and used in Egypt, which is almost identical with those shown on the ancient Egyptian monuments, and may be considered the earliest form of plough. No. 4 is the Suffolk "gallows" plough, as made seventy years ago, and still in use in that county. These four ploughs are lent by Messrs. Ransomes, Sims, and Head, of Ipswich.

No. 5 is the Gloucester Vale long plough, nearly a century old, lent by Mr. W. Lawrence, Pirton Court, Gloucester. The reader will contrast this and the other wooden ploughs, of antique types, with the graceful light appearance of No. 6, a plough constructed on the most improved modern principles, entirely of iron and steel.

We next direct attention to a steam balance plough of the most recent principle (No. 7). Little more than half this great implement is given in the illustration. It is made sometimes with as many as eight shares on each half. The frame-plan of this implement, looking at it from above, is that of two parallel lines resting on the wheels; these parallel lines are bent inwards, at obtuse angles, beyond the circumference of the wheels, and thence continue till they meet, so forming the rigid iron frame, which is always at an angle to the line of direction when the plough is at work. The alteration of the width of the furrows is effected by means of wedges, which fix the shares at different angles to the frame.

As many of our readers may not be familiar with the method of steam cultivation, we here add a few words of explanation. One mode is by the double engine system; that is, using two self-moving steam-engines with winding drums under the boilers. These are placed parallel to each other at opposite sides of the field to be operated upon. The implement is pulled towards the engine across the field, he other engine, not in work, paying out the rope while moving forward into position for the return journey. This alternate pulling by each engine is continued till the task is complete. The other mode of working is by drawing the rope to and fro between the engine, placed as before at one side of the field, and a ponderous anchor, which has automatic self-moving action, at the opposite side. The framework of this anchor rests on thin disc wheels, which cut into the ground to enable it to resist the side strain of the engine and implement. The automatic arrangement keeps it moving along so as to be opposite its work.

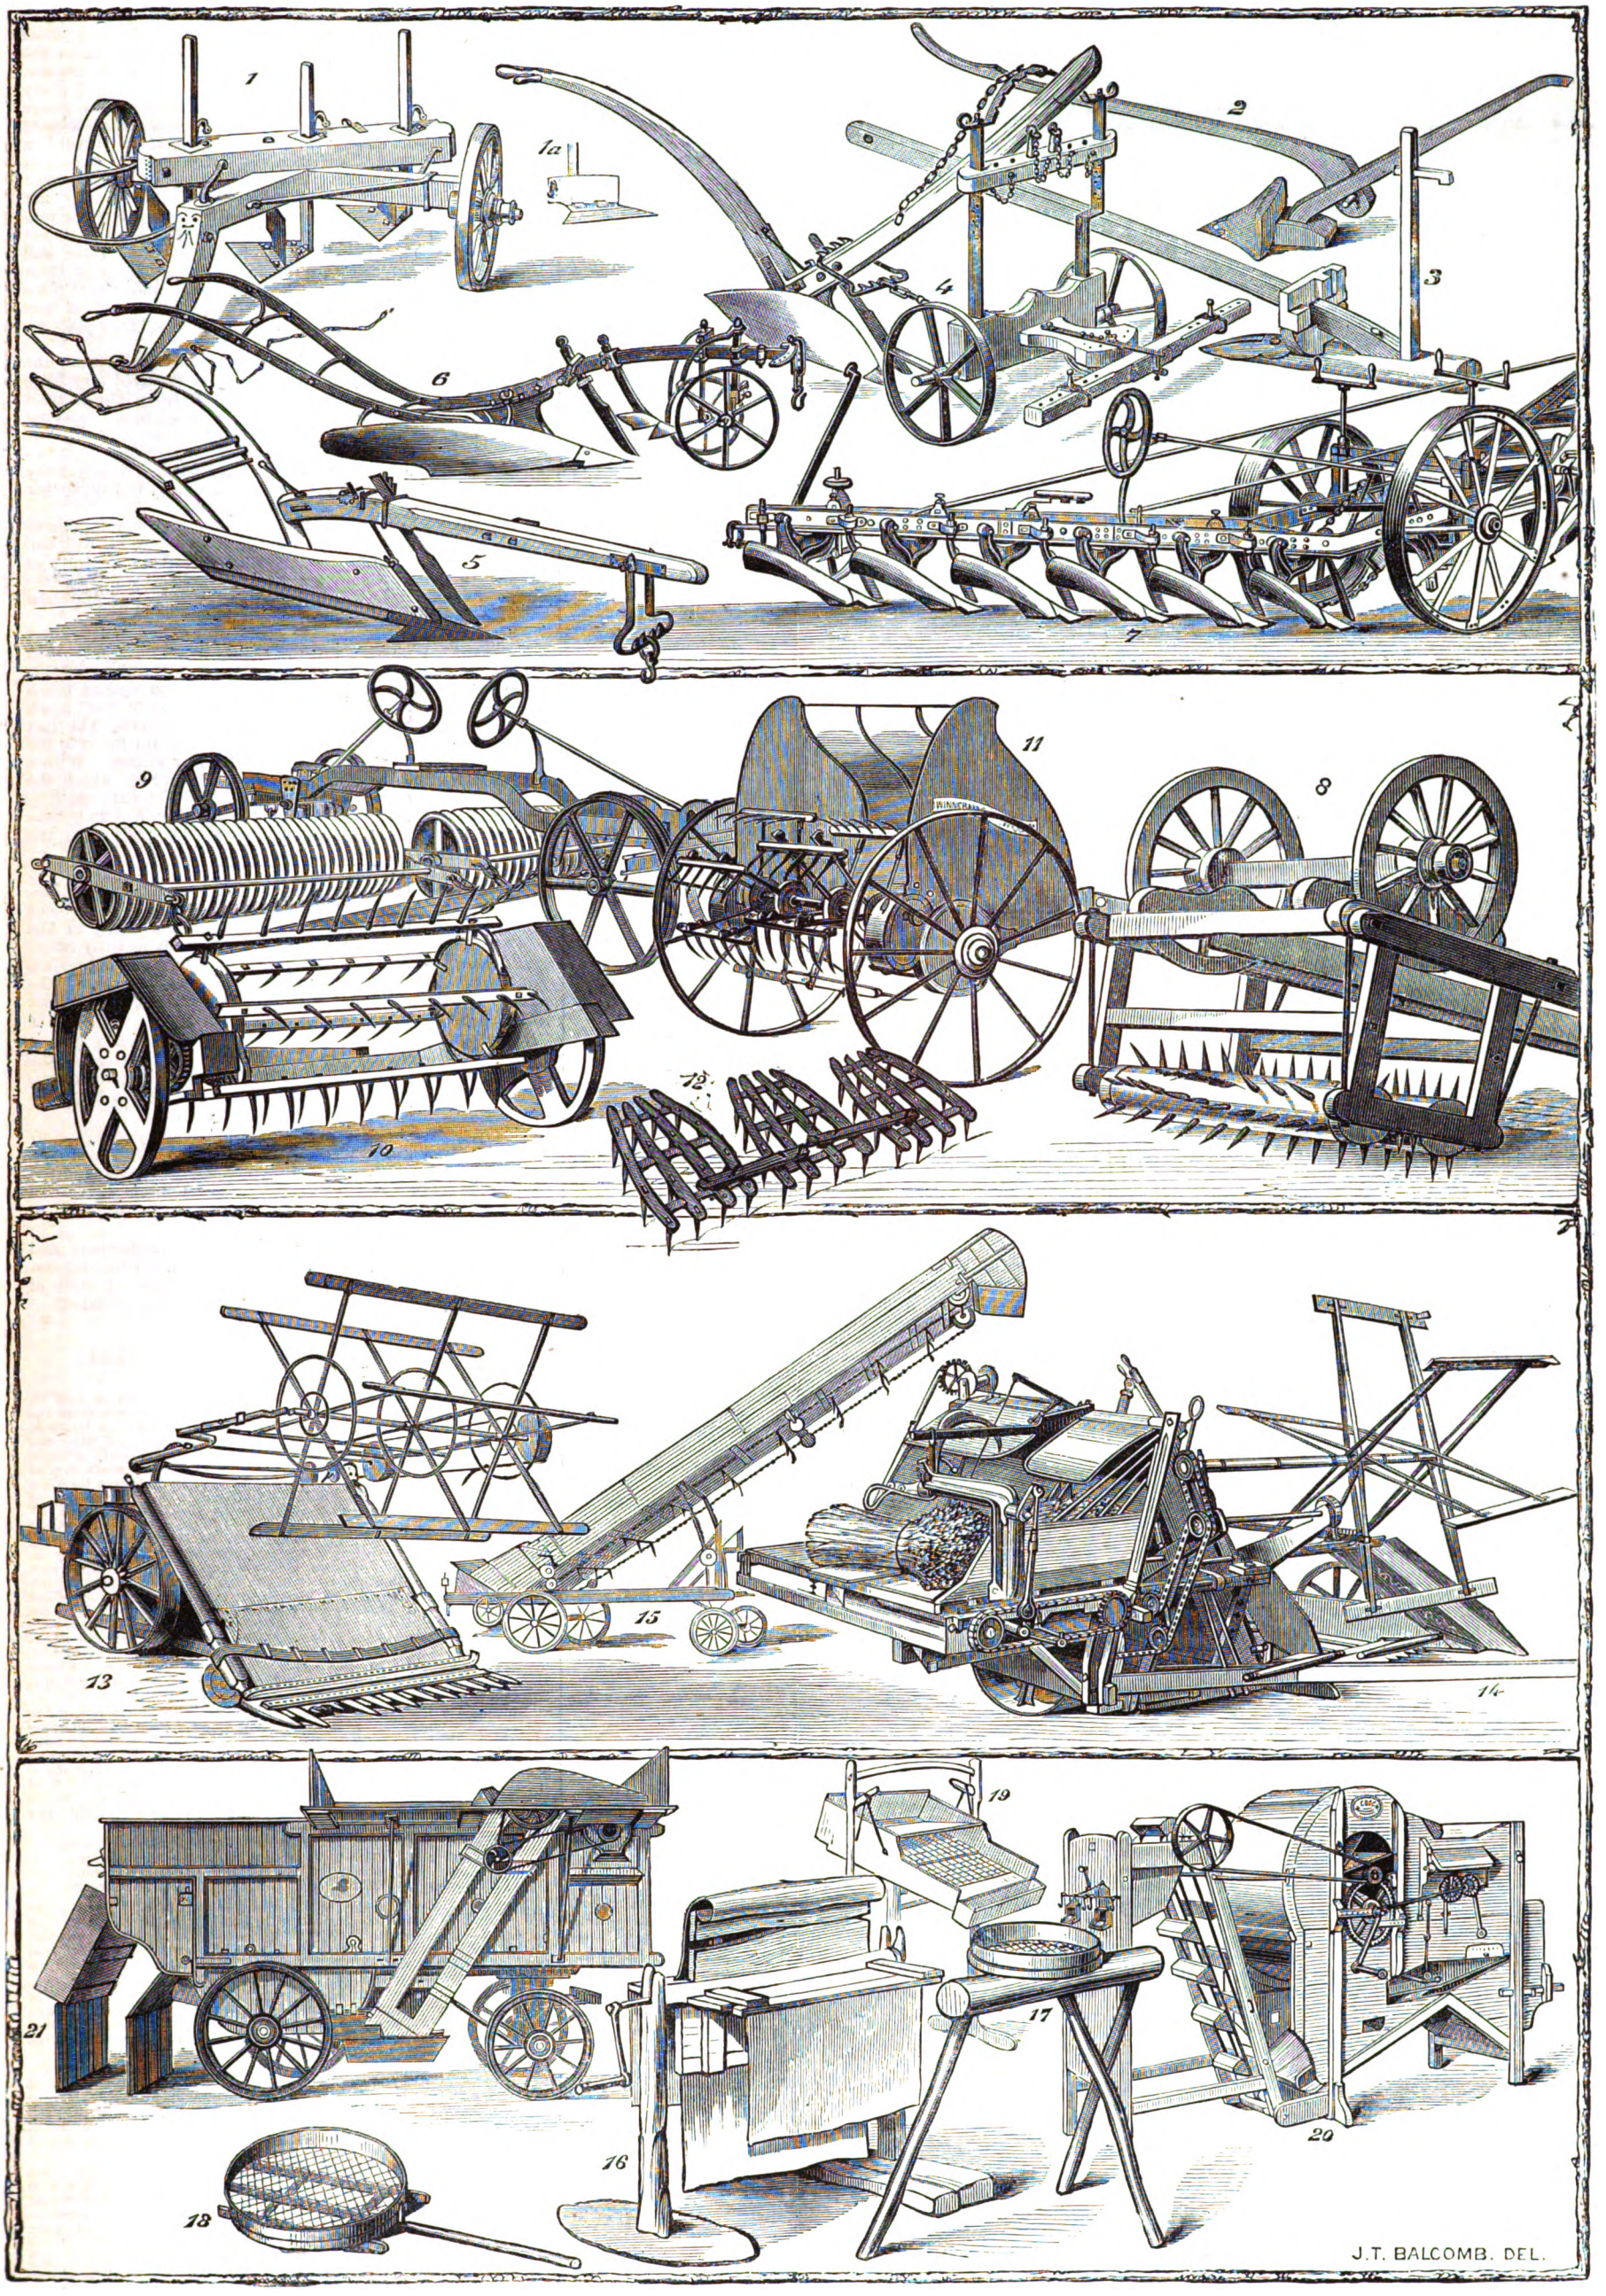
In the collection at Kilburn all the steam cultivating machines are placed by themselves apart from the other agricultural implements. The visitor is thus enabled to judge of the different appliances, as connected with each other, in their proper order. Our space being limited, we have placed this steam-plough and the steam clodcrusher (No. 9) with the ordinary implements of their class to assist the comparison.



No. 8 is a very old self-cleaning clodcrusher, lent by Mr. Thomas Drewitt, of Pickards Farm, Guildford. The frame and shaft of this are more modern. The clods in a field having been crushed, it is turned over on to the wheels, the horses draw it to the next field, and are then taken out, and the machine is turned back again, so that the spiked rollers are underneath, as seen in the engraving. Compare this with the steam clodcrusher (No. 9), which consists of a number of strong cast-iron wheels, with wedged edges: each wheel has an independent revolution. The total width of this steam-roller is fifteen feet.

No. 10 is an old double-action haykicker, said to be of the first make, or about fifty years old. It is lent by J. D. Ostler, Esq., of Walrond Park, Taunton. It has no screen between it and the horse, to protect it from the showers of hay kicked up; the attendant walks by its side. Compare this rude contrivance with the beautifully-finished haymaker, No. 11. This has a seat provided for the driver, which is not seen in the engraving, being hid from view by the solid screen or shelter. In such a vehicle a well-dressed lady would be enabled to ride about all day in the fresh air without her apparel being any the worse for it.

No. 12 is an old harrow, roughly made from branches of trees, the tines being of iron. It is lent by H. Downes, Esq., of Basingstoke. This may be compared by visitors with the modern, beautifully-finished, and far more effective harrows to be seen in the Exhibition.

We now come to a machine of a highly interesting character—the Rev. Patrick Bell's reaping-machine (No. 13), the first efficient one of its kind, made about 1826. By comparing it with the modern reaping-machines at Kilburn one remarkable difference will be noticed. In the latter the horses pull the machine with its knife behind them, whereas in the first machine they pulled the machine in a direct line to the front of them. A peculiarity in the knife of Bell's and also in that of M'Cormick's, another reaping-machine which came after Bell's in point of time, is that the knife is finely notched like a saw. An account of the invention of Bell's reaping-machine was given in this Journal on March 7, 1868.

In No. 14 we have a machine which binds the sheaves before depositing them on the ground. Our Illustration almost tells its own tale. The principle of the binding consists chiefly in using a curved swan-neck arm at the side of the binding-table. This arm works forward towards the corn to be bound, when the binding wire from a small pulley embraces it, and, by the arrangement of a shuttle travelling underneath the platform, the circle of the binding-wire round the sheaf is complete.

The corn has next to be stacked; and in No. 15 we have a labour-saving apparatus called the "stacker." This was introduced some years ago by Messrs. Clayton and Shuttleworth to supply a want long felt at harvest when labour is scarce. The days of the pitchfork, sickle, and scythe are going by, but labour-saving contrivances take their place. The stacker proper differs somewhat from a straw elevator, as corn requires a different treatment from loose straw; but this stacker is applicable to both purposes.

No. 16 is an old winnowing fan of probably three centuries ago. It is lent by Mr. Etches, and is most likely the oldest example extant. As the winnowing machines are arranged in this collection, the progressive improvement of the fan is noticeable. We notice the first development of the fly-wheel (four cross pieces at the end of spokes) to which the handle is attached; then, in another machine, the fly-wheel, complete; afterwards the canvas to be twirled round is attached to the circumference of four wheels, having spokes from the centre axis. No. 17 is a ridder, or coarse sieve; the spaces in the bottom of this sieve are about half an inch wide. It is resting on the horse or trestle. The manner of using this winnowing tackle was as follows:—By means of the handle, four canvas flaps were made to revolve rapidly, so that an enormous draught was created; and, by another operation, the ridder with the corn in it was slid backwards and forwards on the top of the "horse," used as a rest to keep it at about one height. The heavier corn fell through direct on to the ground; the lighter corn was blown by the wind a little further off, thus roughly sorting the finer grain from the common. The chaff was sent right away from the neighbourhood of the grain.

No. 18 is a ridder of larger size and coarser bottom, and, as will be seen, was held by its long handle without a horse. The last two are lent by H. Downes, Esq.

No. 19 (in the background) is a ridder of improved design of date about 1812. It forms the transition state between the last-described and our next Illustration. This ridder was used with a fan. It was suspended from the short projections near the top of the frame. The corn having been put into the upper compartment, sideways, motion was given to the ridder by the hand. The corn fell through the bottom of this compartment, running in its passage down over the face of the first wire-gauge; but foreign small seeds, with their chaff, fell through here and away by a spout underneath. The lower sieve was coarser; here the corn fell through, and would be acted on by the fan, as described. The open trough at the foot of the ridder was for the purpose of catching thistle-heads, stones, and other large foreign matters too big to fall through the wirework with the corn.

No 20 is a corn-dressing machine of the most improved modern construction, placed as a contrast to the ruder implements just mentioned. The old corn-dressing machine similar to this, also exhibited at Kilburn by the owner of No. 20, was patented in the year 1800 by Mr. John Cooch, of Harlestone, near Northampton, and is the oldest complete corn-dressing machine known to be in existence. As the one in our Illustration has never taken any other than first prizes, it is fitly taken as the termination of the scale of improvements commencing with the old winnowing-fan. In this corn-dressing machine the winnowed corn falls out at the end, and is carried up from the flows by means of tin troughs to the top of the elevator, as this part of the apparatus is called. It there falls into the sack's mouth out of the spouts.

No. 21 (seen in the background) is an improvement on the flail. In the usual order, this would come before winnowing machines; but, as the subject of our Illustration is a finishing threshing machine—that is, one which beats out the corn, winnows, sifts, and delivers it into bags, it is more properly placed last. Threshing machines were invented in Scotland about 1758 by a farmer in the parish of Dunblane, Perthshire; but were constructed on the present improved principle by Andrew Mickle, a millwright, of Haddington, about 1776. The machine may be roughly described as consisting of a cylinder, or drum, furnished with beaters, which strike the heads of corn when protruded through fluted rollers. The ears having been thus pounded, the grain falls through some wirework into a winnowing machine. This feature of Mickle's mill is, with some minor alterations, adopted in all threshing machines constructed in the present day. The motive power used for that shown in our Illustration is steam.

"HOMELESS."

The picture by M. Schmid, in the Exhibition at the French Gallery, which has been copied for the Engraving this week presented as an Extra Supplement, may be supposed to represent a party of rustic peasantry in some Alpine or other mountainous country, who have been expelled from their native village by the scourge of war. The humble family—husband and wife, children and aged grandmother—have packed a few remaining chattels and household stores into the cart, which they are vainly attempting to drag up the hilly road, their horse being taken, probably, for the service of the enemy's army, and no other means of carriage being left, in the distressed condition of the land. They do not seem likely to travel far with such an encumbrance; and it is to be feared that they will soon lose even that small portion of their modest property which had been spared by the rude hand of military rapacity, and which alone could preserve them from utter destitution. They are here met by the parish priest or Curé, in company with a friar or monk of some religious order, who look with compassion on the sad plight of these unhappy fugitives, but who do not seem to know any way of helping them in the present need. The scene is a pathetic example of woes and miseries too often brought upon mankind by the wicked ambition of Kings, Emperors, and statesmen, whose schemes of self-aggrandisement are commonly wrought out through warlike operations at the cost of the poorer folk.

The trial of Hannah Dolbs for the murder of Miss Hacker concluded late on Thursday evening, the jury returning a verdict of "Not guilty."

INTERNATIONAL AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

The greatest agricultural show that the world has ever seen was opened at Kilburn on Monday, and will remain open until next Monday evening. An area of 103 acres is covered with rows of shedding for implements, cattle, and various kinds of agricultural produce; with rings for the judging and parading of the live stock; and with refreshment-booths, the members' club, the grand stand, offices, dormitories for foreign herdsmen, and other buildings. Our Illustrations published this week are a general view of the show-yard, and a page of Engravings which represent some objects of interest in the Loan Collection of Ancient and Modern Agricultural Implements. We gave a plan of the site and the approaches to this Exhibition in our Number for May 10, with a preliminary account of the arrangements. The roadways are wide, and all the arrangements are on a commodious scale; but there is no waste of space, properly so called, and when the visitors in thousands were present the great show-yard was fairly filled. To those, however, who know what an ordinary Royal Agricultural Show is like, the best idea of the magnitude of the extraordinary exhibition of the present year will be conveyed by a comparison of the number of entries with those of previous years.

The total entries of live and dead stock reach the extraordinary number of 25,777, consisting of 22,903 entries of implements and other exhibits—which are not all "dead stock," as some of them are vegetables, seeds, and plants—and 2874 entries of live stock. These numbers, both in regard to the grand total and the separate divisions respectively, are largely in excess of those of any previous show. At Liverpool, two years ago, the entries of implements, &c., mounted up to 15,796, which was then considered a very large number; but at Kilburn we have 7107 in excess of the Liverpool entries. Then, as to the live stock, there were at Bedford, in 1874—the largest previous show of live stock, we believe—1527 entries; but at Kilburn we have 1347 in addition.

But what is more important than the increase of the show in size is the increase of the attractions which it offers. Systems of farming cannot be seen in a show-yard; but almost everything agricultural that can be exhibited in such a place may be seen at Kilburn. The finest horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs that the world has produced are there. We have a show of breeding-cattle and a dairy-show, goats being included. In the dairy department there is not only a show of the finished products of the dairy, British and foreign, but also an exhibition of butter-making on the English, French, Danish, and Swedish systems, and of cheesemaking on the plans in vogue in this country, Denmark, Holstein, and Limburg. The exhibition of bees, hives, and honey, with illustrations of the most successful methods of bee-manipulation, possesses great attractions to many visitors.

Side by side with the latest inventions and most finished adaptations in agricultural machinery, implements, and tools, there are some of primitive form, many of which have seen good service in the past and are not yet entirely superseded, and others chiefly interesting as curiosities of unperfected ingenuity, enough, so some people say, to upset half the modern patents. When we come to the vegetable department of the show, we find in that also new attractions. The great British seed firms have at once enriched themselves and made the world of agriculturists and consumers their debtors by the results of their enterprise, directed by special knowledge and opportunities. In roots, cereals, forage plants, and garden vegetables they show the developments of a system of artificial selection culminating in the prearranged "survival of the fittest." A comparison of the field and garden products of to-day with those of twenty, or even ten, years ago shows a wonderful progress. But the interesting display of our seedsmen is no new feature in agricultural shows. The novelties at Kilburn are the collections of the agricultural produce of India and several European countries, together with a loan collection from South Kensington Museum, illustrating the composition of foods.

Anyone who is greatly interested in agriculture, and who has had the time at his command, may have profitably spent the past week in the inspection of this great agricultural exhibition; indeed, it can scarcely have been possible to inspect it thoroughly in all its branches in less time. Nor would the time have been spent less enjoyably than usefully if the weather had been favourable, for the arrangements of the show are so perfect that a visitor may do almost everything but sleep in the grounds. The refreshment department is particularly well served, newspapers are sold in the show-yard, and facilities for reading and writing are also provided. Members of the Royal Agricultural Society and their friends have the special advantage of a very well-served club, with reading and writing rooms included. Even our friends, the teetotallers, have not been forgotten; for there are special places for their accommodation, wherein they may imbibe the beverages which they love, without the sight or the smell of those stronger liquors which they abominate. For foreign visitors the Royal Agricultural Society, mindful of the great hospitality shown to British visitors at the Paris Cattle Show last year, made special provisions. The foreign herdsmen could sleep in dormitories erected and furnished for their use in the show-yard. Foreign agriculturists and others interested in seeing all that they could see of British agriculture have had all possible facilities at their command. Special stewards were appointed to give them information and guidance, and excursions for their benefit to Mr. Lawes's experimental farm at Rothamsted and the Royal Windsor farms were arranged for. In short, our great Royal Agricultural Society has surpassed itself this year in the completeness of its arrangements for the instruction and convenience of its guests of all classes and of all nations.

Unfortunately, after making all the preparations that could well be made for a magnificent exhibition, the Society was denied the complete success which fine weather alone can ensure to an open-air show. The continuous wet weather preceding the opening day had brought the show-ground, carted over as it was with heavy implements in all directions, into a state more resembling a morass than a promenade; and the reports of this state of affairs which appeared in the newspapers no doubt deterred large numbers of people from visiting the show. For three days preceding the opening there was no rain of any consequence; and Monday was a delightful day. The mud had solidified and been rolled down, thousands of old railway sleepers had been laid down in the main roadways, and burnt earth had been extensively used where most required. Visitors, therefore, could get to all the main points of interest dry-shod, and although some of the cross-roads were still in a muddy condition, it was fondly hoped that by Tuesday there would be nothing to object to where the carting had been finished. But on Monday night, and for nearly the whole of Tuesday, rain fell almost without intermission. Thus all the good done by the previous four drying days was undone, and the enjoyment of visitors was sadly marred.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were fortunate in having beautiful weather for their visit to the Show on Monday. The Prince, as President of the Royal Agricultural Society, came to open the Show, and was met by the Lord Mayor, the principal officers of the society, and several distinguished British and foreign agriculturists. Their Royal Highnesses, who were accompanied by their three daughters, drove first to the Members' Club, opposite to which the brief opening ceremonial was performed, and afterwards to see the dairy department, the bees, and some of the cattle classes. After taking lunch in the Royal Pavilion, the Royal party travelled to the great horse ring on Decauville's narrow-gauge railway, which has been laid down right across the show-yard by Messrs. Fowler and Co., of Leeds. Entering the Royal box on the grand stand, the Prince and Princess saw a parade of horses, mules, and donkeys, after which they left, having been about four hours in the show-ground. On Tuesday her Majesty the Queen was to have visited the show, but the rain prevented the visit. The Prince of Wales and Lord Beaconsfield came in the afternoon. On Wednesday the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and the Crown Prince of Sweden, inspected the Exhibition; and it was announced that the visit of her Majesty would take place on Saturday.

In arranging for this great International Exhibition, the Royal Agricultural Society has necessarily incurred very large expenses. We are sorry to see that the Mansion House fund is smaller in amount than it might have been expected to be, but little, if at all, exceeding, we believe, the sums contributed to the expenses of ordinary shows by great towns like Manchester and Liverpool. As a security against loss, therefore, the Society have chiefly to look to the money taken at the gates of the show-yard.

It is impossible for us to find space for anything approaching to a detailed description of the great show at Kilburn We may, however, state that the most remarkable features of the live-stock department are the great collection of horses—no fewer than 716 being entered, and the large and fine show of Jersey cattle.

We hear in these days a great deal about agricultural depression. We doubt not the reality of that calamity; but we are glad to see that the magnitude of the show affords abundant evidence of a fact that holds good against much Cassandra-like lamentation here, and a little too much bragging from the competitors of British farmers. The fact we refer to is that British agriculture is still the finest in the world, and that it will take a great deal of killing. With a fair field for the development of his enterprise, which the British farmer can scarcely be said to enjoy under the existing system of land tenure, we have faith enough in him to believe that he will still hold his own against the competition of the whole world.

Lord Hartington presided on Monday evening at the nineteenth annual dinner of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. His Lordship, in proposing the toast of the evening, expressed his concurrence in the view recently enunciated by Lord Derby at Liverpool that the present depression was merely of a temporary character. The total amount of the receipts as announced was about £9000, including fifty guineas from the chairman.

The stewards of the Royal Agricultural Society gave a banquet on Wednesday evening, at their head-quarters at the Langham Hotel, to the Lord Mayor and the delegates of the foreign agricultural societies at present on a visit to England. Mr. Wells, the senior steward, took the chair.

Mr. James Howard presided on Wednesday over a conference of the Farmers' Alliance, held at Exeter Hall, at which, upon the motion of Mr. J. W. Barclay, M.P., the report of the provisional committee was adopted, and a resolution was carried approving the formation of the Alliance as an organisation of farmers and agricultural reformers generally.

A numerously attended conference of landowners and occupiers was held at the Society of Arts on Wednesday for the purpose of discussing measures in the present state of agricultural depression. The Marquis of Huntly presided.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN JULY.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The second Eclipse this year is an annular Eclipse of the Sun on July 19, invisible from the British Isles, and seen as a small eclipse only from the south of Europe or in the south of France, Austria, and a little larger in Spain, the Mediterranean, and the Black Sea. The line of Central and Annular Eclipse begins at 13 minutes after 7h. a.m. in the North Atlantic Ocean, a few degrees from the West Coast of Africa, and south-west of Sierra Leone, thence passing near Sierra Leone, almost following the river Niger to south of Timbuctoo, still tending northwards to a point 18 deg. of north latitude, then turning southward, crossing Nubia, the southern end of the Red Sea and western end of the Sea of Babel Mandeb to the West Coast of Africa, south of Cape Guardafui, to the Indian Ocean, crossing the Equator at a point nearly 60 deg. E. longitude to a point 98 deg. E. Nearly on the tropic of Capricorn at five minutes to 11 a.m., Greenwich mean time. The southern boundary line of this Eclipse begins in the South Atlantic Ocean, thence to the West Coast of Africa, in latitude about 18 deg., across South Africa to the east coast at Delagoa Bay, and to the south of Madagascar to a point in the Indian Ocean, whose longitude is about 82 deg. E. and latitude 55 deg. S. The northern boundary line passes from the North Atlantic Ocean, south of the British Isles, north of France, across Europe to north of the Caspian Sea, north of Persia, across Hindostan to a point 7 deg. N. of the Equator in longitude 112½ deg., and an Eclipse will take place situated between these boundary lines.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (trade-mark "Anti-Fat" registered) is the celebrated American Remedy for Corpulency.

Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is not a secret nostrum, but a compound, concentrated, and very superior fluid extract of Fucus Vesiculosus, a species of sea lichen, so much extolled by the French and other medical journals as the newly-discovered remedy for corpulency. There are several species of the Fucus generally found growing together upon the rocks, but the Vesiculosus is the only variety that has been found to possess the desired qualities. That used in the manufacture of Allan's Anti-Fat is selected and gathered at the proper seasons by an experienced botanist, and the extract made from it is carefully prepared by a skilful chemist, in a manner best calculated to retain the peculiar active properties of the plant. M. Dufrere, the celebrated French physician, says that most of the failures to obtain good results from the fluid extract of Fucus arise from the use of the wrong species of the plant, from which much of the extracts found with the apothecaries and chemists are made, or from improper treatment in manufacturing these extracts.

The Botanic Medicine Company of Buffalo and London were among the very first to engage in manufacturing extracts from Fucus, and they have spared no pains or expense to obtain the true Fucus Vesiculosus, and their long experience in preparing extracts has enabled them to make an article that fully represents the medicinal properties, which are easily destroyed by the unskilful treatment of the chemists.

The Anti-Fat can therefore be relied upon to produce the most efficacious results.

In placing this remedy before the public as a positive cure for obesity, we do so knowing its ability to cure, as attested by hundreds of testimonials, of which the following are samples:

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9 lbs. in four weeks.

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W.
June 2, 1879.

"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine (Anti-Fat) in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, losing on an average 5 pounds per week.
"Yours respectfully, HARRY BRAHAM."

A Lancashire Lady writes, under date of May 5, 1879:—"Having been told by a very stout lady that your medicine (Anti-Fat) has done her a great deal of good, I should be obliged by your sending me a bottle."

"Porchester-terrace, Lancaster-gate, Hyde Park, W.
"Mrs. —— presents her compliments to the Manager of the Botanic Medicine Company, and begs to say that the six bottles of Anti-Fat, had on May 6, have produced a satisfactory result, and will be glad to have one dozen bottles sent by Parcel Delivery at once, for which she incloses cheque for three pounds six shillings (63s.).—May 30, 1879."

Since writing our first little circular treatise upon the subject of Corpulency, many hundreds of cases have come under our personal observation, and in all good results have followed the use of the Anti-Fat. In no case has any unpleasant or injurious effect been produced. Instead of regarding obesity as an abnormal condition, many people have erroneously considered it as an evidence of health, and any agent that reduces fat is therefore at once suspected of being injurious. Starting to reason from the false position that fat is an evidence of health, it is not surprising that they should, very naturally, fall into the error of supposing that an agent possessing properties capable of reducing corpulency would prove injurious to the health. Reasoning, however, from the rational basis, that an undue deposition of fat, constituting obesity, is not a healthy but a morbid condition, it is quite as natural for us to arrive at the opposite conclusion, which is sustained by experience and observation—i.e., that the reduction of fat in cases of corpulency is invariably followed by an improvement of strength, spirits, and physical comforts. Allan's Anti-Fat sold by Chemists everywhere. Price 6s. 6d. per Bottle. Send stamp for Pamphlet entitled "How to get Lean without Starvation."

In accordance with a suggestion which has appeared in several of the sporting papers—namely, that "A morocco leather case or fancy wooden box, containing a bottle of Jockey Club Bouquet, or Opoponax Perfume, or any other of the thousand and one sweet scents from flowers made by Piesse and Lubin, would be a suitable object for a wager, and far superior to a dozen of gloves as a memento of the race, the time, and the place," PIESSE and LUBIN beg to announce that they have now a variety of such Cases, containing various odours—Two-Bottle Cases, 21s.; Three-Bottle Cases, 31s. 6d.; Four-Bottle Cases, 42s.; Six-Bottle Cases, 63s.—all filled with any Perfume to order. SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BEACONSFIELD and GLADSTONE.

"THIS MAGNIFICENT EMPIRE, UNPARALLELED IN HISTORY."—Gladstone.

A GREAT BARRIER TO ALL PROGRESS.

LORD BEACONSFIELD stated noble sentiments when he said, "The Health of the people is really the foundation upon which all their happiness and power as a State depend."
This age, in many points great and intelligent, spends large sums of money in legal strangling of those who cause their fellows violent death, the result of ignorance and a want of control over their passions, while we calmly allow millions to die of, and hundreds of millions to suffer from, various preventable diseases, simply for want of a better sanitary tribunal. It is the duty of everyone to prevent this; for the means, read a large Illustrated Sheet given with each Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT (prepared from sound, ripe fruit). The Fruit Salt is health-giving and refreshing, and the best preventive and cure for bilious headaches and all stomach disorders. It allays and cures fevers, nervous excitement, prevents diarrhœa and depression, and removes effete, gouty, rheumatic, or any form of blood poison; or, in a few words, is positively essential to the healthy action of the animal economy. If its true or great value in keeping the body in health were universally known no family or traveller would feel safe without it.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR THE CAPE.

IMPORTANT TO ALL OFFICERS,

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS,

PRIVATES, AND OTHERS.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—IN HOT OR FOREIGN CLIMATES IT IS INVALUABLE. It relieves the system of effete or poisonous matter, the groundwork of fevers and other diseases, which, if retained, poisons the blood and produces the most disastrous consequences. It allays nervous excitement, and restores the system to its proper condition (by natural means). The day is not far distant when it will be considered a criminal act to send troops to such climates without a proper supply of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—Is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of sea-sickness and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship. See the following testimonial:—

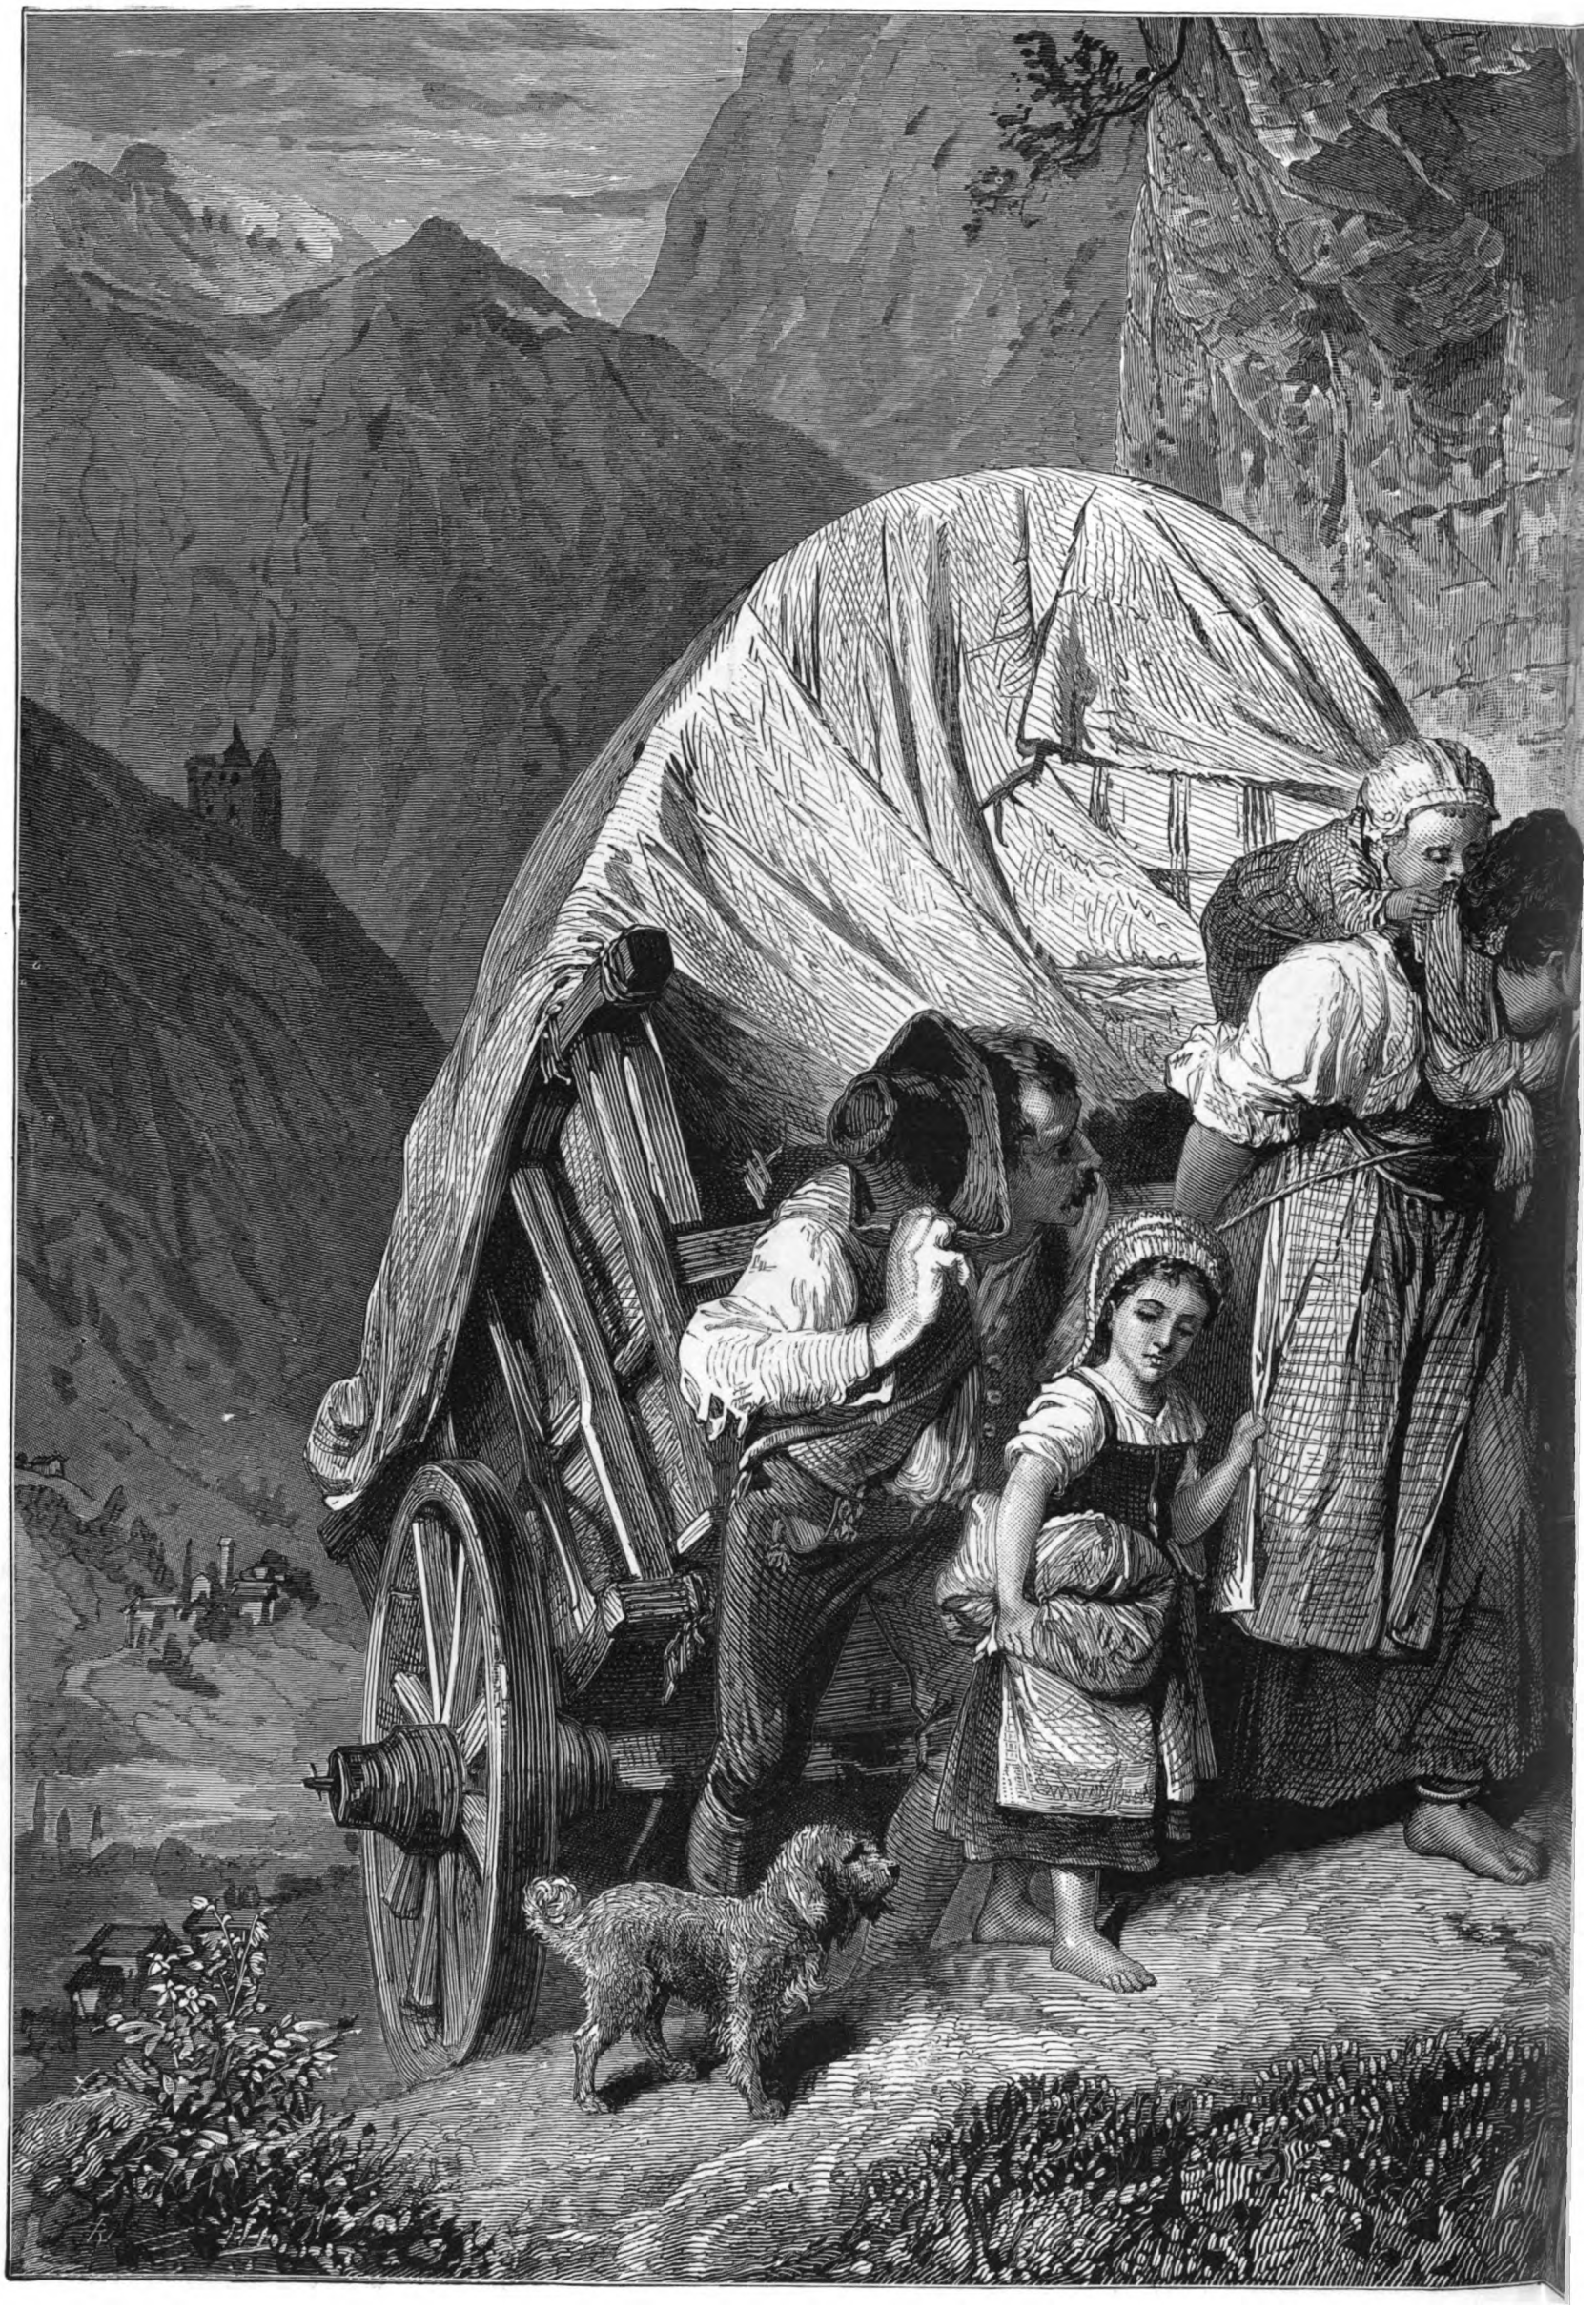
ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—From a town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878. "J. C. Eno, Esq., London.—Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.
"It is invaluable to travellers, as a preventive of sea-sickness and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship, and, for myself, I would as soon think of going a voyage without my toothbrush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates; and this is greatly in its favour.—I am, Sir, yours respectfully,
"W. J. B."
"P.S.—If you choose to make use of this or any part of it you are at liberty to do so without quoting the name, or you may use the initials."

INDIGESTION.—"I am very much pleased with your FRUIT SALT. I have fully proved its great efficacy by its having entirely cured me of indigestion."—T. WOOD, jun., Tudor-road, Canterbury.

PALPITATION OF THE HEART, caused by Liver Derangement and Indigestion, frequently called (or mistaken for) Heart Disease. A Gentleman writes:—"On April 14 I purchased a bottle of your FRUIT SALT, not feeling very well at the time, and it had an effect that I never anticipated when I bought it. I had suffered more or less since the year 1841 from palpitation of the heart, but very badly during the last few years. The least thing would produce it during the day, and at night my sleep was very much disturbed. Strange to say, after the first dose of ENO'S FRUIT SALT, the dangerous, annoying, and truly disagreeable symptoms of palpitation suddenly ceased, and have not since returned. Out of gratitude for the benefit which I have received I have recommended it to all my friends, both in London and Yarmouth. At the same time, I feel it a duty to state the above facts, of which you can make whatever use you please."

HOT WEATHER.—HEADACHE and MENTAL PROSTRATION.
"Dear Sir.—Having suffered much from headache and mental prostration, I was induced to try ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," the effect of which has been most satisfactory, resulting in invigorating my entire nervous system and removing the frequent headache to which I was subject. You are at liberty to make any use you think proper of this testimonial, as I consider ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" an indispensable adjunct to the household.—Yours, &c., T. BLYTON, 53, Sigdon-road, Dalston, London, E."

THE ART OF CONQUEST IS LOST WITHOUT THE ART OF EATING.—DINNER ENGAGEMENTS, too rich food, late hours, insufficient exercise, excitement, &c. A Gentleman writes:—"When I feel out of sorts I take a dose of Eno's Fruit Salt one hour before dinner or the first thing in the morning; the effect is all I could wish." How to enjoy good food that would otherwise cause biliousness, headache, or disordered stomach—use ENO'S FRUIT SALT.



CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY BY J. C. ENO'S PATENT, at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1879.

THE LATE LORD LAWRENCE.

The death of this eminent man, one of the best and greatest Viceroys of British India, and latterly much engaged in works of social beneficence amongst us, was announced last Saturday, to the general regret of his fellow-countrymen. It was spoken of in the House of Lords by the Prime Minister on Monday; and the arrangement for a funeral this day in Westminster Abbey will have been approved by unanimous public sentiment, for there is no party that can dissent from the recognition of such well-remembered services to the State as those of John Lawrence. As Administrator of the Punjaub, especially in 1857, at the time of the Sepoy Mutiny and the terrible conflict throughout the North-Western and Central Provinces of India, he probably did more than any other individual to preserve the British dominion in Asia. Not a soldier, like his brother, Sir Henry Lawrence, or like Outram, Havelock, and Colin Campbell, his share of the work in the defence of our Eastern Empire lay with its civilian rule; and his office was associated with those of Lord Canning, Lord Elphinstone, and Sir Bartle Frere, in holding fast the government of its motley nations through a period of fearful danger, and in collecting its remaining military forces to carry on that fierce struggle. Sir John Lawrence, by his great personal influence with the Sikhs and other powerful races of the territory over which he ruled, was enabled not only to ensure their loyalty, but to raise from amongst them, at the most critical moment, those native troops, commanded by Nicholson and Archdale Wilson, whose arms were successfully opposed at Delhi to the progress of the great Indian rebellion. The ancient capital of the Mogul dynasty was thus captured, and a signal blow was struck at the political pretensions of the enemy, before the fresh reinforcements of British troops could arrive in India to beat down the revolt of Oude and to avenge the massacre of Cawnpore. This prompt and timely achievement in 1857 made the final issue of the war no longer doubtful; though Lord Clyde and Sir Hugh Rose, now Lord Strathnairn, had still to perform, in the year ensuing, a most arduous military task. Sir John Lawrence, to whose administrative and diplomatic exertions in the Punjaub, as truly as to those of the Brigadiers-General commanding at the siege of Delhi, the inestimable success had been due, soon afterwards returned home, and lent the aid of his wise counsels to the Indian Government of the Queen, which had superseded that of the East India Company. It was not till 1863 that he again went out, succeeding Lord Elgin, as Governor-General or Viceroy, which great office he held during the next five years, endeavouring by all his measures to improve the condition of the vast native population, and to win the friendship and confidence of the Indian Princes, Rajahs, and other influential classes, that they might become willing supporters of the British Empire. It is well known that Lord Lawrence was consistently opposed to all schemes of further territorial aggrandisement, and especially that he desired to respect the independence of the ruler of Afghanistan. His policy, which was continued by Lord Mayo, has recently been set aside; and the controversy last winter upon the Afghan war question drew forth some of his latest contributions to Parliamentary and newspaper discussion. Since 1868 Lord Lawrence has resided in London; and he was, during three years, Chairman of the London School Board, adding much to the dignity of its proceedings and to the esteem with which it was regarded by enlightened and liberal friends of popular education.

The site chosen by the Dean of Westminster for the grave of Lord Lawrence in the old Abbey is in the north aisle, nearly opposite the statue of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. It will not be a state funeral, but will no doubt be attended by some of her Majesty's Ministers, and by other persons of rank.

THE DEATH OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

We have the details of this lamentable event by the arrival of news from the Cape to the 10th ult. The report of Lieutenant J. Brenton Carey, 98th Regiment, Assistant Deputy-Quartermaster-General, who accompanied the Prince Imperial on the reconnaissance which led to his melancholy death, is as follows:—

Having learnt that his Imperial Highness would proceed on June 1 to reconnoitre the country in advance of the column and choose a site for the camp of the following day, I suggested that, as I had already ridden over the same ground, I should accompany him. My request was granted; but at the same time, Colonel Harrison, Acting Quartermaster-General, stated that I was not in any way to interfere with the Prince, as he wished him to have the entire credit of choosing the camp. Shortly before starting, I found that no escort was prepared, and applied to the Brigade-Major of Cavalry. I received the necessary orders, and at 9.15 six men of Bettington's Horse paraded before head-quarters. With these and a friendly Zulu, provided by the Hon. Mr. Drummond, we started. Six Basutos of Captain Shepstone's Corps were also under orders to proceed with us, and before crossing the Blood river I sent on to him to ask for them. The messenger returned to say that they would meet us on the ridge between the Incenzi and Itelezi Hills. I again sent the man with orders to bring the escort back with him. On our right and left flanks I saw large bodies of Basutos scouting. Arrived upon the ridge, we dismounted, wishing to fix the position of some hills with our compasses. Colonel Harrison then rode up and told us that General Marshall's cavalry was coming up. When he had left I suggested to the Prince to wait for the remainder of the escort. 'Oh no; we are quite strong enough.' At a mile and a half we ascended a commanding and rocky range of hills beyond Ityotozi River. I proposed that we should here off-saddle, but the Prince said that he preferred to off-saddle near the river. We remained for half an hour sketching and surveying the country with our telescopes. Seeing no one, we descended to a kraal in a valley below and off-saddled. No precautions were taken, as no Zulus were expected to be in the neighbourhood. The Prince was tired, and lay down beside a hut. The men made coffee, and I reconnoitred with my telescope. At 3.35 I suggested saddling up. His Imperial Highness said, 'Wait another ten minutes'; but in five minutes gave me the necessary order. I repeated it, and then went to fetch my horse from the mealie-fields. I had saddled and mounted on the home side of the kraal when I heard his Imperial Highness give the order, 'Prepare to mount.' I looked round and saw his foot in the stirrup. At the same time I said, 'Mount,' and as the men vaulted into the saddles I saw the black faces of Zulus about twenty yards off, rushing towards us through the mealie-fields. They shouted and fired upon us as we rode off. I thought that all were mounted, and, knowing that the men's carbines were unloaded, I judged it better to clear the long grass before making a stand. Knowing from experience the bad shooting of the Zulus, I did not expect that anyone was injured. I therefore shouted as we neared the donga, 'We must form up on the other side. See to the retreat of everyone.' On looking back I saw one party following us, while another on our left was attempting to cut off our retreat across the ridge. Meanwhile we were under a heavy fire, and after we had crossed the donga a man said to me, 'I fear the Prince is killed, Sir.' I paused, looked back, and, seeing the Prince's horse galloping on the other side of the donga, asked if it was any use returning. The Zulus had already passed over the ground where he must have fallen, and he pointed out the men creeping round our left. I paused for our men to come up, and then galloped on to find a drift over the Tombocto River."

The evidence of the surviving members of the escort may be compared with the report of Lieutenant Carey. The names of the men were Sergeant Willis, Corporal Grubb, and Troopers Letocq, Cochrane, Abel, and Rogers. Abel and Rogers were killed.

The first witness, Sergeant Willis, said:—"We descended a hill to a kraal about a hundred yards from the Imbanani River. The kraal contained four or five huts. There was clear ground in front, but high grass and standing crops all round the other sides. We were ordered by the Prince to off-saddle, and, after knee-haltering, turned our horses into the grass. We lay down outside the huts and took some cooked coffee, while the Kaffir looked after the watering of the horses. At ten minutes to four the Prince gave the time, saying, 'Let the horses have ten minutes more.' The Kaffir drove up our horses, and at four we were ordered to saddle. The Kaffir said he had seen a Zulu across the river, going up the hill opposite. We saddled as quickly as we could. The Prince then gave the order to mount, and all of us did so, except Trooper Rogers, who was trying to catch his led horse. A sudden volley was at that instant fired, and we all made our way out at once, except Rogers, and I saw him lying against the hut.

"Did you see the Prince?—I cannot say. I saw two men fall from their horses, but cannot say who they were, because I was galloping hard. About fifty yards in front was a deep donga, and when we caught up to Lieutenant Carey I was told the order was to make for Colonel Wood's camp. The Zulus continued firing after us as we galloped for 200 yards, and yelling. We got back to camp about seven o'clock, all together.

"How far do you think you went to the kraal?—About twelve or fifteen miles from the Blood river.

"How many Zulus do you think there were?—From the shots, I should say fifty. Corporal Grubb caught the Prince's horse and rode him in, leading his own. I never saw the Prince again."

The second witness, Corporal Grubb, after a repetition of the first part, deposed: "We went, as near as I can guess, twenty miles from Blood River to a kraal. Before we got there the Prince told us to loosen girths, and went sketching with Lieutenant Carey to the brow of a hill. When he came back we mounted, and we went down to another kraal. The Prince came up, saying, 'You can water your horses at the river and cook your coffee.' We off-saddled there for an hour. The kraal had five huts, with a stone cattle-inclosure; two or three dogs were about, and there were traces of Zulus having gone away only shortly before we arrived. Tambookie grass six feet high, with Kaffir corn and mealies growing amongst it, was standing all round it except in front of the way by which we escaped. Here there was twenty yards of open ground. We had our coffee while the native looked after the horses. The Prince said, 'It is ten minutes to four; we will saddle at four.' The Kaffir came up saying something which no one understood till I interpreted. It was that he had seen a Zulu at the river on the other side. We lost no time in saddling, fetching our own horses. The Prince gave the order, 'Prepare to mount.' I took the time from him. He took hold of his horse, and said, 'Mount.' The Prince mounted; but before we had time to get our right feet into the stirrups a volley was fired from the mealies. We were all seated except Rogers, who was trying to catch his led horse. The volley was fired from about twenty yards. The Zulus shouted 'Usutu,' and 'Here are the English cowards.' I turned round, saw the Zulus, and put spurs to my horse. As I went I saw Rogers behind a hut, to the shelter of which he had run, and I shouted out, 'Come along.' I saw him level his rifle at a Zulu. I rode on with Abel full gallop.'

"Who was leading then?—Lieutenant Carey and Cochrane. When we had got a few yards from the kraals a bullet struck Abel full in the back about an inch below his bandolier. He was half a length in front of me. I saw they were firing high, and so lay along my horse. Letocq passed me saying, 'Put spurs to your horse, boy; the Prince is down.' I looked back, and saw the Prince was clinging to the stirrup-leather and saddle underneath his horse for a few lengths, and he then fell. His horse, as far as I could make out, trampled on him. I unslung my carbine to have a shot at the Zulus, but the horse just then plunged into the donga, and I fell forward on his neck and lost my loaded carbine. When I recovered my seat I found the Prince's horse close beside me. I could not catch it, so I got behind it and drove it along till I caught up to Lieutenant Carey. He then said, 'Some one must catch the Prince's horse; and I replied, 'As my horse is fagged, I will catch it and ride it into camp.' I dismounted and caught the horse and rode it into camp. The Zulus made one rush at us, but we were too quick, and they continued independent firing till we were out of range. We rode on till we fell in with General Wood, Colonel Buller, and two mounted infantry. We made our report, and they, looking through their glasses, saw six Zulus leading away our horses. I saw no more of the Prince.

"What was the last order given?—The Prince said, 'Mount.' I heard no order after that, but at the sound of the volley I watched Lieutenant Carey. We all of us put spurs to our horses and galloped.

"How many Zulus were there?—I should say forty or fifty.

"What were the Zulus firing with?—From the whiz of the bullet that struck Abel, I know they had Martini-Henrys.

"Before you mounted, how were you standing?—We were in line, the Prince being in front of us. Our backs were to the kraal."

The third witness, Trooper Cochrane, after some repetition of the preliminary evidence, stated: "We rode, I think, twenty miles from the river, meeting General Wood's column coming down the hill, about ten o'clock. We then went to a kraal between the hill and the river. The Prince there ordered us to off-saddle. We stopped an hour, when the Prince ordered us to saddle up again. When we had done so Lieutenant Carey said it was half-past three, and the Prince gave the word 'Prepare to mount,' and afterwards, 'Mount.' I was next to him. We mounted, but I did not see him do so. He was, I think, doing something to his bit. All of a sudden a volley was fired at us, the Zulus giving a tremendous shout. The horses were frightened, and we could hardly hold them. Some broke away, and the rest bolted with us. When I got across the donga, or about fifty yards from the kraal, I saw the Prince on foot, closely pursued by Zulus. His horse was then galloping off in another direction. I saw no more of the Prince. I followed Lieutenant Carey. He gave no orders. About a quarter of an hour afterwards Grubb and Willis caught us up and told us that Abel, Rogers, and the Kaffir were killed.

"In what direction was the Prince running?—He was running after us.

"How many Zulus were pursuing him?—I think about a dozen.

"How far off were they?—About three yards from him. They had all guns and assegais.

"Was any effort made to rally or halt, or any attempt made to save the Prince?—No; we had only three rifles with us.

"How far did you gallop?—About two miles without stopping.

"Did anyone ask about the Prince?—No; we were separated.

Trooper Letocq gave evidence as follows:—"The kraal we came to last was about fifty yards above the river. Here the Prince told us to off-saddle, and then the Kaffir was sent into the hut to see if anyone was there. He went down afterwards to the river for some water, and we had coffee. After an hour the Prince ordered us to saddle up. When we had all saddled up he asked, 'Are you are all ready?' and we said, 'Yes.' He then said, 'Mount,' and, just as we were springing to our saddles, the volley was fired from the mealies at fifteen or seventeen yards. We had gone to that very place to catch our horses. When we were saddling up the Kaffir, who had been to the river to water the horses, said he had seen a Zulu going up the river away from where the volley was fired. I dropped my carbine and had to dismount for it. In remounting I was unable to get my feet into the stirrups: my horse was galloping so hard from fright. I lay across the saddle. I passed the Prince, but was unable to stop for him, having no power over the reins. As I got clear away from the kraal I passed the Prince. He then had hold of the stirrup-leather and the cantle of the saddle, and was trying to get his foot into the stirrup, but his horse was going too fast. I said to him, 'Dépêchez vous, s'il vous plaît, Monsieur, et montez votre cheval.' He made no reply. He had not caught hold of the bridle; he could not keep up with the horse, and I saw it tread on him, and the Prince fell down. The Zulus were firing all the time, but I could not see them. I saw no more of the Prince. I followed Lieutenant Carey. He was leading at first, but some of us passed him. We galloped two or three miles, the Zulus trying to surround us. I saw Grubb and Willis could not catch up to us, and asked Lieutenant Carey to wait for them. He said, 'We will cross the spruit and wait for them on the rise on the other side.' Grubb and Willis were 300 yards behind us, for their horses were knocked up.

"Were any orders given to stop or rally, or try to save the Prince?—No.

"Did any of you mention the Prince, or did Lieutenant Carey say anything about him?—No; all that I heard Lieutenant Carey say all the time was, 'Let us make haste, and go quickly.'"

The above evidence was taken by Captain Bettington on the return of the survivors. The testimony as thus given was signed by each witness as correct. The Prince's horse, a grey charger, was brought into the camp; and it was observed that the holster of the saddle was partly torn off. A military court of inquiry has been held, over which Major-General Marshall presided, but the result is not known.

The finding of the Prince's body on the day after he was killed, by a strong force of cavalry under Major-General Marshall, which brought it back to the camp at Itelezi, was described in our last. The body was found quite naked, and pierced with nineteen assegai wounds, lying in the donga or ditch. The necklace or chain, to which a locket was suspended, had been left with the body; also the Prince's watch and rings, and other trinkets, with a small reliquary, which the Zulus probably feared to touch, supposing them to be magic charms. There was a religious service performed by a Roman Catholic chaplain at the camp, and the body was subsequently removed to Pietermaritzburg, where it was received by the Lieutenant-Governor, the Colonial Secretary, and the officers of the garrison, and placed in the Roman Catholic church, where it lay in state. The remains were to arrive on the 11th ult. at Durban, whence they would be conveyed, escorted by the garrison, on board her Majesty's ship Boadicea, which would proceed immediately to Simon's Bay. There the body would be transferred on board her Majesty's troop-ship Orontes, in charge of Colonel Pemberton. The Orontes will be met by part of the Channel Fleet, as an escort of honour, and may be expected to arrive at Sheerness one day next week. Another of her Majesty's ships will then convey the Prince's body from Sheerness to Woolwich. The officers and men of the Royal Artillery at Woolwich, as well as the cadets of the Royal Military Academy there, under General Sir Lintorn Simmons, will march with the coffin to Chiselhurst, where a solemn funeral will take place in the Memorial Chapel, at the tomb already occupied by the mortal remains of the late Emperor Napoleon III. We shall publish ample Illustrations of all these proceedings, besides the Sketches we expect to receive from Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist in South Africa, showing the manner in which the remains of the Prince were conveyed from the head-quarters of the army to the capital of Natal, and to the port of embarkation, with the public honours that were bestowed upon it.

At Paris, on Thursday week, there was a funeral mass performed in the Church of St. Augustin, which was attended by many persons of high rank, Queen Isabella of Spain and her husband, Lord Lyons and the other Ambassadors, Marshal M'Mahon, the Princes of the Bonaparte family, and many senators and deputies. In London, on Sunday last, and again on Monday and Tuesday, there were special services at the Roman Catholic Cathedral of Southwark, at the Pro-Cathedral in Kensington, and at the Church of St. John of Jerusalem, in Great Ormond-street. The residence of the Empress, Camden Place, Chiselhurst, has been daily visited by numbers of the aristocracy and upper class of society, who came to inquire about her Majesty's health and to leave messages of personal sympathy. Two of our Illustrations, one representing the scene outside, at the lodge gate, and the other that of visitors writing their names in the book kept at the lodge, show what has been witnessed there from day to day since the disastrous news reached England. We also give an Illustration of the interior of the room at Camden Place, which was used by the Prince for his private study; and his favourite riding hack, which bears the name of Stag, is the subject of one of our Engravings.

The death of the Prince Imperial was alluded to by the Prince of Wales in his speech last week at the dinner of the West London Hospital. He spoke of him as "a brave young man, who was the guest of this country; and personally," his Royal Highness added, "I can only say that a more charming or more excellent young man could never have existed, and if it had been the will of Providence that he should have been called to succeed his father as Sovereign of the great neighbouring country, I have every reason to believe that he would have been an admirable Sovereign, and that, like his father, he would have been a true and great ally of this country." In like manner, the Duke of Cambridge, at the dinner of the Trinity House Corporation on Saturday, stated that the Prince Imperial was bent upon going to South Africa, from an intense anxiety to show his gratitude to the Queen and the country for the manner in which he had been treated while living in this country. "As to his conduct, I think there can be no doubt, he was a thoroughly good, high-minded, high-principled young man. As to his courage, singularly enough I had observed on several occasions the intense dash in his character, and in a letter I have from him he thanks me for having given him a hint on that very subject. I had said to him that he should not run unnecessary risk or expose himself unnecessarily; I gave him that hint; but so strong was his desire to see service, and to show the noble spirit which dwelt within him, that he could not restrain his feelings in any way, and if the opportunity occurred he would only be anxious to go to the front. The result is deplorable; but there can be no question that the feelings were noble and generous, and I am only grieved that a life so valuable should have been so unhappily cut off."

With the approval of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, a general subscription throughout the Army has been commenced to erect a memorial of the late Prince Imperial. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught, Field-Marshals Lord Strathnairn and Sir Charles Yorke, Lord Napier of Magdala, and other officers of high rank, are on the committee. The subscription is not to exceed £1 from any individual contributor.

Our Portrait of the Prince Imperial, given as the Extra Supplement last week, is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

WILL OF THE LATE PRINCE.

The following is a translation of the will of the late Prince Louis Napoleon, made at Camden Place, Chiselhurst, on Feb. 26, 1879:—

"This is my testament.

"1. I die in the Catholic Apostolic and Roman religion, in which I was born.

"3. My latest thought will be for my country, for which I would wish to die.

"4. I hope my mother, when I shall be no more, will maintain for me that affectionate remembrance which I shall cherish for her to the last moment.

"5. Let my private friends, my servants, and the partisans of the cause which I represent, be assured that my gratitude to them will only cease with my life.

"6. I shall die with a sentiment of profound gratitude towards the Queen of England, the entire Royal family, and the country in which during eight years I have received such cordial hospitality. I constitute my mother my universal legatee, subject to the payment of the following legacies:—

The duties of our house towards the country will not be extinct with my life. When I die the task of continuing the work of Napoleon III. will fall to the eldest son of Prince Napoleon, and I hope my beloved mother, by supporting him with all her power, will give to us who shall be no more this last and crowning proof of affection.

"NAPOLEON.

"At Chiselhurst, Feb. 26, 1879.

"I appoint MM. Rouher and F. Pietri my testamentary executors. I mean by F. Pietri, Franceschini Pietri.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNEY IN SCOTLAND.

Two Illustrations of her Majesty's route, on the 20th ult., from Balmoral to the south, by way of Dundee and Fifeshire, are given in this Number of our Journal, from Sketches by our Artist, Mr. W. A. Donnelly, who was permitted to accompany the Royal train. Her Majesty was met at the Tay Bridge Station, Dundee, by the Provost, magistrates, and town councillors of that Royal Burgh, from whom she accepted an address, with bouquets of flowers presented by Mrs. Brownlee and other ladies. The Queen was accompanied by Princess Beatrice, and was attended by General Sir H. Ponsonby, Lord Bridport, Colonel Pickard, Dr. Marshall, and the Hon. Mary Pitt. The train, on leaving the station, passed over the viaduct and lofty bridge recently erected by the North British Railway Company across the estuary of the Tay. It was about ten minutes past six in the evening. The view up the river at this time was particularly fine. The tide was about half full, and the rays of the sun striking on the waters had a splendid effect. The fertile valley of the Carse of Gowrie and the hills of Perthshire beyond were seen to great advantage. On the south side, although the beautiful scenery of the Fife shore could be accurately traced for a considerable distance up the river, the view of the hills beyond was slightly obscured by a haze. When the train emerged from the large girders it came into full view of those assembled at the south end of the bridge. Here were the boys of the Mars training-ship, under the command of Captain Scott. Between the large girders and the south end of the bridge the train moved very slowly, the speed being reduced to three miles an hour. The journey along the bridge occupied eleven minutes, and as the weather was all that could be desired, the Royal party had an excellent view of the Firth of Tay. As soon as the foremost carriages of the train entered upon the land line, the band of the Mars boys struck up the National Anthem, while their companions presented arms. Her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice, was standing close to the carriage window on the south side gazing up the river. She at once recognised the young sailors, and appeared to be much gratified by their loyal reception of her. She smiled, and in response to the greetings of the spectators graciously bowed her acknowledgments. At the same time a Royal salute was being fired from the Mars, which, lying off Woodhaven Pier attracted special attention on account of her fine dressing. There were several boats on the river, the occupants of which were enabled to catch a glimpse of the Royal travellers. Six of the boats belonging to the Mars, fully manned by the lads, tossed their oars as the train crossed the bridge. The steamer May, with a large complement of passengers, took up a position near the middle of the river, and steamed alongside the train towards the Fife shore. Those on board waved their handkerchiefs, and otherwise made manifestations of their loyalty. On reaching the Fife side the speed of the engine was increased, and the train was soon lost to view. The further route was by Leuchars, within sight of the ancient city of St. Andrews, thence by Cupar, Ladybank, Auchtermuchty, Kinross, Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alloa to Stirling. It was expected that the Royal train would stop for a short time near Milnathort, to allow the Queen to have a view of Loch Leven and the castle, which stands on an island near the western shore. No stoppage, however, was made, but the speed was lessened. The scene is one of the finest to be seen anywhere. The sun shone brilliantly on the fine sheet of water, and the Royal travellers had the opportunity of viewing it in the most favourable circumstances. At the point where the train was to draw up a large concourse of people had assembled, and poles had been erected, from which floated the union-jack and national ensign. The village, which could be seen in the distance, was also gay with bunting. Hearty cheers were raised as the train passed, and a brass band played "God Save the Queen." Merry peals were chimed from the steeple. The Royal train having arrived at Stirling, the further journey, by the Caledonian Railway, and viâ Carlisle to Windsor, was continued through the night.

On the 21st ult. the foundation-stone of a new church was laid by Major-General Sir Frederick Fitzwygram in the Southwark Park-road, Bermondsey.

The ancient little church of Moor Monkton was reopened by the Archbishop of York on the 11th ult., after a complete restoration by the chief landowner of the parish, liberally assisted by other friends.

Her Majesty, as patron of the Rectory, has contributed £100 towards the much-needed restoration of Narberth church. The corner-stone was laid on the 12th ult. by Mrs. Lewis, of Heullan, the first subscriber.

The parishioners of Grosmont, Yorkshire, have presented their late Vicar, the Rev. John Bailey, M.A., upon his leaving the parish, with an elegant silver épergne, and favoured Mrs. Bailey with the gift of a massive gold ring, as tokens of the high esteem in which they are held.

The new church, dedicated to St. Peter, at Scorton, near Garstang, which has been erected at a cost of from £12,000 to £15,000, by Mr. James Ormrod, of Halliwell, near Bolton-le-Moors, to the memory of the late Mr. Peter Ormrod, of Wyresdale Park, has been consecrated by the Bishop of Manchester. The Rev. A. T. Davidson is the first Incumbent.

At a Consistory Court held in the Cathedral, Ripon, on the 19th ult., a faculty was granted to pull down the whole of the fabric of Haworth Church excepting the west tower, and improve and restore the church. Protests were entered against the old church being demolished, but, there being no legal opposition, the faculty was granted.

A new church at Little Leigh, near Northwich, built on the site of the previous one, was consecrated on the 19th ult. by the Bishop of Chester. The structure is a unique example of Cheshire brickwork applied to ecclesiastical purposes. It is built on the estate of Lord Leigh, Mr. Edmund Kirby, of Liverpool, being the architect.

The new chapel at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, was recently consecrated by the Bishop of Oxford. It is a handsome building, in the Lombardic style, from the designs of Captain Cole, R.E., and is ornamented by a beautiful east window, erected by the officers of Royal Engineers in memory of the late Colonel Charles Chesney, of that regiment.

The residents at Sydenham and the neighbourhood (Churchmen and Nonconformists) have presented the Hon. and Rev. Augustus Legge with a cheque for £300, on the occasion of his resigning the living of Sydenham to take that of Lewisham, in succession to his uncle, the Hon. and Rev. H. Legge. The Rev. H. W. Yeatman, Vicar of Netherbury, Dorset, succeeds the Rev. A. Legge at Sydenham.

The Earl of Chichester, in taking part in the annual meeting of the Chichester Diocesan Association, held at Brighton, on the 19th ult., under the presidency of the Bishop of the diocese (Dr. Durnford), was called upon to present a testimonial to the Rev. Prebendary Foster, Rector of Selsey, in acknowledgment of his services as secretary to the association for a period of upwards of forty-two years. The testimonial took the shape of a silver salver and cheques for £140.

A Court of Assistants to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy was held at the Corporation-House, 2, Bloomsbury-place, on the 21st ult.—the Archbishop of Canterbury presiding. After receiving the reports of various committees, the court considered a large number of applications from necessitous clergymen for participation in the midsummer benefactions, and a smaller list of petitions for educational and other grants, some material help being given in almost every case. The total sum distributed amounted to over £2000.

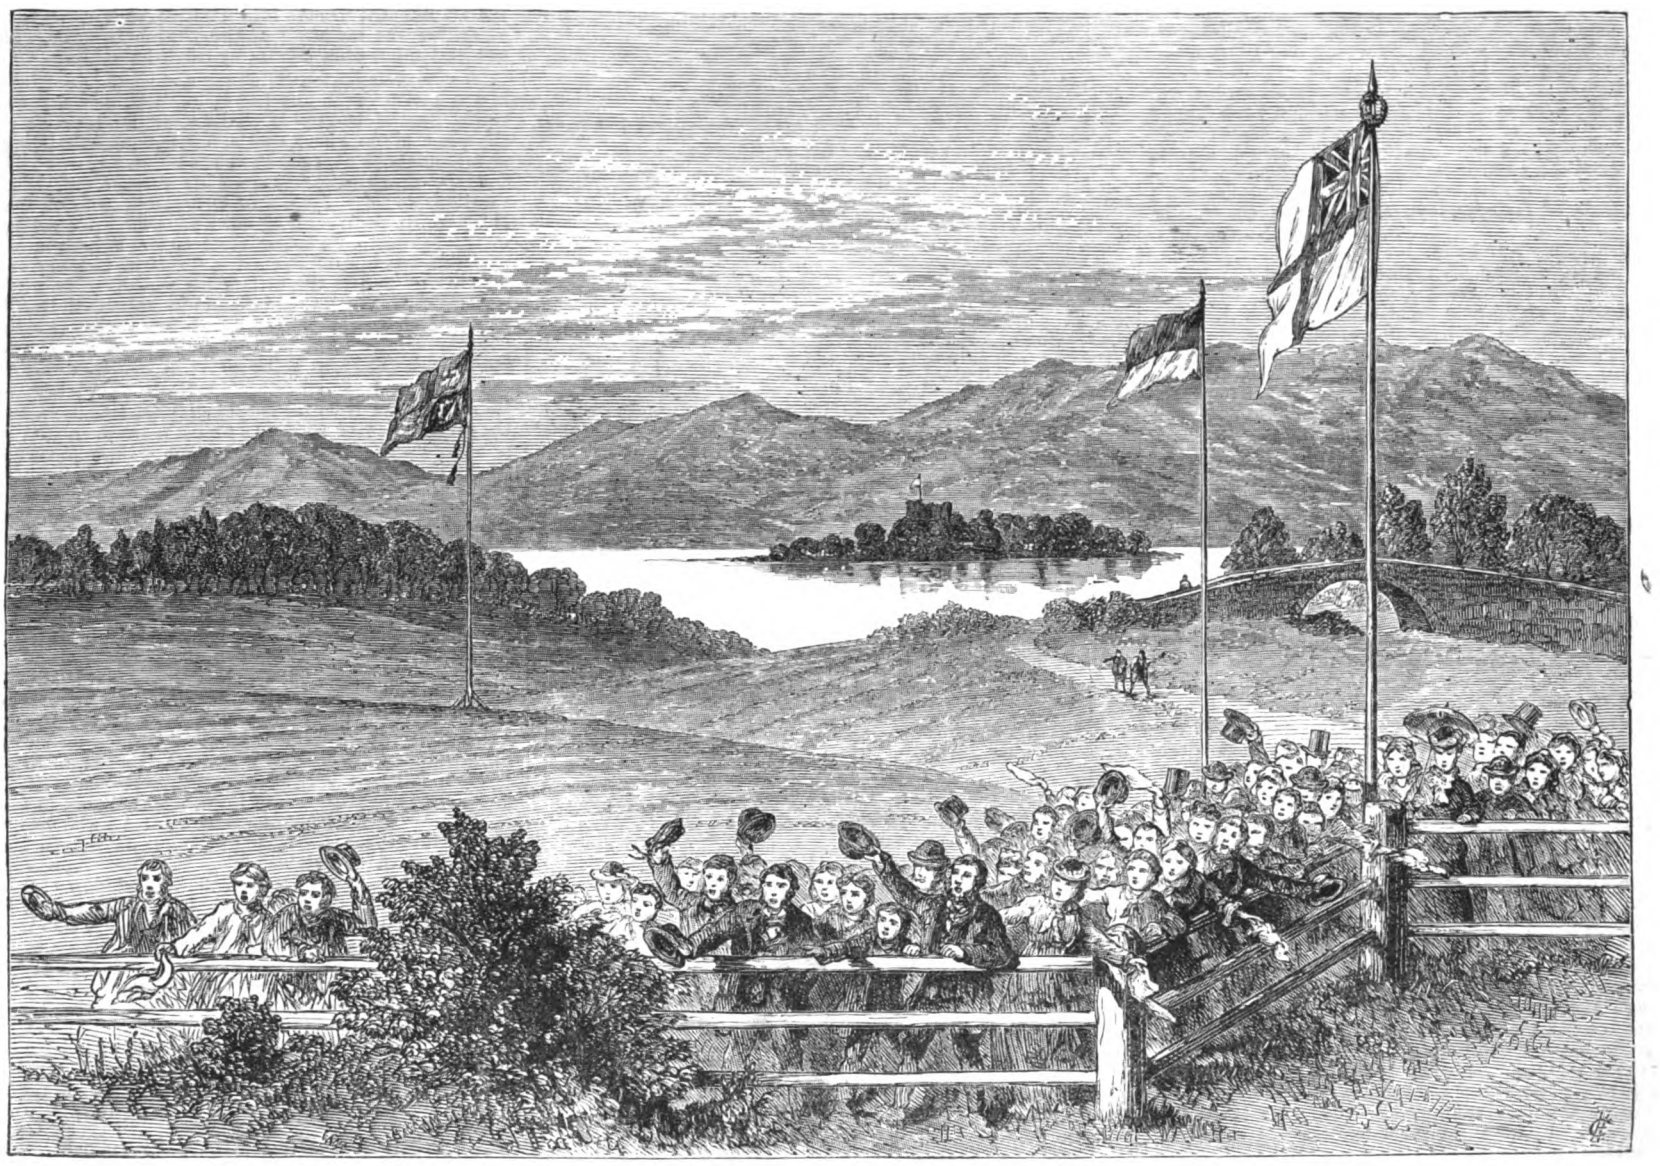
The Church of St. Mary, Southampton, partially restored in memory of the late Bishop Wilberforce, was consecrated on the 19th inst. by the Bishop of Winchester, in the presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury and a large assemblage of clergy and laity.—The large beautiful east window of the lights (the central one 30 feet high) erected in this church, is the special offering of those in the dioceses of Oxford and Winchester who were confirmed by Bishop Wilberforce. The cost has been £353, leaving £112 still to be given. Subscriptions can be sent to the hon. secretary, Miss L. Phillimore, 5, Arlington-street, London, S.W.

The galleries which have so long obstructed the fine old parish church of St. Peter Port, Guernsey, are at last to be removed, and it is expected that the church will be restored ere long. A stained window, representing Mary at the feet of Jesus, has recently been placed in the same church, by Major F. W. Gosselin, late 4th Dragoon Guards, in memory of his late wife, Mary Hutchesson. There now remains but one small window to be filled with stained glass in the whole of this large church.—The Castel church in Guernsey has also been opened, after a thorough restoration. The Hon. James Saumarez has given a window in memory of the late Lady De Saumarez.

The Archbishop of Canterbury on the 11th ult. reopened the parish church of Tonbridge. It is now nearly three years since it was decided to undertake the formidable task of restoring this ancient parish church, at a cost of £12,180. Mr. Ewan Christian was the architect, and Messrs. G. Plunnett and Sons, of Tonbridge, were the contractors. Towards the above sum Mr. Deacon, of Mabledon (the patron), gave £4000; and the fine old tower has been completely restored, and a handsome clock added, at the expense of the Misses Deacon, of 39, Eaton-square. The Company of Skinners (the governors of Tonbridge School), gave £600, as nearly 200 sittings in the church are required for the accommodation of the school. "An Unknown Donor" (a relative of Mr. Deacon's) gave £1500 for the reseating of the church in teak. The whole restoration has been admirably carried through.

A new church at Middleton, an ancient parochial chapelry in the parish of Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland, was consecrated by the Bishop of Carlisle on the 12th ult. It takes the place of an unsuitable and dilapidated building erected about ninety years ago. The funds have been chiefly raised, and the undertaking successfully carried out, through the exertions of Mrs. Moore, of Grimeshill, wife of the present High Sheriff of Westmorland, who is the principal landowner in the township. The architect is Mr. Ferguson, of Carlisle. The east window, of stained glass, is in memory of the late Mr. Moore, and is the gift of his widow. The west window was given by the late Sir Donald Campbell, of Dunstaffnage, whose death took place a few days before the consecration of the church, in memory of his wife (a sister of Mr. Moore) and of their child. The font is the gift of Mr. Moore's only daughter.

The Rev. J. J. Glendinning Nash, M.A., who has lately been promoted from the curacy of Christ Church, Mayfair, to the incumbency of Christ Church, Woburn-square, has been presented with a purse of £100, a pair of Egyptian ornaments in coloured marbles and inlaid hieroglyphics, and a costly library clock, in testimony of the regard in which he has been held during his seven years' ministrations in the parish of Christ Church, Mayfair. He has also been presented by the teachers and scholars of the Sunday-schools, the members of the Wednesday and mothers' meetings, and others with a communion-service of antique designs, in silver-gilt, richly engraved, in remembrance of his untiring labours and unwearied sympathy. A salver, travelling clock in ormolu, and many other tokens of esteem have been presented by other parishioners.



A handsome Munich window (the work of Messrs. Mayer and Co.), representing "Christ's Sermon on the Mount," has been placed in St. Peter's Church, Coggeshall, Essex, by Major G. D. Skingly, in memory of his wife.—Two stained-glass windows, by Messrs. Ward and Hughes, of Frith-street, Soho-square, have been placed by subscription in St. Thomas's and Holy Trinity Churches, Rhyl, North Wales, in memory of the late Vicar, Archdeacon Morgan, M.A., who had been for twenty-three years the hard-working and energetic Incumbent of that town.—A stained-glass window, representing the Crucifixion, has been placed in the east window of the ancient church of Ebchester, Durham. It is by Messrs. Clayton and Bell. The late Mrs. Surtees, of Hamsterley, who was a great benefactress of the church, gave the window as a memorial to her husband and son, but never saw it, as it arrived during her last illness and was first seen at her funeral in March last.—A stained-glass window (by Messrs. Lavers, Barraud, and Westlake) has been placed in the private chapel of Peterborough Palace by the priests and deacons ordained during the ten years of Bishop Magee's episcopate, as a memorial of their ordination and a mark of their appreciation of the Bishop's hospitality and teaching.

Mr. Ackermann has issued a coloured engraving, entitled "The British Army," representing in about fifty figures the most distinctive uniforms in the British military service.

THE GOVERNOR OF EAST ROUMELIA.

The newly created tributary province south of the Balkans, inhabited mostly by Bulgarians and Greeks, though it will be nominally subject to the Sultan of Turkey, will enjoy an independent administration. The Governor who has been appointed for five years to rule over East Roumelia is a Bulgarian named Alexander Vogorides, known to the Turks as Aleko Pasha. His father was the son of a cloth manufacturer at Tirnova, and owed his start in life to a Greek in the service of the Porte who was executed during the Greek revolution. Alexander Vogorides has had a prosperous career. When the late war began he was Turkish Ambassador at Vienna, and apparently devoted to the Ottoman Empire; but the Slav was too strong within him, and shortly after the Russians crossed the Danube he declared openly against the Porte. The Sultan dismissed and recalled him. Instead, however, of returning, as ordered, to Stamboul, Alexander refused, and has since lived out of the Turkish territory, a Panslavist and anti-Turk. It was remarked that he wore the Bulgarian Kalpak, instead of the Turkish fez, when he took his seat as Governor, and that the Turkish flag has not been hoisted over his official residence. The Governor of East Roumelia is in full possession of the executive powers in that province. He is to have at his disposal military and gendarmerie, and to be allowed to call for Turkish troops when necessary, to proclaim a state of siege, to submit financial and other bills to the Provincial Assembly, and to open and close its sessions. The Sultan has the right to occupy the frontiers, to call the Governor-General to account, to nominate his

General Secretary, to sanction the laws voted by the Provincial Assembly, and to approve the officers of administration and justice nominated by the Governor-General. In the administration the Governor-General is to be aided by a Senate consisting of the commander of the militia and gendarmerie, and the heads of the departments of justice, finance, public education, agriculture, commerce, and public works. The making of the laws is vested in the Provincial Assembly. Besides this, East Roumelia has to send Deputies to the Turkish Parliament at Constantinople. The Provincial Assembly has besides the right to modify all laws promulgated by the Porte so far as they regard East Roumelia. East Roumelia will be divided into six circles and twenty-eight districts; the former having each a council. The official language with the Porte is to be Turkish; but in the circles and districts the language will be that of the majority of the inhabitants, whether Bulgarian, Turkish, or Greek. In respect to the financial obligations of the country, the International Commission have estimated the yearly income at eight hundred thousand Turkish pounds. The Governor-General will have to pay three tenths—viz., two hundred and forty thousand Turkish pounds to the Porte. Besides this, East Roumelia will share in proportion to her income in Turkey's financial burdens for the maintenance of order and peace, as well as for the expenses of the national administration. The gendarmerie will, when occasion requires, be helped by the country militia; the latter is also to supply the Turkish troops for defensive purposes. The territorial militia is based on the principle of universal service; that is to say, every man is obliged to serve for four years on active duty.

THE COMÉDIE FRANÇAISE.

We have already published in this Journal the portraits of three lady members of this admirable company of French actors—namely, Mesdemoiselles Sarah Bernhardt, Sophie Croizette, and Jeanne Samary, and of three gentlemen, Messrs. Got, Delaunay, and Mounet-Sully. That of M. Ernest Coquelin is now presented to our readers. His performance of Don Cæsar, in "Ruy Blas," on Monday night, was greatly admired. The following brief memoir of him is borrowed from the "Short Account of the Comédie Française," by M. L. Mayer, general manager of the performances at the Gaiety Theatre in London:—

"M. Ernest Coquelin was born at Boulogne-sur-Mer in 1848. His father was a baker and pastry-cook, and he, like his elder brother, wore the white apron and cap before thinking of the stage. In 1866 he obtained a first accessit at the Conservatoire, and a first prize for comedy in 1867. He made his début at the Odéon in August of the same year, and at the Comédie Française in 1868 in the rôle of Petit-Jean in the 'Plaideurs.' It was only after the siege of Paris, during which M. Coquelin received the military medal for his services in the Garde Mobile, that the incomparable comedian attempted the most important rôles in which he now shines, in the 'Legataire Universel,' the 'Jeux de l'Amour et du Hasard,' the 'Médecin malgré Lui,' the 'Précieuses Ridicules,' 'Le Barbier de Seville,' and the 'Sphinx,' in which he made quite a remarkable creation of the episodic rôle of the Polish musician. Like his brother, M. Coquelin has an excellent comic mask, and he possesses that rare quality of entering, as they say, 'Jusqu' au bout dans la peau du bonhomme.' M. Coquelin was elected sociétaire in January of this present year, simultaneously with Mdlle. Jeanne Samary."

The Portrait is from a photograph by M. Reutlinger, of the Boulevard Montmartre, Paris.

THE EDINBURGH NEW WATERWORKS.

Some account was given in our last of the works recently constructed for the supply of fresh water to the city of Edinburgh. These consist of reservoirs, partly natural and partly artificial, formed in the Moorfoot Hills, at Portmore and Gladhouse, on the border of Midlothian and Peebles-shire, with aqueducts bringing the water to Alnwick Hill; and there will be other reservoirs at Edgelaw and Rosebery. Portmore Reservoir, of which we gave an Illustration, is distant five miles from the Leadburn station of the North British Railway; and Gladhouse is three or four miles higher up the hills. Our second Illustration, presented this week, shows the scene on the opening day, the 13th ult., when the Lord Provost of Edinburgh performed the ceremony of turning on the water. There was a good company of visitors and spectators, besides the members of the Edinburgh City Corporation.

Lord Eversley on Monday resigned the office of Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Hants, and on the motion of Lord Northbrook, seconded by Lord Henry Scott, M.P., Mr. Melville Portal was unanimously elected his successor.

Seven steamers arrived at Liverpool from the United States and Canada last week, bringing 1630 head of cattle and 4827 sheep, the latter number being much greater than any week for some time past. With fresh meat on board four steamers arrived, their collective consignment amounting to 3223 quarters of beef and 915 carcases of mutton. The warm weather necessitates the curtailment of the individual consignments.

The Annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Freemasons of Berks and Bucks was held at Abingdon on Thursday week, under the presidency of Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P., when there was a large assemblage of the Brethren, who were hospitably entertained by Brother Trendell. The business of the province was transacted at the County Hall; and the reports, read by Brother Bradley, Provincial Grand Secretary, showed that Masonry was flourishing in the two counties. After the business the Provincial Grand Master, in the name of the Brethren of the province, presented to Brother William Biggs, of Reading, a testimonial for his valuable services as Provincial Grand Secretary for many years past, the testimonial, consisting of a purse of 100 guineas, a timepiece, and a silver snuff-box, suitably inscribed. At the close of the lodge, the Brethren adjourned to a banquet at the council-chamber.

At the Entrance Examination, recently held at Girton College, Cambridge, an Exhibition of eighty guineas a year for three years, given by the Clothworkers' Company, was awarded to the highest candidate, Miss E. Aitken, a pupil of the North London Collegiate School; and a scholarship of £35 a year for three years, given by Mr. F. D. Moccatta, to the fourth candidate, Miss M. Dawes. Two scholarships of £50 a year for three years, given by the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley and Mr. T. H. Bastard, for competition by pupils of the Girls' Public Day School Company Schools, were awarded to the second and third candidates, Miss J. Anelay, a pupil of the Croydon High School, and Miss P. Hodge, of the Nottinghill High School. The Russell Gurney Scholarship of £45 a year for three years was awarded to Miss E. Steedman, on the result of an examination in history. There has been a large increase in the number of students enrolled this year.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

CONCLUDING NOTICE.

The water-colour drawings need not detain us, as we meet with many of the contributors elsewhere, often better represented. We may, however, commend the following to the visitor's notice. A Bavarian highlander, with his arm in a sling, "Relating his Adventure" (671) to another mountaineer and a young woman seated under the eaves of a châlet, by H. Herkomer. "The Seine Fishers" (697), rather overcharged with colour, by C. Napier Hemy. "Misses" (706), two of Miss Kate Greenaway's naïve little ladies in costumes of our great grandmothers. No. 709, and other studies of Indian figures, by J. Griffiths. "The Passing of Arthur" (723), design for Royal Windsor Tapestry, by Herbert Bone. "Canal at Giudecca" (741), by F. Hampson Jones. "A Welsh Moorland in Autumn" (751), by J. M. Southern. "A Swiss Glacier" (763), by J. W. Smith. "A Running Brook" (769), by Alfred Parsons. "The Shady Way" (780), by E. A. Bearne. "Between the Daylight and the Dark" (796), by Giorgina M. De l'Aubinière. "Toilers of the Woods" (810), by E. A. Waterlow. "Wild Wales" (818), by F. C. Newcome. "September" (842), by A. F. Grace. "Adam" (857), by H. Holiday, a well-drawn study of the nude, but conventional and laboured.

A few minatures by Miss A. Dixon and others reach the average merit of the oil-paintings, notwithstanding the general neglect of this branch of art since the introduction of photography. There are also some good crayon portraits by W. Clarke Wontner, E. Havill, &c.

Among the most important recent engravings exhibited are the mezzotint, by Mr. S. Cosins, after Millais's "Princes in the Tower" (1253), the merits of which are already too well known to need comment. An excellent engraving in line, executed for the Art-Union of London by Mr. Lumb Stocks, after the late E. M. Ward's picture, "Dr. Johnson Waiting for an Audience of Lord Chesterfield" (1232), which will doubtless prove very popular; Mr. Barlow's plates of Mrs. Reiss, after Millais (1254), and "Breakfast in the Highlands," after Phillip (1222), both of which in their painter-like freedom entirely escape all the mechanical formality of engraving; a capital plate by F. Stackpoole, after Mrs. Butler's "Quatre Bras" (1252), the expressions perfectly rendered; the composition is indeed even more acceptable in black and white than in the colouring of the picture; Mr. E. Girardot's adequate version of Long's "Egyptian Feast" (1198); "Our Pets" (1187), a beautiful engraving after Knaus, by M. N. Barthelmass; "Sunshine and Shadow" (1287), by Mr. G. E. Every, after Marcus Stone; "Mrs. Fry Visiting the Prisoners at Newgate" (1242), after Mrs. E. M. Ward; and "Study," after Sir F. Leighton (1258), by Mr. Atkinson; a line engraving by Mr. Doo, after a portrait of himself by the late Sir Francis Grant (1192); and plates by Messrs. Francis Holl, G. Zobel, and others. The noteworthy etchings include one of "Old Putney Bridge" (1233), by Mr. Whistler, which we have already noticed at the Black and White Exhibition; "Sardis" (1237), by Mr. Bradley, after H. Johnson, with a solemn, finely-rendered effect after sundown; "Moonlight" (1269), by C. P. Slocombe; and others by Messrs. J. Ballin, V. Lhullier, L. Richeton, Lowenstam, Willenich, F. Goulding, J. P. Heseltine, A. Mongin, R. W. Macbeth, L. B. Phillips, C. W. M. Lewis, and C. J. Watson.

The show of architectural drawings is meagre, and, as usual, does not adequately represent the great activity in and development of architecture in recent years; still there is sufficient even here to show the rapid progress made in this department of art, and which gave this country so distinguished a position in the great international contest at Paris last year. We should, however, have liked to have had definite draughtsman's reports respecting certain important works in hand. The public would, for instance, have been pleased with evidence from which it might have judged of the restoration of St. Alban's, and of the vexed question of the new roof; and drawings of some of the appropriate detail which Mr. Waterhouse has added, we believe, to his original design for the Natural History Museum; and information touching the Law Courts. Mr. E. M. Barry, too, has abstained altogether from exhibiting. One of the principal works here illustrated is the New Oratory, Brompton, for which there are competitive designs by G. Gilbert Scott—of the proposed interior and of a longitudinal section—A. J. Adams, G. Nattrass, and Herbert A. Gribble, the last (1099) being the selected design. Messrs. Goldie and Child were likewise unsuccessful competitors, though their design for the Dominican Church at Waterford (1134) is an effective Italian example. The style required for the Oratory was—as, of course, was to be expected—Italian; the competitors have all striven to impart characteristics from St. Peter's; and it could not have been very easy for the judges to decide between the rival claimants. Mr. G. Gilbert Scott also sends a design for the "Façade of St. James's Church, Westmoreland-street, Marylebone" (1178).

Mr. Norman Shaw only contributes a view from the south-west of Adcote, Shropshire (1177), which he deposits at the Academy as his "diploma" work on his election to full membership. Simple, elegant, quite appropriate for a country mansion in the situation, it is a happy example of the artist's free treatment of the style of native architecture which his good taste has done so much to bring into vogue. We cannot give similar praise to Mr. Street's design for houses in Cadogan-square (1174), in which there seems to have been an effort to forcibly introduce features too ecclesiastical in character. Mr. Street is, however, at home in designs for country churches, of which we may specially commend "St. Peter's, Bournemouth" (1158). Another (1107) has more of the architect's peculiarities. Mr. Waterhouse shows some good illustrations of the use of terra-cotta and brick, in "Newcourt, Carey-street" (1094), and "Offices of Providential Assurance Company, Holborn" (1101). We should, however, prefer less severe angularity in the enrichment and more of the flowing playfulness of some of the examples at Bologna, Verona, Padua, and other parts of North Italy. His "New Buildings, Pembroke College, Cambridge" (1102) should not be overlooked. Other works of interest and merit are "The Tower of St. Paul's Church, Manchester" (1112), by J. Oldrid Scott; "The Divinity and Literary Schools for the University of Cambridge" (1117), by Basil Champneys; "Municipal Buildings and Free Library, Leeds" (1114), by G. Corson; and works by Messrs. G. George and Peto, Messrs. A. Dunn and E. Hanson, Mr. J. D. Sedding, and Mr. J. Sulman. Mr. Gilbert Redgrave's design for the English half-timbered house in the Avenue des Nations at the Paris Exhibition is also here.

To Mr. W. Scott's "Design for Provincial Townhall" (1144) we would refer more particularly, because, notwithstanding its imposing mass, and the marked merit of details, it seems to take the wrong direction observable in the designs of several large public buildings recently completed or in progress. The architects of the designs we refer to select incongruous elements from different styles, or they adopt a "transitional style" (a phrase which by-the-way almost in itself involves a fallacy), or they copy a building that has been modified in course of erection to meet unforeseen requirements; or a congeries of buildings erected at different times, and of course they are often obliged to make further adaptations of their models to provide for modern wants. The idea is to secure picturesque "surprise;" but the result is too often mere higgledy-piggledy fortuitous discordancy. We hold that such "picturesqueness" is hardly more admissible in architecture than in the restricted field of sculpture. In all pure and fine masterpieces of architecture, whatever the style, you will always find symmetry, balance, and harmonious relationship throughout, even if only suggested where parts are omitted or unfinished. And these immutable truths of all art are as much in force now as they were in the days of Ictinus, or when the mediæval architects reared the cathedrals of Germany, France, and England, or the Mohammedans constructed the graceful Alhambra and the lovely Taj-Mahal, or Michael Angelo realised his dream of hanging the Pantheon-like dome of St. Peter's in the air.

The annual "speeches" were held at Rugby last Saturday, and the event of the day was the opening of the new Temple Library and Museum. The museum is at present occupied by a loan collection of pictures and objects of art, lent partly by the neighbouring noblemen and gentlemen, Lords Warwick, Craven, Spencer, &c., and partly by the British Museum and the authorities of the South Kensington Museum.

The Earl of Beaconsfield has somewhat contemptuously declined the gold laurel wreath exhibited in the Crystal Palace as having been bought with "the people's tribute" of 52,800 pennies collected by Mr. Tracy Turnerelli. The following letter to Mr. Turnerelli, which he publishes, explains his Lordship's reasons:—"10, Downing-street, Whitehall, June 16, 1879.—Sir,—Lord Beaconsfield desires me to inform you that he has received and carefully considered your letter of the 8th inst., in which you ask him to name a day for the presentation of a laurel wreath procured by the contributions of upwards of 50,000 of the people, which have been collected, according to your statement, with 'immense labour and never-yet-exampled efforts.' His Lordship has, moreover, had before him the correspondence which during the last five years you have addressed to him, and he notices especially your complaints that your services have received no recognition at the hands of the leaders of the Conservative party, and the expression of your hope that 'sooner or later they will meet with reward.' Although Lord Beaconsfield would fully appreciate and value a spontaneous gift from his fellow-subjects belonging to a class in which he has ever taken the warmest interest, he cannot but feel that, being himself intimately connected with honours and rewards, he is precluded by the spirit in which you have previously addressed him from accepting a gift thus originated, and proffered in a manner which he cannot deem satisfactory.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, Algernon Turnor."

CHESS.

L W T (St. Leonard's).—In the solution of No. 1841 White's answer to 2. B to K B 5th is 3. Q takes P, mate. Why, therefore, should he stop to capture the Bishop, as your analysis suggests?

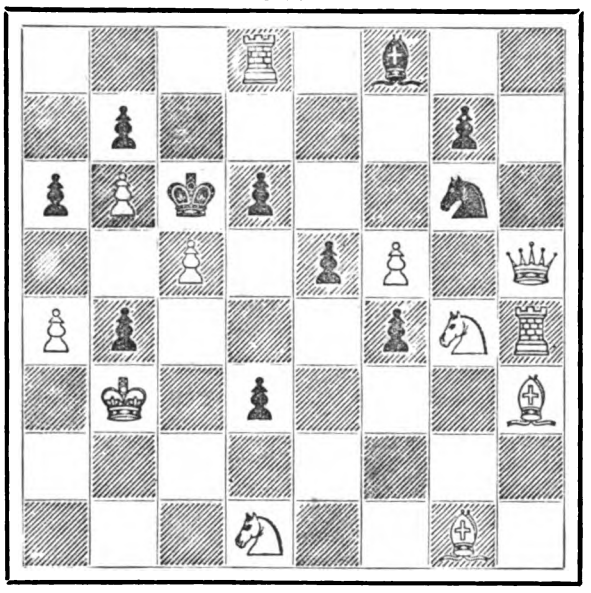
J G F (Ramsgate).—Problem No. 1842 cannot be solved, as you propose, by 1. K to B 3rd, as a little further examination will satisfy you.

A H (Swansea).—The "Evans" game is interesting, and it shall receive due honours. Mr. Morphy resides in New Orleans, but has abandoned the practice of chess.

H B (Hampton-hill).—Your letter was destroyed when read, and we are therefore now unable to deny or affirm your claim to have solved No. 1841. If you were to write three weeks hence to say you had solved No. 1844 we should, in the ordinary course of things, be placed in a similar dilemma, but as your letter is before us we take the opportunity of informing you that the problem cannot be solved by 1. Q to B 8th, as you propose.

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1842 received from H de W (Marseilles), R A Scott, and Dudu.

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1843 received from Carlos (Lille), Chileno, Ireleth, Beatrice (Ealing), J G Finch, G Rushby, P le Page, S W Lock, B Bohn, jun, v d Kamer (Middelburg), and Laura Greaves.



Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1844 received from Coplapino, Ireleth, E H H V, W S B, Lulu, J G Finch, Norman Rumbelow, W Byrce, Alpha, Cant, Nodrog, C F Jones, Elsie V, T Barrington, G Fosbrooke, N Warner, T W H, R Ingersoll, H Langford, B L Dyke, H Barnet, W Warren, C Elmore, N Cator, Helen Lee, B Jessop, Frances R, G L Mayne, D Templeton, Liz, An Old Hand, F R Jeffrey, H Brewster, D W Kell, M O'Halloran, G H V, W Leeson, East Marden, and E Elsbury.

Note.—Many of our regular solvers have sent proposed solutions of this fine composition beginning 1. Q to R 7th, 1. Q to B 8th, 1. Q takes Kt, 1. R to Q 4th (ch), and 1. R to K 5th (ch), all of which are very wide of the mark. The answer to 1. Q takes Kt is B takes R, to 1. Q to R 7th is 1. P to K 4th. If White play 1. Q to B 8th, Black's reply is 1. B to B 2nd, followed by 2. B to B 3rd; the checks of the Book are so obviously weak that it should be unnecessary to point out the defences.

Solution of Problem No. 1843.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to B 4th	B to Q 4th
2. R to K B 3rd	Any move
3. Q mates.

By the Rev. W. Leeson.
BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

MATCH BETWEEN MESSRS. MASON AND POTTER.
The fourth Game played at the City Club on June 23.
(Irregular Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. P.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to Q 4th	P to K 3rd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
3. P to K 3rd	P to Q Kt 3rd
4. B to Q 3rd

It is the prevailing custom to play 4. B to K 2nd, when the defence adopts the Queen's Fianchetto early in the opening; but the move in the text is quite as safe, and is certainly more attacking.

4.	B to Kt 2nd
5. Castles	B to K 2nd
6. P to B 4th	Castles
7. P to Q R 3rd

After the game Mr. Potter remarked that he did not think this move satisfactory, although it must eventually aid any attack that may be obtained. Without going into the general principle, it may be said of the particular instance that it caused no loss of time in the shape the opening eventually assumed.

7.	P to B 4th
8. Kt to B 3rd	P to Q 4th
9. P to Q Kt 3rd	Kt to B 3rd

At this point the position is precisely the same as one occurring in the thirteenth game of the match between Staunton and St. Amant, although brought about by a different order of moves.

10. B to Kt 2nd

Here the Frenchman played 10. P takes Q P, with the view of obstructing the range of the adverse Bishop; and we believe that move, followed by 11. B to Kt 2nd, is the best line of play.

10.	Q P takes P

The right move, and one that, if correctly followed up, should have given the second player the best of the opening.

11. Kt P takes P	Q R to B sq

This loses time; whereas 11. P takes Q P, followed, if White play 12. P takes P, by 12. Kt to Q R 4th, secures him the superior game.

12. P to Q 5th

A well-timed stroke, that changes the aspect of the game materially, and turns it altogether in White's favour.

12.	P takes P
13. P takes P	Kt to Q R 4th
14. P to K 4th	P to B 5th
15. B to B 2nd	B to B 4th

The time limit in this match is one hour to each player for fifteen moves: and here the sand-glass noted the expiration of Black's first hour in the game.

16. P to K R 3rd	R to K sq
17. R to K sq

With this move Mr. Potter exhausted his first hour.

17.	P to Q R 3rd

Mr. Mason's best form is not seen in this encounter. He lost a "time" on the eleventh move and here repeats the error, because he might have played the P to Q Kt 4th at once. White cannot capture it with the Knight, on account of the reply Q to Kt 3rd.

18. Q to Q 2nd	P to Q Kt 4th
19. Q R to Q sq	Q to Kt 3rd
20. P to K 5th

White has now a finely developed game, with both Bishops in position for an assault upon the adverse King's quarters; and the force and precision of the attack that ensues is admirable.

20.	Kt to Q 2nd
21. Kt to K 4th	B to B sq
22. Q Kt to Kt 5th	P to R 3rd

22. P to Kt 3rd would have been equally unavailing, for then follows:—

23. Kt takes B P	K takes Kt
24. P to K 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq
25. P takes Kt	R takes R (ch)
26. Q takes R	R to Q sq

As good as anything else.

27. Q to K 6th (ch), and White has a winning position.

23. Kt takes P	Kt to B 4th
24. P to K 6th	K Kt to Kt 6th
25. Q to B 3rd	B takes Q P
26. Kt takes P (ch)

Black resigned, because, if he now play 26. K to R sq, White continues—

27. Kt to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt sq
28. K Kt to Kt 6th, and Black can only avert the mate for the moment by sacrificing his Queen for the K Kt P.

Since our last report of the match between Messrs. Mason and Potter, the third, fourth, and fifth games have been played. In the third game Mr. Mason had the move, and Mr. Potter adopted the French defence with a novel continuation in the opening, and scored the first victory in the match in thirty-two moves. The fourth game, an irregular opening, was also won by Mr. Potter; and this, the most interesting of the series, is given above. The fifth game was a longer struggle. Mr. Potter, adopting the Sicilian defence combined with the King's Fianchetto, obtained a good opening; but Mr. Mason, playing throughout with consummate judgment, won the game in forty-one moves. The sixth game was begun on Monday last, and, after five hours' play, was adjourned to Wednesday, owing to the lateness of the hour, the position presenting a difficult end-game, but, as we think, in favour of our American Cousin. The score as we go to press stands—Mr. Potter, 2; Mr. Mason, 1, drawn, 2; and one unfinished.

Mr. Gastineau was fortunate in selecting Saturday last for his annual garden-party to the chessplayers of London. The prolonged severity of our Summer was on that day relieved by soft winds and genial sunshine, and these fleeting blessings, supplementing a cordial welcome from the host, imparted to the occasion all that was required to complete the enjoyment of his visitors. The City Club was represented by Messrs. Blackburne, Down, Heywood, Macdonnell, Moffat, Murton, Potter, and many others, who rendered due honours to the toast of the occasion, "Prosperity to the City Chess Club," proposed by Mr. Gastineau and responded to by Messrs. Murton and Potter. The only other toast permitted at these meetings, the health of the host, was proposed by Mr. Macdonnell, after which the guests returned to the gardens and resumed their favourite pastime. Among the noteworthy games played during the meeting was one between Messrs. Mason and Watts consulting on one side, and Messrs. Potter and Heywood on the other, which resulted in a draw.

The second tourney of the British Problem Association is announced, and the conditions are that for the best set of three problems, two to four moves, a prize of £5 will be given; for the second, a prize of £1; for the third, a copy of "Chess Gems," by Mr. J. A. Miles; and a special prize of £2, presented by Professor Tomlinson, F.R.S., for the best problem contributed to the tourney. The problems are to be sent, under the usual conditions, to Mr. Taylor, 63, Malvern-road, Dalston, on or before Sept. 30 next; and the judges are Messrs. Andrews and Pierce, with Mr. Grimshaw as umpire.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Nov. 20, 1877) of Mr. John Foster, late of Prospect House, Clayton, Bradford, Yorkshire, who died on March 6 last, has been proved by William Foster, Johnston Jonas Foster, Abraham Briggs Foster, and John Foster, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator bequeaths among other legacies £1000 to his executors upon trust to pay the income to the Curate or Scripture Reader for the time being of the district parish of Queensbury, Halifax; £1000 each to the Halifax Infirmary and Dispensary and the Bradford Infirmary and Dispensary; £4000 to his executors upon trust to apply the same as they shall think proper and discreet for the benefit of Queensbury; £250 to the trustees of the Baptist Chapel at Queensbury upon trust to pay the income to the minister for the time being of the said chapel; to his wife he leaves £500, and for life Prospect House with the furniture and effects, and £2000 per annum if she shall so long remain his widow; upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Briggs Hirst, £20,000; upon trust for his daughters, Mrs. Mary Ann Bankart, Mrs. Ruth Anderton, Mrs. Hannah Stansfeld, and Mrs. Jane Norris, £25,000 each; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his four sons.

The will (dated July 18, 1878) of Mr. Alexander McDonald, late of No. 30, Pembridge-gardens, Bayswater, who died on May 28 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Mrs. Anna Louisa McDonald, the widow, and John James Hamilton, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £180,000. The testator gives to his wife £500, his furniture, plate, pictures, and household effects, and an annuity of £1500, in addition to the money he had covenanted to pay under their antenuptial contract; to his executor, Mr. Hamilton, and to his cousin, Miss Mary Ann Watt, £1000 each; to his son-in-law, Mr. Myburgh, a freehold house in Queensborough-terrace, and £5000; upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Bonham Carter, and her children, in addition to her marriage settlement, various sums of railway stock amounting to upwards of £34,000; and the residue of his property, both real and personal, upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Myburgh, and her children, also in addition to her marriage settlement. Should both his daughters die without leaving a child who shall live to attain a vested interest in the testator's property, there is an ultimate trust, as to such part of his property as may by law be bequeathed for charitable purposes, in favour of the hospitals within five miles of Charing-cross; and as to the other part of his property, subject to legacies of £20,000 each to his two sons-in-law, in favour of his next of kin.

The will (dated Dec. 17, 1878) of Mr. George Sandars, late of Beechwood, Tonbridge Wells, who died on May 14 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by John Edward Walker, Edward Bury, and Samuel Sandars, the son, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Arabella Sandars, £500, certain furniture, plate, pictures, horses and carriages, and the income of £10,000 for life; ample provision is made for his three daughters, Jane, Elizabeth, and Mary Arabella; and there are legacies to his executors, relatives, servants, and others; the residue of his property he gives to his said son. The deceased was a J.P. and D.L. for the West Riding of Yorkshire, and also a J.P. for Essex; and he sat in Parliament as member for Wakefield in the Conservative interest from 1847 to 1857, when he retired.

The will (dated Dec. 3, 1851) of Mrs. Caroline Cracroft, late of No. 37, Albemarle-street, who died on Jan. 3 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Mrs. Anna Maria Ward, the sister and next of kin of the deceased, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testatrix's husband, Captain Peter Cracroft, R.N., the sole legatee named in the will, having died in her lifetime, the whole of her property becomes divisible among her next of kin, according to the statute for the distribution of intestate's effects.

The will (dated Aug. 13, 1874) with two codicils (dated July 8, 1875, and Oct. 4, 1877) of Mr. Joshua Wimbush, late of No. 6, Cadogan-place, and of Halkin-street, Belgrave-square, jobmaster, who died on May 18 last, was proved on the 9th ult. by Mrs. Annie Wimbush, the widow, Henry Wimbush, the brother, and Miss Janie Tomlinson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator gives to his wife absolutely his residence in Cadogan-place, with the furniture and effects, his private horses and carriages, and £5000; to his son Joshua Herbert Wimbush his property at Drewton and Wallingford, Yorkshire; to his other children, £15,000 between them; and some other legacies. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood; and then as to the residue of the realty for his said son, and as to the residue of the personalty for all his children in equal shares.

The will (dated April 10, 1879) of Mr. Charles Brooke, F.R.S., late of No. 16, Fitzroy-square, who died on May 17 last at Weymouth, was proved on the 9th ult., by Charles Kennedy Brooke and Henry James Brooke, the sons, and Walter Stennett Prichard, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Mary Ann Brooke, his furniture and effects, £500, a life insurance policy, and an annuity of £400; to his executors £100 each; and there are special gifts to each of his children. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be divided between his two sons Charles Kennedy and Henry James, and his two daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth Eardley Wilmot and Mrs. Emma Maria Sewell.

The will (dated May 17, 1879) of Mr. Lewis Jacobs, late of No. 55, Gloucester-terrace, Hyde Park, who died on May 18 last, at No. 11, Pembridge-square, was proved on the 7th ult. by Matthew Henry Jacob, the son, Jonah Nathan, and Lionel Van Oven, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator leaves to his said son £5000 and his freehold property at Fobling, Essex; £3000 upon trust for his son Nathaniel; £250 to be distributed by his executors among such charities as they may deem desirable; and a few other legacies. The residue is to be divided between his son Simeon and his daughter Miriam.

The will (dated May 22, 1878) with a codicil (dated May 7, 1879) of Mr. James Hebdin, late of Marden Villa, Lee Park, Kent, who died on May 13 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by James Pilgrim and Thomas Marsh, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £6000. Among the legacies, there is a bequest of £200, free of duty, to the West Kent Dispensary; and the residue of the personalty the testator leaves to King's College Hospital, London.

Mr. W. H. Smith on Thursday week presented the prizes for seamanship and navigation on board the training-ship Conway, in the Mersey, and in his address to the boys impressed upon them the value of doing with British honour and faithfulness their duty in life.

Mr. M. T. Bass, M.P., the senior member for the borough of Derby, formally handed over to the Corporation on Saturday the new Free Library, which he has built and furnished entirely at his own expense. The day was observed as a half-holiday. Mr. Bass, who is in his eightieth year, seemed in excellent health. The cost of the building and fittings is £20,000.

1450 Shares of £10 each in the IMPERIAL TRAMWAYS COMPANY, LIMITED .. at £10
All the above Shares are fully paid up and the liability limited.

THE CALAIS TRAMWAYS COMPANY, LIMITED.

Full particulars of this Company, together with a Map of the Tramways, can be had on application as below, and the Directors of the Tramways and General Works Company have no hesitation in recording their belief that this little Company will prove as successful as any other with which they have been connected.

THE SWANSEA IMPROVEMENTS AND TRAMWAYS COMPANY.

Although this Company has been in existence longer than many of the Tramways which are now paying good dividends, and whose shares accordingly stand at very high premiums, its Directors have not yet been able to pay a dividend to its shareholders, in consequence of the many difficulties which had to be overcome in dealing with the Swansea Corporation and certain owners of land, whose property this Company was bound to acquire to enable them to carry out the necessary improvements; but, as will be seen by the last report, the most important of these difficulties have at last been overcome, and matters are in a fair way of being immediately settled; so that the development of the Company should now make rapid progress.

The division of the Shares into two distinct classes—viz., Tramway and Land Shares—cannot fail to improve their price.

THE IMPERIAL TRAMWAYS COMPANY, LIMITED.

Now that the five lines owned by this Company—viz., the Gloucester, Reading, Dublin-Southern, Middlesborough, and Corris Tramways—are at work, these Shares cannot fail to develop into a satisfactory investment. Were it not for the great delay in completing the lines, caused by the frost and snow of the recent winter, they would doubtless command a premium of 15 or 20 per cent.

Application for Shares in the proportion of five Calais, five Swansea, and one Imperial, or any multiple of these figures, will receive a preference in considering the applications, which must be made on the accompanying form and forwarded to the Secretary of The Tramways and General Works Company, Limited, at their Offices, 57, Moorgate-street, E.C., London, where particulars of the Calais Tramways Company, the last Report and Accounts published by the Swansea Company, and particulars of the lines comprised in the Imperial System, can also be obtained.

The Shares will be placed in the names of the purchasers free of all expenses.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1879.

Occasionally there pass away from contact with the life and the affairs of this world spirits which leave behind them a fragrance of reputation so delightful and so strong that it long lingers in the memory of survivors, increasing rather than diminishing with the lapse of time. A moral aroma fills, as it were, the atmosphere and becomes perceptible by all classes of the community. One sets about his ordinary engagements with a suffused consciousness of the final departure from amongst us of some great and good denizen of earth, and with a sense of missing an object of veneration with which one has become familiar. The blow inflicted by the first news of his death is a shock which, for a while, prevents reflection, and it is only after recovery from that blow that one becomes fairly sensible of the loss that has been sustained. The burial of Lord Lawrence on Saturday last in Westminster Abbey has been followed by such a season of reflection. We begin to estimate the man at his true worth. Being withdrawn from us, he is more present to our thoughts. We look at him as he was with more lively sympathies than we did when he "lived and moved and had his being" in our midst. We can now discern more correctly than before his true proportions. We can do that homage to his memory which we could hardly, without some tinge of adulation, have paid to himself. Ours rather than his, is the benefit to be derived from the reverential regard which we show to him. In contemplating moral greatness there is sure to be some practical assimilation, be it ever so slight, to the portrait which best expresses it.

Lord Lawrence was best known in England by those who had studied the affairs of India. But acquaintance with his character has not been confined exclusively to such as have taken more than ordinary interest in the modern history of the Eastern Peninsula. He mingled a good deal in the higher social movements of this country. The most successful Viceroy of India, or, perhaps we may venture to say, the saviour of British ascendancy in the East, did not think it beneath him, on his return to England, to preside for three years over the London School Board. In the matter of education he had always been what some men might call an enthusiast. He had been so in India, both as Chief Commissioner of the Punjaub and afterwards as Governor-General. His weight of character and his proved services in the cause of popular education enabled him to conduct the London School Board through its first three years of existence with dignity and success. He was no mere figure-head of the new organisation. He assuaged by his courtesy of demeanour party heats. To a large extent, he composed sectarian feelings, and amalgamated, as fellow-workmen in a great cause, men who, perhaps, under other guidance, might have been tempted to proceed to hostile extremities, and thereby to have frustrated the end for which they had been elected to office. His singleness of view, his broad common sense, the wide range of his sympathies, and his invariable courtesy, contributed not a little to shape the Board upon a general model well adapted for its purpose; and by that subtle influence, that firmness of will, which are often most effective when least obtrusive, he guided its earlier, and therefore its most critical, proceedings with a wisdom which could not fail to leave its mark on the state of popular education in the metropolis.

The principal sphere, however, of Lord Lawrence's work was India, to which he was sent out when a mere lad. John Lawrence, unlike Sir Henry, his brother, remained until the close of his career a civilian. He had in him the elements which would probably have developed into fame had he devoted himself to the military profession. He might have become a great general. He had the best instincts of a true commander of men. He knew how to win men's confidence, and to impress upon men's minds the bias which he desired them to take. The extraordinary service he rendered to India during the Sepoy Mutiny was but the outcome of a previous career of disinterestedness and self-discipline. Those who have made themselves thoroughly masters of the history of his government of the Sikhs, then newly conquered, can hardly be surprised at the feat which he accomplished in sending troops to the aid of her Majesty's Forces before Delhi. The unselfishness of his statesmanship and the force of his will, at once generous and irresistible, charmed the subjects of his administration, and disposed them to respond to his confidence with theirs. No man better than he knew when and where to repose trust, and no man more than he tested, and successfully tested, the strength of this instrument. His insight into character was keen; his personal integrity was without spot; and, as he had nothing selfish in his aims, so nothing hid from his view the proper bearing of his obligations. And what he judged to be right he never neglected to do. He had the courage of his convictions. His industry was untiring. His research was boundless. His sense of justice was ever operative in guiding his counsels; and at the base of all lay a manly piety which was as catholic in its tone as it was fervent in its spirit.

As Viceroy of India, Lord Lawrence's opportunities of public service were peculiar rather than conspicuous. It was given to him to sway the Queen's authority over a yet seething and tumultuous mass of humanity. The Mutiny, indeed, was over when he once again set out to India in obedience to the Queen's request. But the discontent which still pervaded the Province of Bengal, to say nothing of the unsettled feelings of the native Chiefs, rendered his task one of superlative difficulty. How far he succeeded we all know, but at what cost to himself most people are ignorant, for he was not one to parade either his cares or his realisations. He has been taken from us at a moment when it might seem that he could ill be spared—taken before he had reached the natural maturity of man's days. But he has given to this and to succeeding generations a truly noble example of what a public man should be, and a splendid illustration of the qualities which best befit him for patriotic deeds. Since the ever-to-be-lamented decease of the Prince Consort England has lost no man whom she has more reason to mourn than Lord Lawrence. In looking back upon his career, we find no words more apt to express the emotions it has stirred within us than those with which Dean Stanley closed his eloquent funeral discourse on Sunday last—"Farewell, great Pro-Consul of our English Christian Empire! Where shall we look in the times that are coming for that disinterested love, that abounding knowledge of India like his? Where shall we find that resolution, mind, and countenance, which seemed to cry to us,

This rock shall fly
From its firm base as soon as I!"

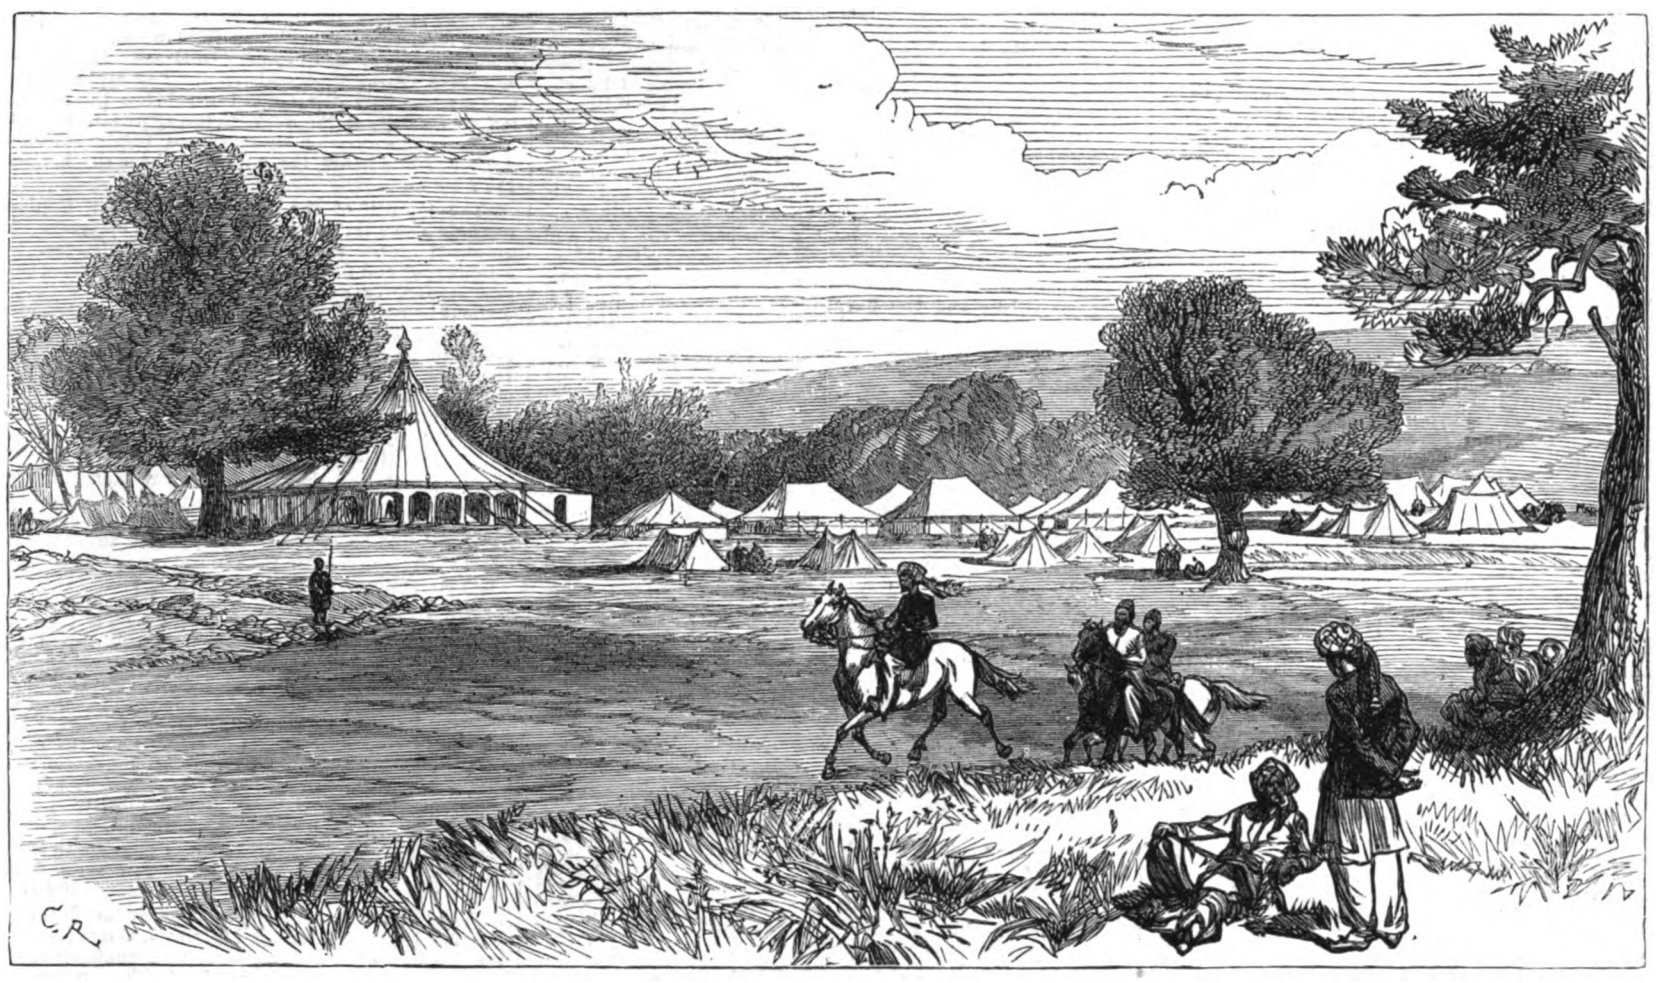
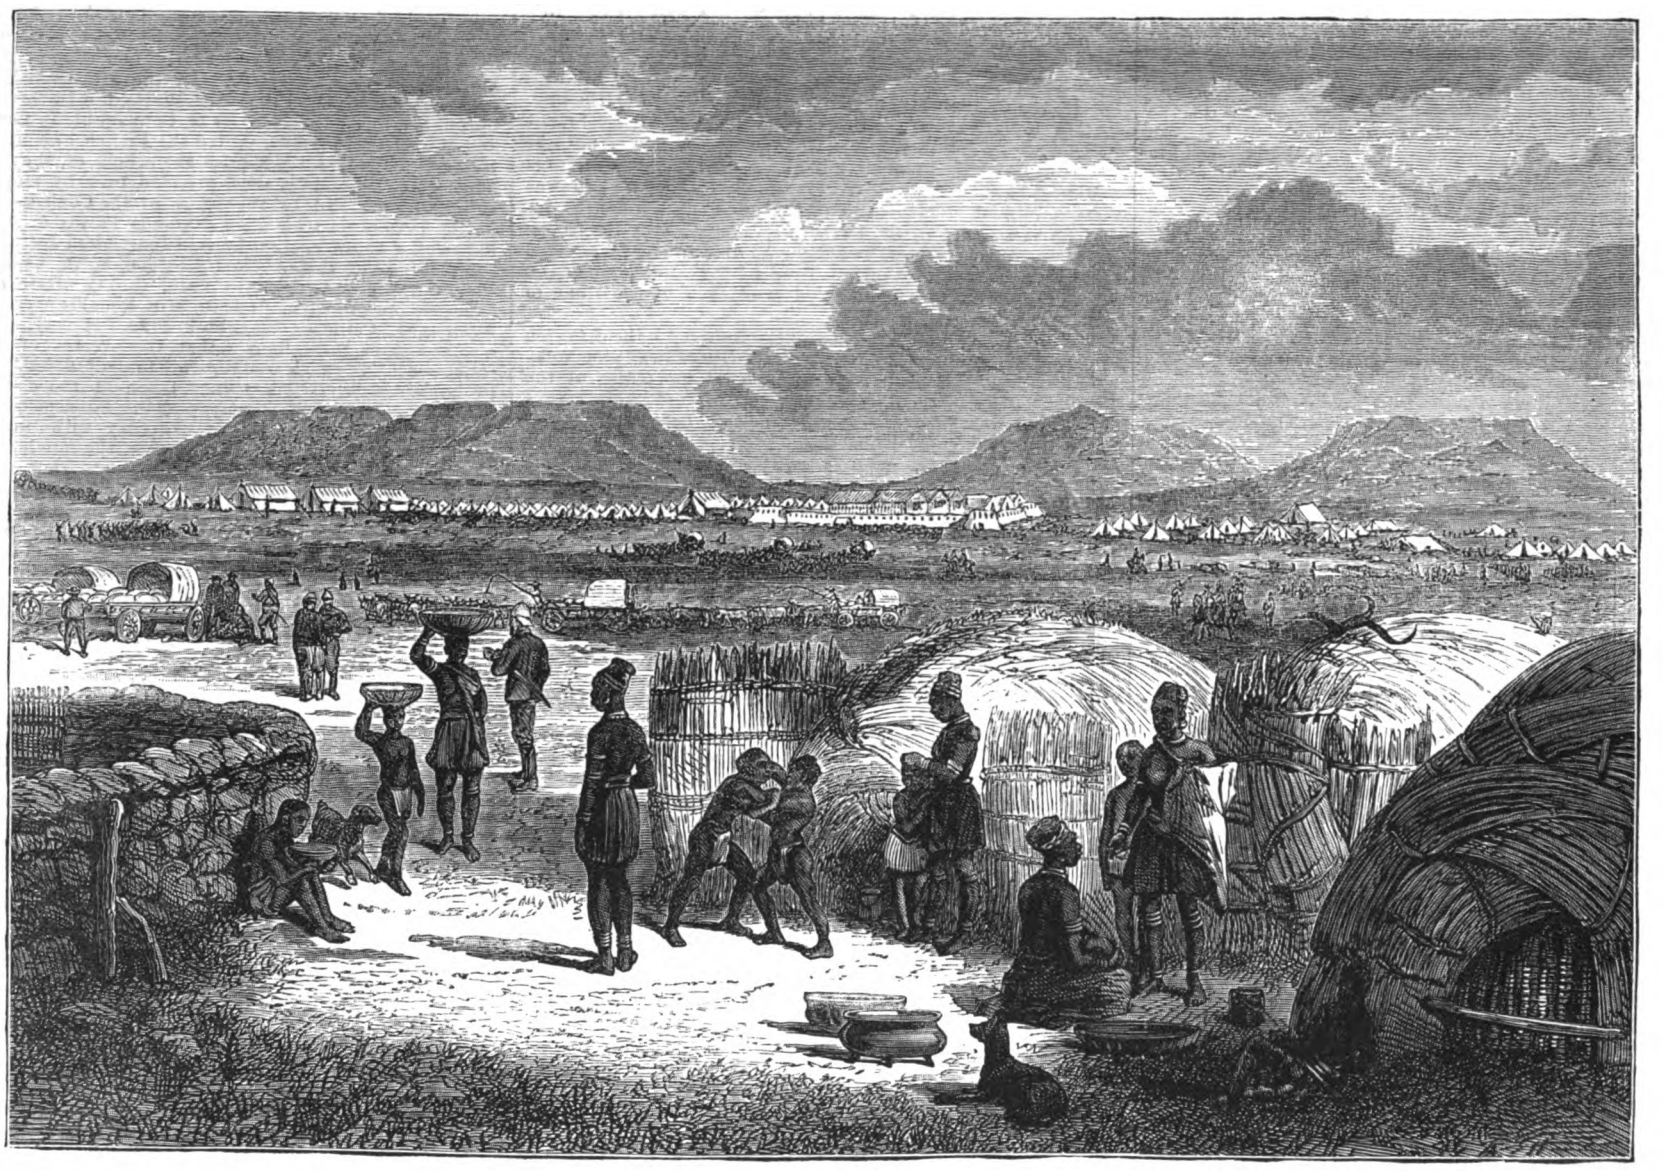
The Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers have recently made their annual awards, out of special funds bequeathed for the purpose, for approved Original Communications read and discussed at the weekly meetings during the past session, or printed in the "Minutes of Proceedings" without being read, as well as for papers submitted by students. From the Telford Fund medals and premiums have been bestowed on Messrs. G. F. Deacon, J. B. Mackenzie, J. N. Douglass, A. F. Blandy, E. Dobson, J. Price, J. E. Williams, G. W. Sutcliffe, E. Sang, W. G. Laws, and G. Higgin. The Manby Premium has fallen to Mr. J. P. Griffith. Miller Prizes have been adjudged to the following students:—Messrs. A. C. Hurtzig, R. H. Read, J. C. Mackay, and P. W. Britton.



The great rose show of the Royal Horticultural Society opened on Tuesday at South Kensington, and was one of the most magnificent collections ever seen at these gardens. Messrs. W. Paul and Son, of Waltham, displayed an entire rose garden, nearly 200 ft. in length, the roses being arranged on the grass. The pelargoniums were also unusually fine. The entries in all classes were very satisfactory, and a large number of persons visited the show during the day, amongst them being the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. On Wednesday there was an evening fête, for which great preparations had been made. Coloured lamps were hung from tree to tree and on the trees themselves. The fountain was hung with coloured lamps, and two electric lights were reflected in the cascade beneath the Prince Consort's Memorial. Every hour the gardens were illuminated with coloured fires. The tents and conservatory were very crowded. In one part madrigals and glees were sung; in another military bands played. In the upper arcades the phonograph was exhibited, and Edison's loud-speaking telephone "flashed a saucy message to and fro." In the tents the flowers of the great rose show were on view beneath the dazzling radiance of the electric light.

The London Commissioners of the Sydney International Exhibition, 1879, met on the 3rd inst. at 5, Westminster-chambers, Sir Daniel Cooper in the chair. Communications referring to the musical arrangements in the Exhibition, which are to be on an extensive scale, were received from the Commissioners at Sydney. A report was presented from Mr. G. Montefiore-Levi, the Commissioner at Brussels, furnishing particulars of the whole Belgian collections, the shipment of which has been completed. Sir Daniel Cooper reported that the City of London has taken out the whole of the British pictures intended for the Exhibition. Mr. Edmund Johnson referred to the loan collection from the London School Board, in regard to which all arrangements have been completed. It was announced that, in view of the continued demand for freight for goods intended for the Exhibition, the Orient Company has arranged for the dispatch of an extra steamer, the Sultan, to leave London on July 28, proceeding out viâ the Suez Canal.



On Monday morning the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, opened the new wing of the French Hospital in Leicester-place. In the afternoon their Royal Highnesses, with the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Leopold, and other Royal persons, visited the French Fête at the Albert Hall, which was attended by the whole of the Corps Diplomatique. The stalls were presided over by many English ladies of rank and by the ladies of the Comédie Française. Mdlle. Bernhardt took £256, Madame Favart £230 (including the sale for £30 of Bastien-Lepage's portrait of Jeanne Samary), the Comtesse de Montebello took £200, Mdlle. Croizette £200, the Marquise de Ferronays £140, the Comtesse de Florian £100, Madame de Bylandt £140, Mrs. Ronalds over £100, Mrs. Adair £91, Countess Steenbock £122. It may, perhaps, be assumed from these figures that the average of the twenty stalls was £150, which would give a total of £3000. To this is to be added £1000 for money taken at the doors, and an unknown amount (which may, perhaps, be £2000) for tickets. The fair was continued on Tuesday with undiminished spirit. From a pecuniary point of view, the fête has been most successful—Mr. Browning writes to state that the French Hospital and Dispensary in Leicester-place, for which this fête was held, is quite distinct from the French Protestant Hospital, Victoria Park-road, of which he is the hon. secretary, which was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1718, and still continues an historic memorial of the Huguenot immigration into this country, and an asylum for the poor and aged among the descendants of the French Protestant refugees.

The first stone of a new wing of the Royal Hospital for Incurables was laid on Tuesday afternoon by the Prince of Wales. The site of this institution is a spot just beyond Putney-heath, commanding splendid views of Surrey scenery. The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived punctually at two o'clock, and were at once conducted by the president, Mr. Andrew, the secretary, and the officers of the institution, to the tent erected for the occasion. The tent, which was one of unusually large dimensions, was fully occupied; and, after the arrival of their Royal Highnesses, the whole assembly, led by the choir of the neighbouring Trinity Church, sung the hymn, "Let all men praise the Lord." The Archbishop of Canterbury having prayed for the success of the undertaking, Mr. George F. White, chairman of the committee, addressed the Prince of Wales, and said that the object of the hospital was to supplement and continue the work of general hospitals. It entered the field against forms of disease that were permanent. The hospital contained at the present time 190 inmates, and, being quite full, the managers felt themselves obliged to undertake the present important enterprise. The new wing, which would cost £20,000, would contain one hundred beds, and comprise an assembly-room, dining and day rooms, and other offices. The Prince of Wales, in reply, said he and the Princess had peculiar satisfaction in taking part in so good a work as that of affording a comfortable home for those suffering from incurable disease. The Princess of Wales then received the purses presented to the charity. It was stated that they contained about £1000. The total result of the gathering was the realisation of £9290. Mr. Allcroft, M.P., presided at a luncheon which took place after the ceremony of laying the first stone of the new building had been performed.

THE LATE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

The recent death of this youthful member of an illustrious family, who, after receiving his education in England since the death of his father, the late Emperor Napoleon III., an exile amongst us, has fallen by a disastrous incident of South African warfare, continues to occupy a large share of public attention.

The mortal remains of the late Prince Imperial have already reached England, and the funeral is appointed to be performed on the day of this publication (Saturday), at eleven o'clock, at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Chiselhurst. The following account of the proposed arrangments was made up on Thursday afternoon:—

Her Majesty's troop-ship Orontes, Captain G. R. Kinahan, from Simon's Bay, at the Cape, bringing the body of the Prince Imperial, was signalled off Plymouth on Wednesday. Having communicated with the authorities on shore, the Orontes proceeded up Channel to meet the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, either at the Spithead anchorage or at Portsmouth. The Enchantress was to receive the coffin from the Orontes on Thursday, and was to bring it on to Woolwich. It is expected that the Enchantress will arrive at Woolwich about four o'clock on Friday afternoon. The coffin will then be landed, and will be taken into the place for the ceremony of identification, as arranged by Major-General Turner and Major-General Younghusband, the senior officers of the Royal Arsenal. At first the Guard-Room, not far from the entrance, was selected, but subsequently a more suitable place was found nearer the pier, being an isolated octagonal building at the western end of the wharf, formerly the Watergate Guard-room, but now used as an armoury by the 26th Kent (Royal Arsenal) Rifle Volunteers. The building is only about 24 feet in diameter, and contains but one room; but in shape and size, and in its dome-like appearance, external and internal, it will form an appropriate resting-place for the deceased Prince. The interior of this building will be draped with black. The coffin will be opened immediately and the official document of identification signed, and then the coffin will be again and finally closed; for the proposed inspection of the remains at Camden House, Chiselhurst, has been abandoned.

The removal of the coffin from Woolwich to Chiselhurst will take place on Friday evening, instead of Saturday morning, as at first arranged. It will be escorted by three squadrons of Royal Horse Artillery, and by the 5th Lancers. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge are expected to be present at Woolwich, as well as next day at the funeral.

It had been intended to have a simple religious ceremony during the transhipment of the remains from the Orontes to the Enchantress. The Rev. Father Ballard, the Naval Roman Catholic Chaplain at Portsmouth, and the Rev. W. Legrave, one of the military chaplains, were to be on board the Enchantress, and these clergymen, with Father Rooney, who comes by the Orontes, were to incense and sprinkle the coffin, and repeat a short service for the dead, the act of transhipment being announced on shore by the firing of twenty-three minute guns from the flag-ship Duke of Wellington and the lowering of the ensigns by the squadron. These proposed arrangements were altered on account of the rough weather. Lieutenant-General the Hon. A. E. Hardinge, C.B., one of her Majesty's Equerries, with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince Joachim Murat, Comte Davilliers, Vicomte Aguado, Baron de Bourgorny, Marquis de Bassano, and Comte de Turenne were on board the Enchantress. The saloon on the after-deck has been transformed into a mortuary chapel.

On arriving at Camden House the body will be borne into the hall by officers of the Royal Artillery, where it will remain until the time appointed for the funeral, this (Saturday) morning at eleven o'clock, when the same officers or others belonging to the same corps will replace it upon the bier and the funeral procession will be formed. The gentlemen cadets from the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will lead the way with arms reversed, and the mounted band of the Royal Artillery will precede the gun-carriage. Among those who will immediately follow the remains as chief mourners may be expected the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge. In anticipation of an immense crowd of spectators, ample arrangements have been made for keeping the ground. From Camden House to the little Church of St. Mary's, on the opposite side of the Common, is barely half a mile, and part of the direct route is along a narrow lane. The most difficult parts of the way were avoided at the funeral of the late Emperor by a slight détour, and in the present instance those who will have charge of the proceedings have decided, after careful examination of the neighbourhood, upon a still more circuitous course, which will afford both a more convenient approach to the church and a longer line of observation for the spectators. The 5th Lancers have arrived at Woolwich from Brighton, and will be of service in keeping the line of march, in which duty other regiments will assist. Colonel Sir E. Y. Henderson, Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, has been engaged at Chiselhurst in making his dispositions, which will be locally in charge of Inspector Wilson, of the R Division. Three batteries of the Royal Artillery will be stationed on the Common, and fire minute guns from the time the procession starts from Camden House until the body enters the church. The Gentlemen Cadets will fire three volleys from their rifles as the body enters the sacred edifice, having previously formed a lane for it to pass through, and the officers who carry it into the church will file out at the side door, leaving the rest of the duties to the friends of the deceased Prince. A short mass andreligious service will follow, and the ceremony will probably be concluded by twelve o'clock.

There have been during the week several changes made in the religious portion of the programme for the funeral this day, at St. Mary's Catholic Church, Chiselhurst. The changes have been made in deference to the wishes of the Empress, and sanctioned by the ecclesiastical authorities. It will be a Low Mass which will be offered for the repose of the soul of the Prince—not a grand High Requiem Mass, as at first intended. Bishop Danell, of Southwark, will say the Mass, which will be accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Crookall's music—the simple responsories of the matins—the choir also singing the "Introit," the "Kyrie Eleison," and other portions of the Gregorian Dead Mass. Madame Christine Nilsson has volunteered her services to sing some of the solos in the service, and the local choir will be supplemented by the treble singers from the choir of St. George's Cathedral, Southwark. According to the Roman Catholic ritual, the "officiating priest" should meet and receive the remains at the door of the church. The Bishop of Southwark will perform that duty, sprinkling the coffin with holy water, and reciting the prayers proper to the occasion. A procession will then be formed, and the coffin will be placed on the catafalque in front of the altar, which, as well as most other parts of the church, will be heavily draped with black cloth. When the chief mourners, the members of the Imperial Household, and other prominent personages present are conducted to their seats, the Bishop will immediately vest at a side altar, and commence the Low Mass. At the conclusion of the Mass the ablutions will be given with prayer, incense, and holy water, by Monsignor Goddard, Canon Bamber, Canon Drinkwater, Canon Doyle, and the Bishop respectively. The choir will be under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Crookall. As the church can only accommodate 250 persons, the attendance of the clergy, which would otherwise be very large, must on this occasion be limited. The inquiries for tickets of admission have been out of all proportion to the accommodation the church affords.

An Illustration of the mortuary or memorial chapel attached to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church at Chiselhurst, is presented on our front page. This chapel was erected by the Empress Eugénie, at her private cost, for the temporary resting-place of her husband, the late Emperor Napoleon III. She laid the foundation-stone on June 7, 1873, five months after his death, the Prince Imperial taking part in the ceremony. The architect was Mr. H. Clutton, and Messrs. Brass were the builders. The chapel is a small building, only 24 ft. long, 12 ft. wide, and 18 ft. high in the interior, but the exterior has an elevation of 40 ft., surmounted by two Imperial eagles and a cross. It communicates with the south-west corner of the adjacent church, and it has a private entrance for the sole use of the Empress. The building is in the Gothic style of architecture. The exterior walls are of Bath stone, those inside of Caen stone, with a vaulted ceiling and polished marble columns. On the tesselated pavement are the Imperial crown and the letter "N" and "E" alternately. The sarcophagus, which was a gift of Queen Victoria, is placed in the centre, and the altar at the west end, to accord with the position of the holy table of St. Mary's Church, which is similarly placed. The chapel is lighted by three windows at the side, and one large rose window.

By the latest news from the Cape, which is to the 17th ult., we have accounts of the reception there afforded to the body of the Prince Imperial, which was sent from Natal on board H.M.S. Boadicea, and arrived in Simon's Bay on Sunday, the 15th. The coffin was at once transferred to her Majesty's ship Orontes, being conveyed upon a pinnace towed by the steam-launch of the Boadicea through a line of men-of-war boats, the crews of which stood with their oars peaked and their heads uncovered. Arrived at the Orontes, the coffin was lifted from the yard-arm and lowered on the shoulders of British sailors to the deck, where Dr. Leonard, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cape Town, with assistant priests, performed the usual service for the dead, while her Majesty's ship Active fired minute guns. The officers of the Active and the Boadicea, as well as of the Dutch men-of-war Van Galen and Silveren Cruis, which arrived on the previous day, took part in the solemn ceremony. Sir Bartle Frere, Lady Frere, the Hon. W. Littleton, Captain Hallam Parr, Colonel Hassard, R.E., Mr. G. Sprigg, and members of the Cabinet, as well as many other visitors from Cape Town, were present and evinced marked respect, the deep grief of the Governor and Lady Frere being particularly noticeable. When the coffin was placed in the mortuary chapel, Lady Frere laid upon it a handsome cross of palm-leaves and immortelles; and the Misses Frere and Mrs. Wright covered the steps with camellias and other beautiful flowers.

The Military Court of Inquiry which investigated the circumstances attending the death of the late Prince Imperial has concluded its sittings and has handed in a report. In this Lieutenant Carey is censured for his conduct on June 1, and regret is expressed at the inadequacy of the escort accompanying the Prince. The result is that a court-martial has been held on Lieutenant Carey. This was inevitable. As the indictment now stands, that officer is charged with misbehaviour in presence of the enemy when in command of the escort in attendance on the Prince Imperial. Lieutenant Carey contends that he was not in command of the escort—that at his own request he was permitted to accompany the Prince, but was specially ordered not to interfere with him in any way. In this there is a direct conflict of opinion between the subaltern under trial and the Assistant-Quartermaster-General, Lieutenant-Colonel Harrison, R.E. Pending the trial, and until we have fuller details of the unfortunate occurrence, it is difficult to form an opinion as to the extent of culpability of either officer. As matters stand at present, Lieutenant Carey's indictment reads, "for having misbehaved before the enemy on June 1, when in command of an escort in attendance on the Prince Imperial, who was making a reconnaissance in Zululand; in having, when the said Prince and escort were attacked by the enemy, galloped away, and in not having attempted to rally the said escort or in other ways defend the said Prince." Colonel Harrison, replying to questions in court, says that in the matter of escort he was not ordered to treat the Prince as a Royal personage, but as an ordinary officer, using, however, due precaution.

The following is given by the Daily News as the finding of the Court of Inquiry:—

"The Court is of opinion that Lieutenant Carey did not understand the position in which he stood to the Prince, and in consequence failed to estimate aright the responsibility which fell to his lot. Quartermaster-General Harrison states in evidence that Lieutenant Carey was in charge of the escort; while Lieutenant Carey, alluding to the escort, says, 'I do not consider that I had any authority over it.' After the precise and careful instructions of Lord Chelmsford, stating, as he did, the position the Prince held, and that he was invariably to be accompanied by an escort in charge of an officer, the Court considers that such difference of opinion should not have existed between officers of the same department. Secondly, the Court is of opinion that Lieutenant Carey is much to blame in having proceeded on duty with part of the escort detailed by the Quartermaster-General. The Court cannot admit the plea of irresponsibility on Lieutenant Carey's part, inasmuch as he himself took steps to obtain the escort, and failed; moreover, the fact that the Quartermaster-General was present on Itelezi Ridge gave Lieutenant Carey the opportunity of consulting him on the matter, of which he failed to avail himself. Thirdly, the Court is of opinion that the selection of the kraal where the halt was made, surrounded as it was by cover for the enemy, and the adjacent difficult ground, showed lamentable want of military prudence. Fourthly, the Court deeply regrets that no effort was made to rally the escort and show a front to the enemy, whereby the possibility of aiding those who had failed to make good their retreat might have been ascertained."

Lieutenant Jahleel Brenton Carey, of the 98th (Prince of Wales's) Regiment of Infantry, lately holding the office of Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General on the staff of General Newdigate, in the Zulu War, is a son of the Rev. Adolphus Carey, Vicar of Brixham, in South Devon. He was educated at the Staff College, and entered the Army as an Ensign in January, 1865, and became Lieutenant in March, 1868. The record in Hart's "Army List" is, that he served with the Expeditionary force, under Brigadier-General Harly, in British Honduras, in February and March, 1867, and was mentioned in the despatches. The Daily Telegraph, in a leading article of last Tuesday, gives the following account of his family connections and of his own personal antecedents:—

"The maternal grandfather of Lieutenant Carey was that able and courageous sailor of Nelson's time, Sir Jahleel Brenton, who on board the Cæsar at Gibraltar, in 1801, and in command of the Spartan frigate at Cerigo, Pesaro, and elsewhere, not only did splendid service, but was also the brilliant commemorator of naval glories, and received a baronetcy for his blameless career. Mr. Carey's brother, now Gunnery Lieutenant of the Triumph, wears the medal of the Royal Humane Society, for saving life on three several occasions. The unfortunate officer himself bears a most creditable record down to the late deplorable occurrence, and the details of his services, if we may rely on what has publicly appeared from those who are friends, almost exclude the possibility that he can be considered lacking in natural courage, understanding, or self devotion. Educated at a French Lycée Impériale, he was of all officers at the front the best fitted to accompany the Prince, and to understand how precious that life was in view of possible contingencies. He passed from Sandhurst to a free commission in the 3rd West India Regiment in 1865, and was in sole command of the fort of Accra on the African coast at the early age of eighteen. Returning to Jamaica with his regiment, he volunteered for the Honduras War while still enfeebled by fever, and, indeed, bravely affected to be in good health lest he should be debarred from joining the expedition. Here he was favourably mentioned in despatches, especially for his skill and fearlessness in reconnoitring and drawing maps of the hostile country. His regiment being disbanded, and he himself put on half-pay, he came to Hythe, and obtained a first-class certificate there; afterwards volunteering for the English ambulance in the Franco-German War, where he was thrice taken as a prisoner on the field while engaged in duty. The Société de Secours aux Blessés presented him with a diploma of thanks, as well as a cross and ribbon, in gratitude for his faithful services to the French wounded. His ability is answered for by the fact that he passed the Staff College with high testimonials; and his zeal for duty by his having volunteered 'for any capacity' in the Zulu War immediately after hearing of the Isandula disaster. Sailing from England in the Clyde on March 1 last, he was thanked by his commanding officer for having spent the whole night at Capetown urging on the coaling of the ship, so that the reinforcements which she carried might arrive without delay at Durban. On the next day, when the ship was wrecked, he was again commended for his zeal and ability; while on the march up country to Dundee it was he who preceded the draughts of the 24th Regiment, surveying the road and marking out camping-grounds; and he, again, who, for his cool-headedness and skill, was placed on Lord Chelmsford's staff, and was appointed to survey and map the road of advance to Ulundi."

We learn by the latest news from Rorke's Drift, dated the 23rd ult., that the decision of the court-martial on Lieutenant Carey has been sent to England for confirmation. Lieutenant Carey returns to England at the first opportunity.

THE ZULU WAR.

Our news from Capetown is to the 24th ult. Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived the night before, in the Edinburgh Castle, to take up his new office as Governor of Natal and the Transvaal and as High Commissioner for native and foreign affairs in territories north and east thereof, including the seat of war, with supreme military command. The remains of the slain at Isandhlwana were buried on the 22nd ult.

The plan of campaign as it at present stands is simple. General Clifford commands the base and line of communication from Durban to Utrecht. The line of the Tugela and Buffalo rivers from Fort Pearson to Rorke's Drift is held by battalions of natives commanded by British officers, and supported by detachments of the 24th Foot and King's Dragoon Guards. The army of invasion consists of three columns. No. 1, under Major-General Crealock, C.B., with its head strongly intrenched on the Umlalezi river, is being massed at Fort Chelmsford, and will shortly throw forward an advanced brigade to St. Paul's, an English mission station midway between its present position and Ulundi. This force consists of Barrow's Mounted Infantry, Lonsdale's Colonial Horse, a battery of Royal Artillery, the Buffs, 57th, 3rd Battalion of the 60th, the 88th, 91st, and 99th Regiments, with a Naval Brigade and Barton's and Nettleton's Native Contingents. The 2nd Division, which is under Major-General Newdigate, C.B., is encamped about twenty miles east of Koppie Allein, and it has reconnoitred and cleared the country as far as Ababamengo, distant about fifty miles from Ulundi. This force consists of the 17th Lancers, a squadron of the King's Dragoon Guards, two batteries of Artillery, a Gatling battery, the 21st Fusiliers, the 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, the 58th, and 94th, with native contingents. The northern column, under Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., is advancing in a south-easterly direction from its old camp at Kambula Kop, viâ Munhla Hill, on Ababamengo, where it will effect a junction with Newdigate's column, and then lead the advance on Ulundi. It consists of Tremlett's battery of Royal Artillery, the first battalion 13th Light Infantry, the 90th Light Infantry, and a wing of the 80th Foot, together with Buller's Horse. Lord Chelmsford's plan seems to be to move on to Ulundi with Wood's and Newdigate's columns from the westward, and then, sweeping round to the south-east, effect a junction with Crealock's advanced force at St. Paul's, and so drive Cetewayo into the north-east corner of Zululand. His rear in the direction of the Transvaal and Secocoeni's territory is well guarded by the 4th King's Own and the 80th Foot. When once Ababamengo is passed, General Marshall, with the Cavalry Brigade, will be intrusted with the task of patrolling the lines of communication and conveying the transport trains which must be pushed up from the base to the heads of columns.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, besides his Sketches of the battlefield of January 22, at Isandhlwana, which he visited, and saw the unburied dead of the British Army, on May 21, contributes a view of the Fort and Camp at Dundee, in Natal, which is about thirty miles distant from the Zulu frontier at Rorke's Drift.

THE AFGHAN PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

The text of the treaty of peace between her Majesty's Indian Government and the Ameer Yakoob Khan, Wali of Cabul, was officially published last week, and Major Cavagnari has gone to Cabul as Political Resident. Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, was at Gundamuk, on the road from Jellalabad towards Cabul, with the staff of General Sir S. Browne, when Yakoob Khan met the English officers there to open negotiations for peace. It was on May 8 that their first meeting took place at Gundamuk, sufficient accounts of which have been published, but our Artist's Sketch of the encampment of the Ameer's party will be regarded with some interest. The place is not far from the eastern entrance to the Jugdulluk and Khoord Cabul Passes, in which great numbers of the soldiers and camp-followers of General Elphinstone's army, in the disastrous retreat from Cabul in January, 1842, perished miserably, some dying of cold and hunger and fatigue, some falling a prey to the enemy's merciless pursuit of them; and the last remnant of the British troops, a company of the 44th Regiment, was cut to pieces near this very spot. It is to be hoped that the peace now concluded with the ruler of Afghanistan will not again be interrupted.

A monument has been erected (by Lieutenant Bartram, Royal Engineers), under orders of General Sir Samuel Browne, on the hill near Gundamuk, where twenty officers and forty-five men (chiefly of the 44th Regiment and Horse Artillery)—the last remnant of the army of Cabul—were massacred. The monument covers the bones which were found on the hill-top when Sir S. Browne's division reached Safed Sang. We lately published a view of "the Forty-fourth Hill," from one of our Artist's Sketches.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Senate adopted on the 3rd inst., by 159 votes against 107, the bill for the return of the Chambers to Paris. The Chamber of Deputies adopted the first article of the Ferry Bill, restoring to the State the right of conferring degrees. On the 4th the debate was continued on M. Jules Ferry's Education Bill. Clauses 2 to 6 were agreed to, and the House then proceeded to consider clause 7, which prohibits public teaching by unauthorised religious bodies. M. Jules Ferry brought in the bill adopted the previous day by the Senate relating to the return of the Chambers to Paris. Urgency was voted. On Monday the debate on M. Ferry's Education Bill was continued. After the rejection of a clerical amendment of M. Keller, M. Madier de Montjau brought forward another, extending the provisions of the bill to all ranks of the clergy, secular as well as congregational. Both the French Chambers met yesterday. In the Senate urgency was voted for a bill ratifying the convention between the Paris Municipality and the Crédit Foncier. The Chamber continued the debate on M. Madier de Montjau's amendment to M. Ferry's bill excluding priests and all religious orders from teaching. M. Ferry opposed the amendment, and said that if the proposal were carried out there would be a lack of instructors, as the secular staff would be insufficient. M. Madier de Montjau's amendment was then put to the vote, and rejected by 381 to 78. Another amendment, prohibiting Internationalists, Freemasons, and members of secret societies from becoming teachers, was withdrawn. Article 7 of the bill, forbidding members of unauthorised religious bodies to teach in the schools, was on Wednesday adopted by the Chamber by 330 against 185 votes; and the bill, in its entirety, was ultimately passed by 352 to 159 votes.

The trial of M. Paul de Cassagnac on charges of exciting to hatred and contempt of the Government by the violence of the language in his paper, the Pays, took place on the 3rd inst. at the Seine assizes. M. de Cassagnac conducted his own defence, and assumed the entire responsibility of the incriminated articles. The jury acquitted him.

The annual competition for the Grand Prix de Rome has taken place at Paris, and the successful candidate is M. Hue, a pupil of M. Réber. A second prize is awarded to M. Hillemacher, and honourable mention to M. Martybota, pupils of M. Massénet, whose opera "Il Rè di Lahore" has been produced in London. Five competitors were allowed to take part in the final trial, and each of these set to music the cantata "Médée," to which a prize was previously awarded as the best "book" sent in to the judges.

ITALY.

Signor Depretis, as the result of a vote of want of confidence passed on the 3rd inst., in the Chamber of Deputies in the debate on the Grist Tax Bill, declared that the Cabinet would resign. The Ministerial defeat was brought about by the coalition of Signori Sella, Nicotera, and Cairoli. Signor Cairoli has undertaken the task of forming a new Ministry.

The Court of Cassation at Rome has given judgment in the case of the Countess Lambertini v. the Counts Antonelli, heirs of the late Cardinal, rejecting the Countess's appeal, with costs.

A memorial statue to Boccaccio, the author of the "Decamerone" and "father of Italian prose," was inaugurated on June 22 at Certaldo, in Tuscany, where his family possessed property for centuries, and where the house is still preserved in which he lived for many years and closed his life in 1375, when sixty years old. The Chamber of Deputies was represented by some of its members. The Universities of Palermo and Padua, the Academy of the Crusca, and over fifty municipal corporations sent deputations.

SPAIN.

Replying on Tuesday to a question in the Chamber of Deputies, Señor d'Albacete, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, stated that he had ordered two frigates to prepare to support the protest of Spain against the action of the San Domingo Government in seizing two insurgent Generals on board a Spanish vessel at Puerto Plata, and afterwards executing them, in spite of the representations of the Spanish Consul.

GERMANY.

The second reading of the Tariff Bill was completed in the German Reichsrath last Saturday, when the House, by a considerable majority, voted the financial duties proposed by the Government on tobacco, coffee, and petroleum. On Monday the whole of the Tobacco Tax Bill was adopted in the form proposed by the Committee. The House afterwards resumed the discussion of the Tariff Bill. The Reichstag on Tuesday passed, by a majority of 163 against 148, that section of the law which provides that goods coming from countries which treat German vessels or wares of German origin more unfavourably than those of other States may be taxed with an addition of 50 per cent more than the rate imposed by the new tariff. On Wednesday the debate on the Tariff Bill was virtually ended, and the success of the scheme ensured. In the course of the debate Prince Bismarck made a long speech in explanation of his alliance with the Ultramontanes. With regard to the financial work at present being accomplished, he said he believed it would be productive of great blessings, and he added:—"I myself will pursue this way to the end, for I have perceived that it is the best for the welfare of the country. Whether I thereby reap hatred or love is a matter of indifference to me."

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

ome fifteen years ago, when the great Civil War in the United ates was raging, it chanced that I had some business concerns the State of Virginia with the Army of the Potomac. usiness led me to ascend an eminence called Pony Mountain, hence we could see through our glasses the Confederate outosts beyond the Rapidan. But there was something else. You see around you, Sir," remarked somewhat complacently ne Federal officer who was my hospitable host and guide, Twenty square miles of Mud." He was right. On any side, o far as the eye aided by the lens could reach, the oncemiling State of Virginia had been converted into a mud norass. Marching and counter-marching, raiding and looting, rop-burning and tree-felling, and the heavy artillery and ransport waggons had brought the country to this pass. An fficer told me that he had ridden one day ten miles on a tretch through the mud without coming across a tree or a ouse, when his horse shied at something standing out dazzlingly white from the mud. It looked like the battered stump of a tone pillar. It turned out to be a baptismal font. The church which had sheltered it had long since been wrecked and demolished by Hans Breitmann and his troopers.

I was forcibly reminded of the state of affairs down in Virginia in 1863-4 when I went last Saturday to the Royal Agricultural Show at Kilburn. These fifteen years past I have not seen so much mud gathered in one spot as I did on Saturday. There were some forty thousand people of all classes, both sexes, and all ages on the ground—I mean to say in the mud—and they all seemed to be enjoying themselves heartily. You see that Her Majesty the Queen, with the Prince of Wales, Prince Leopold, and the Princess Beatrice were present to witness the parade in the horse-ring of the most superb show of live stock that was perchance ever brought together; so the forty thousand people found ample employment and enjoyment in cheering their beloved Sovereign and the rest of the Royal Family.

When the Royal cortége had taken its departure plenty more features of interest presented themselves. The Show is, or rather was, unparalleled in its vastness, completeness, and variety, and, the mud notwithstanding, the most attractive objects in the Exhibition could be inspected with comparative ease on Saturday, since miles of planks and hurdles had been laid down as causeways through the mud lagune. Picking one's way along these planches de salut at the imminent risk of tumbling into the mire, Dante's description of the Malebolgian pit rose to the mind:

> Lo fondo è cupo sì, che non ci basta
> L'occhio a veder senza montar al dosso
> Dell' arco ove lo scoglio più sorrasta.

So I cautiously ascended the dickey of a friend's mail-phaeton and in tranquillity surveyed the entire carnival of mud.

Mem: Let me celebrate the courage and public spirit displayed by a lady, name unknown, but she was fair to look upon, and she wore a purple feather in her bonnet, who valiantly purchased a pair of indiarubber jack-boots at one of the exhibitor's stalls, donned them coram publico, and tramped away, setting the mud at defiance. Like the fair équestrienne of Banbury Cross, who had "rings on her fingers and bells on her toes," that brave lady in the jack-boots should have "music wherever she goes."

That same mail-phaeton of which I spoke took me, 'cross country, through the beautiful, quiet, green lanes—you might have fancied yourself to be five hundred miles from London—and through the pleasant village of Hampstead to the Alexandra Palace at Hornsey. There I found a rose show and a dog show and Mr. Edward Payson Weston, the American pedestrian, walking backwards, and afterwards lecturing in the theatre on his art; and Sir John Astley presenting him with a testimonial in the shape of a silver cup and sundry guineas from his admirers. But there was one thing which I did not find at the Alexandra Palace—to wit, mud. It rained frequently during the day; but the soil about Highgate and Hornsey is not quite so "stiff" as that at Kilburn, and consequently not so easily convertible to the consistence of pea-soup.

I note, in a most readable article on the People's Entertainment Society, by Lady Lindsay (of Balcarres), in the current number of Time, a passage which strikes me as being simply admirable in its candour and its common-sense. Says Lady Lindsay, speaking of her own class in society—

> How little do we know of the poor of London! The most we see of them, perhaps, is when we drive through a back street in Chelsea, or beyond Oxford-street; or we pass them when we are walking hurriedly through a "slum" in search of an old curiosity shop, and so draw our skirts more closely about us, lest we touch them as we go. And how little do the poor know of us! They see us riding or driving in Hyde Park at noonday, trailing our silks and laces, flaunting our money and our idleness. Is it a marvel if they misjudge us, then?

If all ladies of rank had the courage to write thus, and to act up to their words, as Lady Lindsay does, by going among the needy and helping them, there would soon be a better understanding than at present exists between the rich and the poor.

This People's Entertainment Society, of which I made mention in the "Echoes" some months since, is a very excellent institution. The ladies and gentlemen of the Society, which includes a large number of distinguished musical amateurs, vocalists and instrumentalists, go round the very poorest neighbourhoods on Saturday nights and give concerts. The music and singing are sometimes varied by readings and recitations. The Society does not preach to its audiences. It leaves preaching to the proper professors thereof. Its only object is to give rational and innocent amusement to the poor, and to keep them out of the public-houses. The Society want a little money to help them in carrying out their coming winter campaign, which begins in November; and in aid of their funds a morning concert is to be given next Tuesday, the Fifteenth, in Sir Coutts Lindsay's studio, at 4, Cromwell-place, South Kensington. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Edinburgh and Princess Mary of Teck are among the patrons. Professional as well as amateur artistes have volunteered their services; and Mr. Randegger is to be the conductor. Tickets, a guinea each, are to be had at Chappell's.

The death of Frances Countess Waldegrave makes a gap in the highest English society which will not easily be filled up. The successor of this accomplished and lamented lady as the "leader" of a Liberal salon has already been pointed out; but Lady Waldegrave possessed other qualities rare to meet with and difficult to match. Everybody knows that she was the daughter of the famous English tenor singer, John Braham. I remember her, a graceful, fair-haired girl, just forty-three years ago, sitting in a pit box at the St. James's Theatre, of which her father was then proprietor and manager.

I note that my friend "Atlas" in the World girds at those whom he styles the "daily publicists" for "filching their straw in the manufacture of Waldegrave bricks from Horace Walpole's letters and Mr. Hayward's article in the Quarterly Review." Whence, O sapient but somewhat irritable "Atlas," were the "daily publicists" to obtain their materials for an obituary notice if they refrained from referring to the two sources named? I suppose that all the "daily publicists" were not habitual guests at Strawberry Hill. My withers are unwrung in the matter, since, save in this column, I have not written a line anywhere about the late Lady Waldegrave; but I happen to know that one of the most conspicuous among the many articles on her death was written by a "daily publicist" who is a gentleman moving in her own sphere of society—that is to say the highest—and who knew the poor lady intimately.

While Mr. Henry Irving is enjoying his vacation or earning fresh golden opinions from provincial audiences, the Lyceum Theatre will be opened, on Aug. 2, by Miss Genevieve Ward, the distinguished American tragédienne, with an entirely new romantic drama, written for her by Mr. Palgrave Simpson. "Zara" is the title of the play, in which two characters will be supported by Miss Ward: one being that of a Gipsy; and in her Zingara impersonation she will sing a song, the words of which have been written in genuine Romany by that renowned Gitano Mr. Charles G. Leland, otherwise Hans Breitmann. Miss Ward has enlisted a very strong company under her banner, including a very promising young actress, Miss Roland Phillips, daughter of the late Watts Phillips, dramatist and novelist, whose biography and whose portrait appeared in this Journal at the time of his decease, four years ago.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

The crusade against the further use of the "cat" in the Army has been so manifestly earnest and sincere that popular sympathy will probably be rather on the side of hon. members who have persistently and strenuously urged its abolition than on the side of the punctilious sticklers for mere form or etiquette of procedure on the front Ministerial and front Opposition benches. It has still been the "cat" which has retarded the progress of the Army Discipline Bill through Committee. In the small hours of Friday morning, the 4th inst., to wit, the discussion was acrimonious and protracted to a degree, among the flowers of speech used being that of "honourable or dishonourable gentlemen" by Mr. Biggar (who was induced by Mr. Raikes to explain that he did not apply the epithet to members of the House), and a threat by Mr. O'Donnell that if the "cat" were not produced on Saturday the Bill would not be allowed to move one inch, and, if necessary, "half a million Londoners would assemble in Hyde Park." Without dwelling on the fruitless recriminations which followed the Chancellor of the Exchequer's motion to have these words "taken down," it will be enough to say that when the House met again in the afternoon of the same day the excitement had subsided, and Sir Stafford had grown so conciliatory as to promise that specimen "cats" should be produced in some secluded part of the House, whilst Mr. W. H. Smith made the amende to Mr. Callan by offering an apology for having denied the existence of a "marine cat." Prior to the Saturday sitting, accordingly, hon. members had an opportunity of judging for themselves of the formidable nature of the weapons used for flogging in the Army and Navy. The exhibition of these "cats" gave a fresh sting to the adverse criticisms of Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Hopwood, Mr. Parnell, and other members, and probably led to Colonel Stanley's dropping an intimation that he would on a future day be prepared to announce a concession on the part of the Government. Mr. Forster strongly advised Ministers to at once do away with flogging; and Sir Robert Peel interpreted the Ministerial statements as meaning that the Government were about to yield, to which Sir Stafford Northcote did not say nay. Several clauses were adopted; but the latter part of the evening sitting was again taken up with a personal discussion, which may be described as Pickwickian. When Monday came, Colonel Stanley announced the terms of the Government concession in these words:—"After full consideration with my colleagues and the military authorities, we have come to the conclusion that we can confine corporal punishment to offences punishable under the provisions of the Act with death." But, in Committee on the Army Bill, this was felt to be virtually no concession, inasmuch as almost every military offence was "punishable with death." Mr. Chamberlain moved to report progress, in order to protest against the unsatisfactory character of the Secretary for War's statement, and to point out that the Government had on Saturday induced the House to believe that flogging in the Army would be abolished altogether. This Colonel Stanley denied. The whole evening was spent in a desultory debate, the distinguishing features of which were—Mr. John Bright's forcible appeal to the Government to put a stop to "the cruelty and brutality which have hitherto distinguished the treatment which English soldiers have received;" the Chancellor of the Exchequer's petty retort that Mr. Bright's speech was but an electioneering cry; and the Marquis of Hartington's rather warm repudiation of the notion that he was the "leader" of Mr. Hopwood and other members, who have distinguished themselves by the zeal with which they have resisted the maintenance of a brutal form of punishment in the Army. Mr. Chamberlain briskly animadverted on the character of the noble Lord's leadership, and reminded him that Mr Bright, Mr. Forster, and Sir Henry James had made some of the longest speeches of the evening against the flogging system. To which the Marquis of Hartington replied that the proper time to express his views on the question would be when the schedules were before them. The noble Lord gained the support of Mr. Fawcett; but Sir Charles Dilke supported Mr. Chamberlain in this lively episode, to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer drily alluded as of a "domestic" nature. By Tuesday, however, the slight "breeze" had apparently subsided. Lord Hartington was greeted with prolonged and cordial cheers by the Opposition when he rose to speak on the question of privilege that came up. And, as for the Army Bill, such progress was made with that vexed measure that clauses 147 to 165 were agreed to.

Mr. Henry Chaplin did not seek to define the actual causes of Agricultural Depression in making his motion, on the 4th inst., for a Royal Commission on the subject. The hon. member rather endeavoured by a side-wind, as it were, to suggest that the depression may have been occasioned by Free Trade, and that Reciprocity (by which name Protection has been rechristened) might possibly be a cure for the evil complained of. Though not at all recommending a return to the "exploded doctrine of Protection," Mr. Brassey seconded the motion. Various amendments were introduced by Mr. MacIver, The O'Donoghue, and Mr. R. W. Duff. The speech of the evening, however, was that of Mr. John Bright. There was a return of the old Anti-Corn Law League vivacity in the pointed allusions of the right hon. gentleman to the "musty speeches" of the Prime Minister on the question, to the fruitlessness of previous Commissions of the same kind, and to the comparatively few persons who owned the greater part of the land in the kingdom. If an inquiry was to be held, let it be "wide and honest," said Mr. Bright, who was greeted with prolonged and sympathetic cheers when he adjured the House, in conclusion—"Let us break down the monopoly which has banished so much of labour from your farms, and has pauperised so much of the labour that has remained. On the ruins, when you have broken it down, there will arise a fairer fabric. It is not possible that I should live to see it, yet the time will come when you will have a million homes of comfort and independence throughout the land of England which will attest for ever the wisdom and blessedness of the new policy that you have adopted." Lord Sandon and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, while approving the inquiry, commented adversely on some of the allegations of Mr. Bright, who found, however, an advanced disciple in the Marquis of Hartington. The Leader of the Opposition had the courage to say that if Mr. Chaplin's motion aimed at imposing a tax on the food of the people that would be tantamount to an acknowledgment that "the land system of this country under existing conditions had broken down;" and the noble Lord went on further to state that there were blots in this system—specifying "our law of entail and settlement"—which must be amended. In the end the motion for a Royal Commission was agreed to.

Irish subjects have greatly occupied the minds of the members of the Upper House this week. On Monday, Lord Oranmore and Browne expressed at length his opinion that it would be timely for the Government to restore peace to the disturbed districts of Ireland by asserting by force "the supremacy of the law." But the Duke of Richmond quietly answered that the Government had sufficient power to put down "these mischievous organisations against the law." The Summary Jurisdiction Bill was, on the motion of the Lord Chancellor, read the second time at the same sitting. On Tuesday, the Irish University Bill of the Government came up for second reading; and noble Lords on the Opposition side, as well as a few on the Ministerial benches, so far anticipated Mr. Tenniel's cartoon in Punch that they, in prosaic language, urged the Lord Chancellor to do the very same thing that Pat recommends in the picture, "Thry 'im wid the golden grain, yer honor-r!" The Earl of Kimberley, to begin with, pointed to the Government's own measure on Intermediate Education as a model for the present bill. Albeit Lord Cranbrook supported the bill as it is, Lord O'Hagan, the Earl of Leitrim, the Earl of Donoughmore, Lord Inchiquin, Earl Spencer, Lord Powerscourt, and Earl Granville all followed Lord Kimberley's suit. Vagueness was the chief characteristic of the Marquis of Salisbury's reply, in which he likened himself and colleagues unto knights proceeding on "enchanted ground," and encouraged by the ghosts of their luckless predecessors with the words, "Go thou and do likewise." The Lord Chancellor, for his part, stated plainly that Parliament would not assent to a denominational grant, though he looked with favour to the presentation of prizes to successful students. His Lordship had the satisfaction of hearing the Bill read the second time without much further dissent.

"Privilege!" Touched on this tender point, the House of Commons was at the outset of Tuesday's sitting again the scene of an animated discussion. It was gathered from the involved statement of Lord Henry Lennox that the Committee on the Tower High Level Bridge Bill had been interrupted by the discovery that a Mr. Charles E. Grissell had assured the solicitors engaged by the opponents of the measure that "he had the most ample power to control the decision of the Committee, and could arrange to have questions put by the Committee which would lead to the Bill being thrown out." It appeared that Mr. Grissell asked £2000 for this bit of business. Seeing that a reflection had been cast upon "the honour of the House," the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that a Committee of five be appointed to inquire into the circumstances of the case before ordering anyone to appear at the bar. This course was eventually adopted, but not before an impatient motion by Mr. Callan for directing Mr. Grissell to appear summarily on the morrow had led to a prolonged conversation, which the Marquis of Hartington shortened by supporting the proposal of the Leader of the House. In the evening sitting, Mr. Sampson Lloyd's motion in favour of the appointment of a Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, though opposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was carried by 76 to 56 votes, amid some cheering.

On Wednesday the first business was the appointment of the Committee to inquire into Mr. Grissell's reported breach of privilege. The following were the members chosen:—Mr. Walpole, Mr. Dobson, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Gray, and Mr. Pemberton. But even their appointment was seized upon by a few for the further exercise of their loquacity. Mr. Stevenson then moved the second reading of his Bill for the total closing on Sundays of public-houses in England, and a motion for the adjournment was carried by 165 to 162 votes.

Thursday saw another personal question raised in the House of Commons; and, the Upper Chamber separating comparatively early, not a few noble Lords were enabled to witness the animated discussion which ensued in the Lower House. The one important measure that occupied the attention of noble Lords was the Public Health Act Amendment Bill, which proposed to give local authorities the power to construct cemeteries. The Lower House had got rather soon into Committee, and Colonel Stanley's hopes might justifiably have been in the ascendant, when Mr. A. M. Sullivan stalked up the floor, and applied that Mr. Raikes should vacate the chair, in order that the Speaker might be recalled to decide a delicate point of "privilege." Certain young officers of the House, it appeared, had been spied in the side galleries, theretofore held sacred to members, taking notes, and, as Mr. Sullivan held, conspicuously taking notes, of the speeches of Irish members. Resenting this innovation, Mr. Sullivan, in calm and moderate language and tones, asked whether it was in order, by whose authority, and with what views the note-taking had been allowed. Mr. Callan's prolonged commentary on this question, interrupted by peremptory calls to "order" on the part of Mr. Dodson, was finally stopped by the Speaker. The right hon. gentleman explained that it was the practice to have notes taken of the business of the House, that he himself wished to have more ample reports than he did of the proceedings, but that the notes so taken had no reference whatever to any particular body of members. In face of this explicit statement, Mr. Parnell wished to know the nature of "the minutes," and Mr. O'Connor Power loudly protested the course was "without precedent;" but the Speaker, having duly answered the question put to him, quickly left the Chair, the mace was lowered to the stentorian cry of "Mr. Speaker, I protest!" from Mr. Power, and Mr. Raikes resumed his seat as Chairman of the Committee. Having no sympathy with the Speaker in his possible desire to hurry back to his dinner, Mr. O'Connor Power moved to report progress whilst he denounced the act of the Speaker. The mild answers of Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Hartington did not turn away the wrath of Irish members, another of whom, Mr. Parnell, ventured also to impugn the conduct of the Speaker. Thus, again was the progress of the Army Bill delayed.

Mr. Charles W. Vincent has been appointed the colleague and successor of Mr. Henry Campkin as librarian of the Reform Club.

WORK IN THE WOODLANDS.

The bark harvest has begun, the woodcutters are at work again, and the woodlands echo to the ringing axe. The "stripping" is late this year, later by a month, for the frosty nights checked the running of the sap, and the felling was retarded by the continuance of rain. In an ordinary season, when, with warmer weather, the oak sap flows freely, May is the time for felling, and by the end of that month there will be much bark stacked, and the "sticks" will be lying in all directions where trees have been marked for removal.

When "a fall" is decided on, the trees to come down are selected in the autumn, and girdled with paint and numbered; and they are then inspected, measured, and sold, the buyer engaging to cut down and "clear" them by the first of the next November; and, as the spring approaches, arrangements are made by him with the wood-cutters and the halliers, or "haulers" as they are termed, with the former for the felling of the trees, and with the latter for their removal by means of a timber-waggon from the place where they lie. He has also to make terms with the women and children who live in the locality for their continued services as "peelers" until the bark is stacked.

When the sap has so risen that the bark will "slip" timber-felling commences, and it is thus conducted. Should the tree to be cut be in a wood or a coppice the bushes around it are first cleared away to allow of full room for work, and the axe-men then hew the trunk; and where it is necessary, as it often is, for the tree to fall down in a certain direction, a rope is put round it, carried into the open, and then made fast to an iron bar, round which it is coiled more closely as the tree gives way, the bar at the same time being driven further into the ground to make the rope taut and tense. Then the long saw comes into use, and when way has been made with that, the tree is wedged to assist the fall and to also direct its course, the rope being once more tightened. The saw is then used again, and a larger wedge inserted; and, as the branches of the bending tree begin to quiver, the swinging blows from the huge sledge-hammers drive home the wedge, and the boughs dip lower. "Look-out!" is now the cry, and the men move out of danger, all but the axe-men; and, as the ring of the hammers comes louder and the strokes sound closer, cracks are heard, the rope gets slacker, and down the tree comes crashing, the mighty thud of it making the earth vibrate as a leafy smell arises. This aroma—this pleasant woodland smell—has a marked significance; for, as it only follows the fall of timber-trees, you can tell by its presence where the wood-cutters are; and when, as occurs so frequently, there is added to this leafy odour the still sweeter scent of crushed wild hyacinths, one is tempted to linger in the moss-grown path to inhale its almond-fragrance.

The rope is removed, and then comes the "lopping;" and when the boughs and the branches have been cut away the trunk or "stick" is roughly rounded. Traces are then put round it, the horses are attached, and the exciting part commences—exciting because the trees have too often to be dragged up from deep dingles; and at last, amidst the shouts of men, the smack of whips, and a tightening clank of chains, the sturdy team, by struggling, make it move. Rollers and wedges being driven under it, and the traces altered, the rested horses then again tear at it; and this is repeated from time to time, until the tree is at length got out of the way, and to where it will be handier for the work of the strippers, who shortly afterwards have to commence the peeling, the removal of the bark being readily effected by means of the "peeling-irons." These are rasp-like implements with two short handles, with which the work is got over quickly, the mode of using them being to slip them under the bark and pull it forwards with an upward motion, the position of the irons being altered as the trunk of the tree inclines; and in this way, with good workers, a tree will soon be "stripped." The thicker portions of the branches are now cut up into lengths, to be piled and stacked as "cord-wood," and the thinner or leafy portions are collected into bundles and set aside as bush or "brash" until they can be duly dealt with, the chips being collected by the children.

The arrangements for removal, of course, include axe-men, sawyers, teamsters, and teams, the contractor himself providing all belongings, as the farmer on whose land the trees are growing is no more than a looker-on. Felling, as will be seen, is not commenced until the bark slips readily; and as the value of the bark depends greatly on the weather, care has to be taken that it is kept dry while stacked, and, except by large woods where there are drying-sheds handy, this is effected by setting up forked sticks with straight limbs on them, and piling the bark against them; first, the smaller pieces and then the larger ones, which are finally roofed over with some large rough portions taken from the trunk. This "ranking" has to be regulated to a nicety, not only as to packing, but also as to position; as if rain should come it must at once run off, and should a burst of heat occur the stack must not be exposed to too much sun; as, in the one case, mould might form, when a re-arrangement would be necessary; and in the other the juices would be evaporated and the value lessened. In fact, there is as much care needed with the bark harvest, the first harvest of the year, as there is with the second, or hay harvest. The strippers, or bark-peelers, therefore, are always selected from those who live on the spot—namely, cottagers and their children—as to be short of hands when the "sticks" are down, or to have a strike for wages, would cause a serious loss. The price for bark when it is in good condition usually ranges from £5 per ton to £8, according to glut or scarcity. This year the price is low, as the average, so far, has been but £4 10s.

When the bark has been stacked sufficiently long to become quite dry, it is taken to the tan-yard, and there built up in ricks till it is required for use; and the "sticks" are removed, after they have been further rounded, to the wharf, to the quay, or the timber-yard, while the minor belongings of brash and cord-wood are sold or used up by the farmer, the roots being grubbed up and utilised, or allowed to remain when they are not required, as the removal of such large butts, in some localities, causes much expense and trouble.

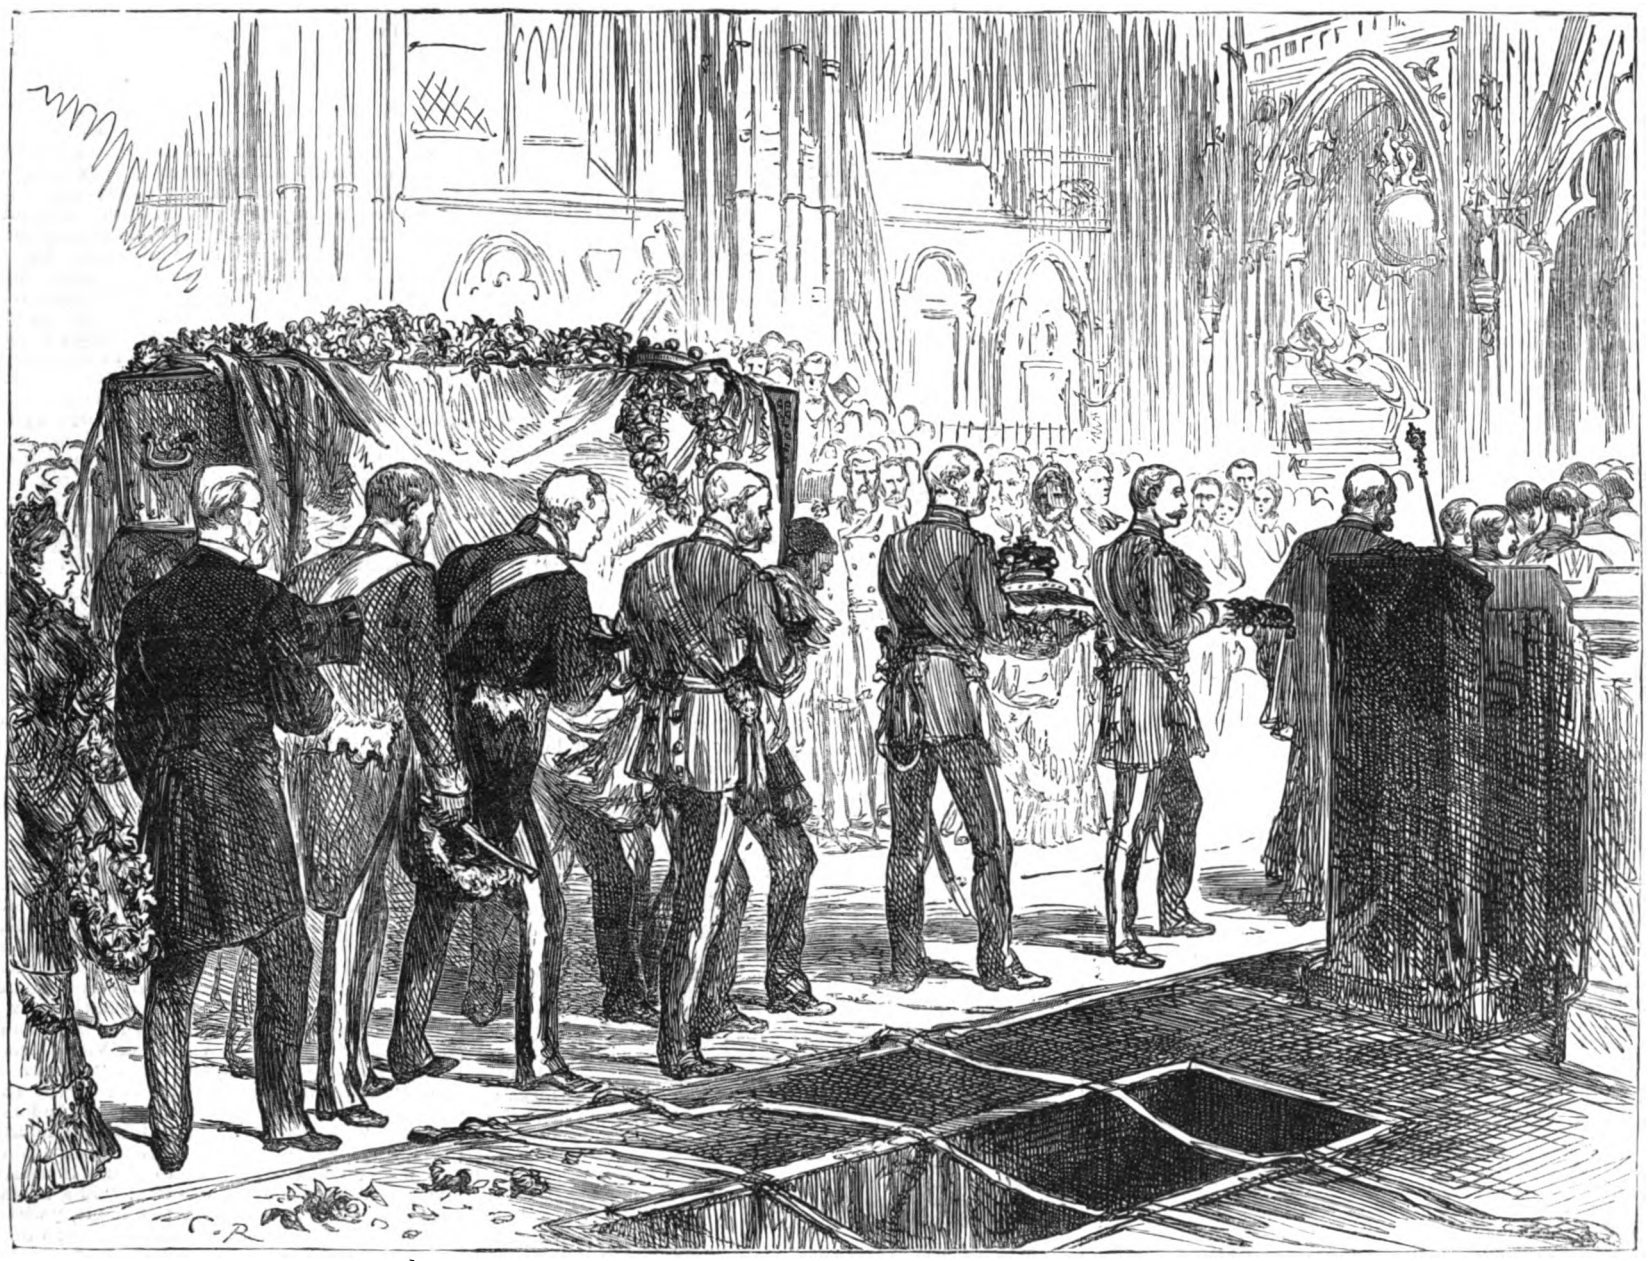
From its usual surroundings and its rustic character, the occupation of the wood-cutter forms a pleasant feature, as it is picturesque in its grouping, sylvan in its setting, and full of animation through its struggling teams; and as the various stages of felling, barking, ranking, and removal are to be met within rural districts from April to November, such sights are common ones to those who live in woodland countries. Not so, however, to the in-town dweller, as, if he should occasionally meet with it in his suburban rambles, it would most probably lack the chief charm of all—wild flowers for foreground, vast woods for backing, and deep blue hills for distance, as also that height and breadth and space and breezy blow one gets but in the country. It is an occupation to delight an artist, and many sketch it; for whether it is in the primrose time of April, the hawthorn time of May, or in that glorious time of June—that time of apple-bloom and birds and bees—that wood-cutting commences, there is much that is pleasing in it, from the very nature of its accessories, and its grouping, form, and colour.

SHELSLEY BEAUCHAMP.

NOVELS.

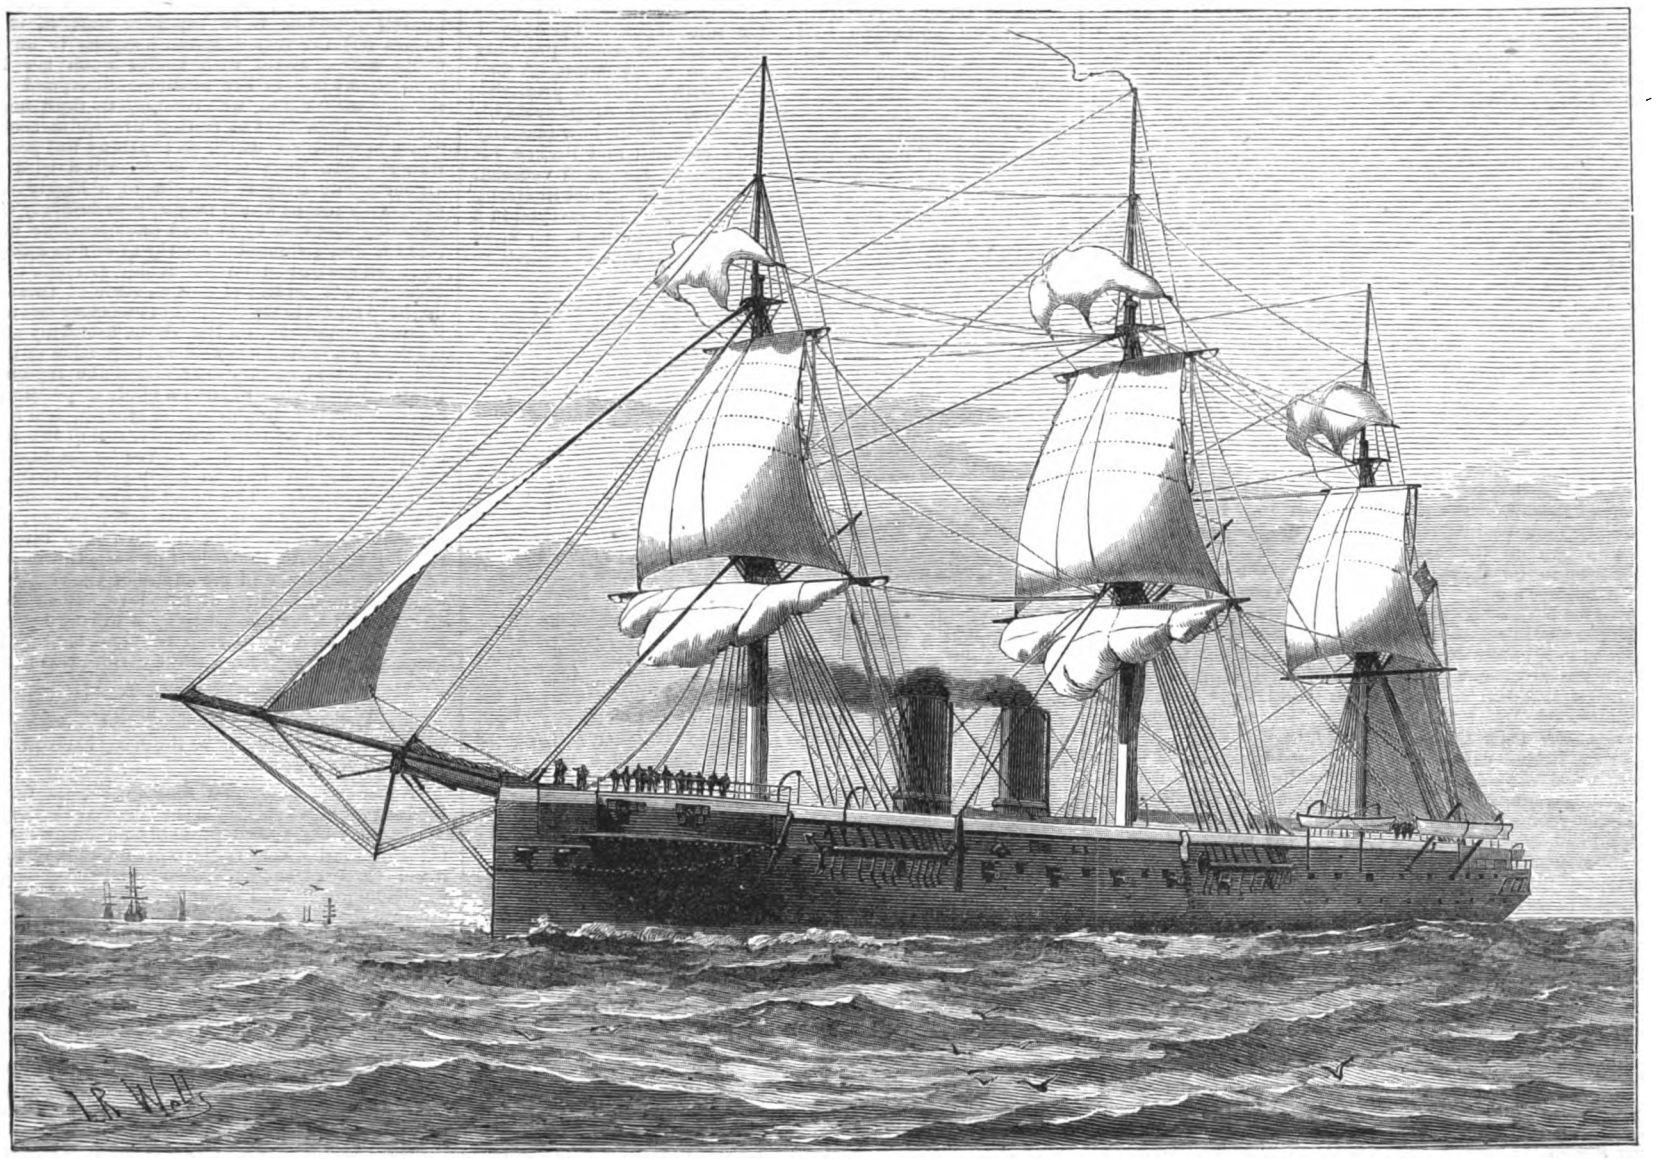
Good entertainment for rainy weather is to be found in the three volumes entitled John Caldigate, by Anthony Trollope (Chapman and Hall), for the author holds a foremost place among those writers whose books can nearly always be taken up with the certainty of having one's yearnings satisfied when atmospheric or other circumstances set one craving for a piece of regular, old-fashioned, gossippy, story-telling. The author is well known to have travelled a great deal and to be a very keen and retentive observer; and it is quite natural, as well as perfectly legitimate, that he should make of his stories the means of conveying to the knowledge of the public the facts and fancies suggested to him by his own experiences and impressions. On the present occasion, then, John Caldigate, titular hero of the new tale, is soon on his way to New South Wales in quest of gold; and, when some three score pages of the first volume have been traversed, has already been a fortnight at sea, is at that moment in the tropics, amidst a surrounding influence of sultriness, sleepiness, and warmth, watching by day the flying fishes leaping from the water to the deck, standing by night among the other passengers to gaze by the hour together upon the phosphorescent sea, while the Southern Cross possesses the heavens in partnership with the Bear, and gradually becoming interested in the person and proceedings of a certain Mrs. Smith, whose name will no doubt be familiar to the great majority of readers. But this Mrs. Smith is not as other Smiths, save only in name; she soon asserts herself as a distinct individuality, and it is not long before the reader's curiosity is strongly excited about her, especially when the captain of the vessel considers it advisable to warn John Caldigate against her. This is, of course, the portion of the story taken advantage of by the author to put on record what his own voyages have taught him to know and to imagine about life on board of a ship, the line of demarcation between the Pharisees of the first-cabin and the Publicans of the second-cabin, the friendships, the enmities, the amusements, the occupations, the inanities, the flirtations, the risks, the entanglements. We reach Melbourne in due time, taking leave for a while of the fascinating Mrs. Smith, spend two days there under the author's auspices, and then, under the same excellent guide's superintendence, follow his hero to Albury, across the Murray river, and pass into the colony of New South Wales. Now begins the "roughing;" and the interest waxes stronger and stronger. Gold-mining commences in earnest; and, as the romantic will be glad to learn, Mrs. Smith soon crops up again. Perhaps the drift of the story and an idea of the manner in which the fate of the hero was affected by the quite too charming Euphemia Smith may be best inferred from the two following fragments of information. As regards John Caldigate: "he in his search for gold had been uniformly successful—was spoken of among the Nobble miners as the one man who in gold-digging had never had a reverse. He had gone away just before the bad time had come on Polyeuka; and then had succeeded, after he had gone, in extracting from those late partners of his every farthing that he had left them." So at least said report. It may be well, perhaps, to prevent possible and not unnatural misapprehension by remarking that Polyeuka is not the name of an enchantress in human form, but of a mine. And now for the beautiful Mrs. Smith: "the woman had certainly called herself Mrs. Caldigate, and had been called so by many. But she had afterwards been called Mrs. Crinkett." From the two scraps of quotation the experienced novel reader will probably anticipate a tale of bigamy; and the anticipation may happen to be not altogether unfulfilled. The main incident, in fact, is of the bigamous sort, and the immense amount of narrative, dialogue, description, and discourse, which the author manages to spin, with wonderful skill and dexterity, out of this single incident extorts an admiration similar to that apparently excited in the minds of certain reporters when they remark that "the right honourable gentleman spoke for nine hours" upon some political question which an ordinary speaker would probably think himself capable of exhausting in thirty minutes. The author flavours his story, as usual, with a certain grimmish humour of the satirical kind and with some drops from his well of simple pathos; and he shows, as usual, how masterly is his grasp of human nature, how truthful and lifelike his estimate of persons, moods, and actions. He takes occasion to warn all whom it may concern against indulgence in strong drink; and it is a question whether his warning, conveyed in a perfectly unobjectionable manner, will not be as much more effectual as it is certainly less offensive than that contained in the notorious "Assommoir."

Attention will be at once arrested and expectation powerfully excited by the opening chapters of The Sherlocks, by John Saunders (Strahan and Co., Limited), for in those chapters a very touching and interesting romance is told with singular compactness and picturesqueness. That romance, however, is only introductory to the story about the Sherlocks, who do not appear in plurality until the romantic prelude is concluded. They then consist of Mr. Sherlock, or Peter Sherlock, a widower, a somewhat seedy, but withal a cheery, lawyer's clerk, and his two boys, Benjamin and Walter, of whom the former is represented as what is commonly called, when children are the subject of lugubrious prediction, a "pickle," and as sadly needing a dose of what is known to some parents and their offspring by the name of "Solomon's mixture." Now Peter Sherlock has already figured as a lover of the beautiful being who fills the part of heroine in the introductory romance, but a lover of the unobtrusive sort, like the titular lover in the celebrated poem of Edwin and Angelina. Peter Sherlock, however, is not so lucky as Edwin; for Peter's Angelina, whose name is Hannah, despises both him and his suit, and surreptitiously marries a scoundrel. The scoundrel, Bannister by surname, having crowded as much rascality as possible, including cruelty, into the space of a few years, having robbed his wife of her little daughter, to whose death, in early childhood, he will certainly at the outset be suspected of having contributed, is removed with the help of delirium tremens to another but not, if he had his deserts, to a better world. Here then is Mrs. Bannister a widow, and here is Peter Sherlock a widower. Now it is proverbial that "on revient toujours à ses premières amours;" and Peter, good constant soul, can scarcely be said to have ever wandered away from his first love: he only married because she married, and by way of passing the time, as it were. So we are soon spectators of a scene in which Peter the widower induces Hannah the widow to become a mother to his motherless boys; and the scene, if not the very best in the book, is not often excelled for combination of pathos and humour. The family of the Sherlocks now comprises four persons, and to them is soon added a fifth, one Sophie Richardson, who, as the daughter of Mrs. Sherlock's deceased sister, is received indeed into the family, but, after a little while if not at first, with a churlish hospitality on the part of Mrs. Sherlock, the arbitress of fate in her household. In fact, the poor child, up to the age of sixteen, serves the hard servitude of a Cinderella. At this point the author, who has hitherto seemed to harbour a design of proceeding to unfold a tale with the usual accompaniments of plot and development, appears to have altered his purpose, to have determined upon letting the chief cat out of the bag incontinently, and upon devoting himself for the most part to studies of character rather than to the composition of such a narrative as shall stimulate curiosity, promote wishes and apprehensions, induce anticipatory solutions. It is true that there is a leaven of love, and that the lovers are at cross purposes from first to last; but the interest certainly does not centre in them and their affairs, save in so far as their affairs serve to bring out their idiosyncrasies. The interest excited is that which is aroused by the lecturer rather than by the storyteller; it is wonderful to see and hear how skilfully some specimen of humanity is exhibited and described, but the specimen itself may enlist no particular sympathy or enthusiasm. The author, moreover, creates his own specimens; and in his creations he shows considerable originality. Peter Sherlock, Mrs. Sherlock, and Sophie, all are admirably conceived, and their characters are admirably worked out; but Mrs. Sherlock, if a single voice may pronounce judgment, is by far the most meritorious of the three delineations. Benjamin, Walter, Pauline, and her father are creditable, both in the conception and the execution, but far inferior to the other three. It is possible that in the estimation of some readers the pathetic nature of the picture in which Walter is described as blinded by the hand of his brother and the awful nature of the calamity will lose in impressiveness by reason of the utter puerility and imbecility of the entire proceeding: a desire to box a silly lad's ears should not be the chief feeling provoked by an event which is meant to be tragic. On the whole, however, the author creates a profound impression as a possessor of great powers, with a dash of the poetical and pictorial faculty.



Unpromising enough, if we go by what there is in a name, looks the title of Vixen by the author of "Lady Audley's Secret" (John and Robert Maxwell), and more unpromising still is the forecast when "a pretty horsebreaker" appears for the heading of the first chapter; but it is all a false alarm, and the novel contains absolutely nothing of that objectionable matter, as it was commonly called by the critics, for which the author was at one time notorious. Vixen and the pretty horsebreaker are one and the same Violet Tempest, "a slim young thing," at the commencement of the story, not fifteen years old, and neither then nor at any other time of any but perfectly unexceptionable morals. And yet she has a "tawny mane," otherwise a quantity of that "reddish-auburn hair" which generally warns the experienced novel-reader to look out for a total wreck of the moralities. But the apprehension is in vain, although we soon make the acquaintance of a gentleman belonging to the dangerous class of military captains with small waists, small hands and feet, and a small amount of principle. The captain's intentions, however, are strictly honourable; that is to say, he means marriage. He is sufficiently lax, nevertheless, to woo both mother and daughter at the same time, being resolved to obtain the hand of Vixen, or Violet Tempest if possible, and if not, of Mrs. Tempest, whose "jointure is well enough." What Vixen has in store for her, if she should marry the gallant captain, may be surmised from the following soliloquy, spoken with the silvery moon for silent auditress: "Look to yourself, my queen, in the time to come: you have been hard to me and I will be hard to you. It shall be measure for measure." Her offence was this: "She is the first woman," says the astounded captain to himself, "who ever looked me in the face and told me she disliked me; the first woman who ever gave me contemptuous looks and scornful words." The captain marries the mother; Mrs. Tempest becomes Mrs. Winstanley, and "war to the knife" begins between the gallant ex-officer and his high-spirited step-daughter. And the worst of it is that she is not to come of age until she is twenty-five, so that her step-father will have seven years, unless he should happen in the meanwhile to be removed to a better world, for carrying out the amiable programme he had, as already mentioned, laid down for himself. Suffice it to say here that in the battle which ensues nothing very horrible happens to anybody, no lovely being moves about with smiles upon her lips and poison in her heart and in her medicine-chest, and that the victory remains with Vixen, who commits no deed more tragic or disreputable than that of setting fire, quite accidentally, to the house in which she dwells at anything but peace with her step-father. This little scene is described with great dash and vigour. The story is brought to a highly satisfactory conclusion by means which may appear unlikely but which can be certainly justified by at least one notorious occurrence in the real life and fashionable society of our own day. The Captain, be it acknowledged on his behalf, is made to behave on one occasion as if he had at bottom some of those qualities which ought to regulate the conduct of an officer and a gentleman. His ideas, however, are, on the whole, decidedly sordid; and so is the tone pervading a considerable portion of the tale, in which the characters seldom soar above the region of worldliness, though Vixen herself shows a noble disposition towards a self-sacrifice not based upon sound reasons, and happily not completed. She is a bright creature, full of life and courage, susceptible of a great passion, moved by the finest impulses; and she plays her part well in many pretty, touching, trying, and telling situations. The novel is written with great sprightliness, and is likely to meet with much favour, especially among the class of persons who can take a deep interest in questions relating to waists, the colour of hair, the assortment and the cost of millinery, and the affairs of the stable and the kennel, as well as in the course of true love, and in the ingenious construction of a bridge whereby a worthy hero and a charming heroine are enabled to rush into one another's arms over the gloomy gulf which for a while divides them.

Mr. Morley, M.P., presided last Tuesday evening at the opening of a new wing to the King Edward Ragged Schools, Mile-end New Town.



A discovery made yesterday week goes far to account for the lamentable explosion in the Blantyre Colliery on the previous Wednesday night, and probably for many other calamities of the same kind. Four bodies were found in one part of the workings; three of these deceased had been smoking, and the fourth had concealed about his underclothing a false key for opening the safety-lamp, which was found unlocked. In the tobacco-box of another of the sufferers three lamp keys were found. Twenty-eight lives were lost.

When Mr. J. L. Milton wrote his useful handy-book, entitled The Hygiene of the Skin (Chatto and Windus), we fancy he must have had in his mind a vivid recollection of the memorable inquiry which perplexed Peter Simple in his youth—"How are you off for soap?" Minute as to the analysis of the skin's texture, and the necessity of regular and temperate diet to preserve a good complexion, the treatise concludes with a comparison of various soaps, an emphatic approval being given to the pure soaps of Messrs. A. and F. Pears—who, by-the-way, in the wholesome pursuit of their cleansing crusade, have reproduced in terra-cotta the marvellously vivid group, called "You Dirty Boy!" executed for this firm by Giovanni Focardi, which excited general admiration at the Paris Exhibition.

THE LATE SIR JOHN GRAY, M.P.

A marble statue of the late Sir John Gray, M.P., has been erected in Sackville-street, Dublin, in remembrance chiefly of his services to the citizens of Dublin in obtaining a water supply and superintending the execution of the scheme, but also for his political exertions. He was proprietor and editor of the Freeman's Journal, and represented Kilkenny in the House of Commons from 1865 till his death, in 1875. His son, Mr. E. Dwyer Gray, M.P. for Tipperary, has this week been unanimously elected Lord Mayor of Dublin for next year. The statue is the work of Mr. Farrell, a Dublin sculptor, and is an excellent likeness. We present an Illustration of this monument to a public-spirited citizen of the Irish capital.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS PUMP-ROOM.

The fame of Tunbridge Wells has long been classical; its associations with the literary and fashionable history of England in the last century are well known. This pleasant and salubrious resort of genteel families in quest of healthful repose is situated in a beautiful district of Kent, little more than thirty miles from London. Its chalybeate waters are esteemed a likely cure for many human ailments. The new pump-room, of which we give an Illustration, is designed for the convenience of visitors attending the daily administration of the medicinal draught, a boon of kind Nature to the invalid or debilitated, but here made of easier and more agreeable reception by the artificial provision of many suitable comforts. The building has been erected at the end of the Royal Parade, commanding a view along that inviting lounge of good company at Tunbridge Wells.

EASTBOURNE MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.

This attractive and delightful seacoast town, on the breezy Sussex shore, has its local institutions of social usefulness, for the resident population of all classes, as well as for the entertainment of its holiday visitors. The Mutual Improvement Society, which was founded some five years ago, mainly or entirely by the zealous exertions of Mr. Strange, its President to this day, has achieved a considerable degree of success. Its classes and lectures are well attended, furnishing means of instruction in different branches of science and art, while the library is not less appreciated as a store-house both of sound knowledge and rational recreation for the minds of a large number of habitual readers. The new building, which was formally opened by the Duke of Devonshire, proprietor of a great part of the town of Eastbourne, on the 12th ult., is designed for the accommodation of the Society, comprising a suitable lecture-hall, and the apartments requisite for the library and classes of instruction. An Illustration of the building is presented, with due congratulations upon the prospects of so commendable an institution.

FUNERAL OF LORD LAWRENCE.

The funeral of this eminent and highly-esteemed servant of the State, formerly Viceroy of India and first Chief Administrator of the Punjaub, was solemnised in Westminster Abbey last Saturday. A portrait and memoir of the late Lord Lawrence appeared in our last publication. The funeral procession, composed of the hearse and twenty-three carriages, arrived from his residence in Queen's Gate-gardens shortly before noon. At the Abbey were some private friends and family mourners, the chief of these being Lady Lawrence, his widow, and his son, the present Lord Lawrence, the veteran General Sir George Lawrence, a brother of the deceased peer, the Hon. Hubert Lawrence and Mrs. H. Lawrence, and the Hon. Maude Lawrence. Lord Torrington attended as representative of her Majesty the Queen, and Sir Dighton Probyn for the Prince of Wales; Lord Cranbrook, Secretary of State for India, the Earl of Derby, Mr. Gladstone, Earl Granville, and other public men of note, were amongst the congregation. Some officers wore military uniform, and a few civilian officials were in Court dress; the Star of India was also worn.

We give an Illustration of the scene in the Abbey. The procession entered from the west cloisters by the Canons' door. First came the choir, the Canons, and the Dean. Sir Charles Brownlow carried on a cushion the orders worn by the distinguished servant of the Crown, and General Reynell Taylor bore the coronet. The oaken coffin followed, covered by the blue silk cloak of the Order of the Star of India worn by the deceased, above which were wreaths of white roses, the wreath-flower (stephanotis), eucharis, myrtle, and the large white lily of Japan. One wreath was entirely of green laurel-leaves. A large white cross of flowers was laid upon the bier. The brass plate on the coffin contains the inscription, "John Laird Mair, first Baron Lawrence, died June 27, 1879, aged 68 years." The supporters were Sir Stafford Northcote, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Northbrook, Lord Napier of Magdala, Sir W. Muir, Sir R. Montgomery, General Becher, and Sir H. Norman. The eldest son followed, with the widow, the sons and daughters, Colonel and the Hon. Mrs. Randall, the Rev. C. and the Hon. Mrs. Walpole, and other mourners, among whom were the servants of the house. The procession passed down towards the west door, and was increased in the south aisle by those gathered in the Jerusalem Chamber. Turning before the door, it came back up the nave and choir, every seat in which was occupied. Those who had followed from the Jerusalem Chamber passed into places within the rails of the sanctuary or in the north and south transepts. It was an impressive scene in the choir, while the burial service of Purcell and Croft was chanted and the Lesson read by Archdeacon Jennings. The Dean of Westminster read the service in tones distinctly heard throughout the sacred edifice, and Canon Farrar, Canon Duckworth, and the Rev. S. Flood Jones were also present. Doddridge's hymn, "O God of Bethel, by whose hand," having been sung to the music of Tallis's Ordinal, the coffin was carried to the brink of the grave close to the resting-places of Lord Clyde and Sir George Pollock in the nave, nearly opposite the pulpit. Here the concluding portion of the Service for the Burial of the Dead was read by the Dean, while the chief mourners stood at the head of the grave. The "Dead March" from "Saul" was played on the organ as the assembly dispersed. The anthem was Handel's, to the words "His body is buried in peace, but his name liveth for evermore." Dean Stanley preached a funeral sermon for Lord Lawrence on Sunday afternoon.

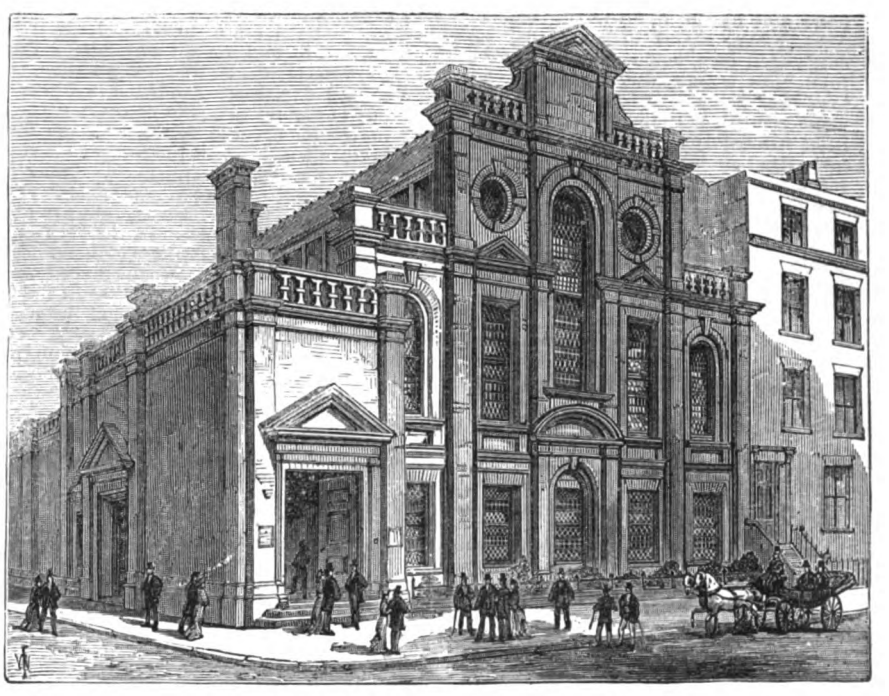
MONUMENT TO THE LATE SIR JOHN GRAY, DUBLIN.

H.M.S. BACCHANTE.

We learn from the Naval Intelligence of this week that it has been definitely decided that Commander George W. Hill, lately promoted, will be selected as the commander of the Bacchante, Lord Ramsay having declined the appointment. The Bacchante is going on a cruise with the sons of the Prince of Wales, their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, upon the termination of their studies as naval cadets in the Britannia training-ship at Dartmouth. An Illustration of the ship which has been selected and commissioned for this service is now presented in our Journal. She is a screw corvette, built of iron and cased with wood, carrying sixteen guns, and has been refitted and equipped at Portsmouth.

ISANDHLWANA REVISITED.

Our Special Artist with the British Army in Zululand, Mr. Melton Prior, sends us the sketches we present in this week's Number of our Journal, the Engraving in one instance being a facsimile of his original Sketch, showing the hideous traces and relics of past slaughter on the disastrous battle-field of Isandhlwana, with the abandoned waggons and wreck of the camp, as found on May 21, when Isandhlwana was revisited, four months after the terrible event which cost nearly a thousand English lives. It was on that day, as we have already reported, that General Marshall, with a strong detached force consisting of the 17th Lancers, one wing of the King's Dragoon Guards, two guns of the Royal Artillery, and five companies of the 2nd battalion 24th Regiment, with some Natal Volunteers and Natives, set out from Rorke's Drift for a reconnaissance in the direction of Isandhlwana. The distance is eleven miles, and the infantry troops did not go on all the way.



Our Artist writes as follows:—"The sight I saw at Isandhlwana is one I shall never forget. In all the seven campaigns I have been in—the Ashantee war, the Carlist war in Spain, the campaigns of Bulgaria and the Balkan and Roumelia between the Russians and Turks, and that of the preceding year in Herzegovina, and the Kaffir war of 1878—I have not witnessed a scene more horrible. I have seen the dead and dying on a battle-field by hundreds and thousands; but to come suddenly on he spot where the slaughtered battalion of the 24th Regiment and others were lying at Isandhlwana, was far more appalling. Here I saw not the bodies, but the skeletons, of men whom I had known in life and health, some of whom I had known well, mixed up with the skeletons of oxen and horses, and with waggons thrown on their side, all in the greatest confusion, showing how furious had been the onslaught of the enemy. Amidst the various articles belonging to them which were scattered over the field of carnage, were letters from wives at home to their husbands, from English fathers and mothers to their sons, portraits of those dear to them, and other homely little things, remembrances of the dearest associations. Skeletons of men lay on the open ground, bleaching under a tropical sun, along miles of country. The individuals could only be recognised by such things as a patched boot, a ring on the finger-bone, a particular button, or coloured shirt, or pair of socks, in a few known instances. And this could be done with much difficulty, for either the hands of the enemy, or the beaks and claws of vultures tearing up the corpses, had in numberless cases so mixed up the bones of the dead that the skull of one man, or bones of a leg or arm, now lay with parts of the skeleton of another. The Lancers went about all over the field, often here and there quietly lifting the clothes off the skeletons, or gently pushing them on one side with their lances, to see what regiment they belonged to. I almost regretted to see this done, for it seemed like sacrilege. But this is a time of war."

The following extract from a letter of the Daily News' correspondent is likewise a correct description of the scene, and will serve as a further commentary upon our Artist's Sketches made that day on the spot:—

At the top of the ascent beyond the Bashee, which the Dragoon Guards crowned in dashing style, we saw on our left front, rising above the surrounding country, the steep, isolated, and almost inaccessible hill, or rather crag, of Isandhlwana, the contour of its rugged crest strangely resembling a side view of a couchant lion. On the lower neck of the high ground on its right were clearly visible up against the sky line the abandoned waggons of the destroyed column.

No Zulus were seen. Flanking parties covered the hills on each side the track, along which the head of the column pressed at trot, with small detachments of Natal Carbineers in front of the Dragoon Guards. Now we were down in the last dip, had crossed the rocky bed of the little stream, and were cantering up the slope that stretched up to the crest on which were the waggons. Already tokens of the combat and bootless flight were apparent. The line of retreat towards Fugitives' Drift, along which, through a chink in the Zulu environment, our unfortunate comrades who thus far survived tried to escape, lay athwart a rocky slope to our right front, with a precipitous ravine at its base. In this ravine dead men lay thick—mere bones, with toughened, discoloured skin like leather covering them, and clinging tight to them, the flesh all wasted away. Some were almost wholly dismembered, heaps of clammy yellow bones. I forbear to describe the faces, with their blackened features and beards blanched by rain and sun. Every man had been disembowelled. Some were scalped, and others subjected to yet ghastlier mutilation. The clothes had lasted better than the poor bodies they covered, and helped to keep the skeletons together. All the way up the slope, I traced, by the ghastly token of dead men, the fitful line of flight. Most of the men hereabouts were infantry of the 24th. It was like a long string with knots in it, the string formed of single corpses, the knots of clusters of dead, where, as it seemed, little groups might have gathered to make a hopeless, gallant stand and die. I came on a gully with a gun limber jammed on its edge, and the horses, their hides scored with assegai stabs, hanging in their harness down the steep face of the ravine. A little further on was a broken and battered ambulance waggon, with its team of mules mouldering in their harness, and around lay the corpses of soldiers, poor helpless wretches, dragged out of an intercepted vehicle, and done to death without a chance for life.

Still following the trail of bodies through long rank grass and among stones, I approached the crest. Here the slaughtered ones lay very thick, so that the string became a broad belt. Many hereabouts wore the uniform of the Natal police. On the bare ground, on the crest itself, among the waggons, the dead were less thick; but on the slope beyond, on which from the crest we looked down, the scene was the saddest, and more full of weird desolation than any I had yet gazed upon. There was none of the stark, blood-curdling horror of a recent battle-field, no pool of yet wet blood, no raw gaping wounds, no torn red flesh that seems yet quivering—nothing of all that makes the scene of yesterday's battle so rampantly ghastly—shocked the senses. A strange dead calm reigned in this solitude of nature. Grain had grown luxuriantly round the waggons, sprouting from the seed that dropped from the loads, falling in soil fertilised by the life-blood of gallant men. So long in most places had grown the grass, that it mercifully shrouded the dead, whom four long months to-morrow we have left unburied.

As one strayed aimlessly about, one stumbled in the grass over skeletons that rattled to the touch. Here lay a corpse with a bayonet jammed into the mouth up to the socket, transfixing the head and mouth a foot into the ground. There lay a form that seemed cosily curled in calm sleep, turned almost on its face, but seven assegais stabs have pierced the back. Most, however, lay flat on the back, with the arms stretched widely out, and the hands clenched. I noticed one dead man under a waggon, with his head on a saddle for a pillow and a tarpaulin drawn over him, as if he had gone to sleep, and died so. In a patch of long grass, near the right flank of the camp, lay Durnford's body, the long moustache still clinging to the withered skin of the face. Captain Shepstone recognised him at once, and identified him yet further by rings on the finger and a knife with the name on it in the pocket, which relics were brought away. Durnford had died hard—a central figure of a knot of brave men who had fought it out around their chief to the bitter end. A stalwart Zulu, covered by his shield, lay at the Colonel's feet. Around him, almost in a ring, lay about a dozen dead men, half being Natal carbineers, riddled by assegai stabs. These gallant fellows were easily identified by their comrades who accompanied the column. Poor Lieutenant Scott was hardly at all decayed. Clearly they had rallied round Durnford in a last despairing attempt to cover the flank of the camp, and had stood fast from choice when they might have essayed to fly for their horses. Close beside the dead, at the picquet line, a gulley traverses the ground in front of the camp. About 400 paces beyond this was the ground of the battle before the troops broke from their formation, and on both sides this gulley the dead lie very thickly. In one place nearly fifty of the 24th lie almost touching, as if they had fallen in rallying square. The line of straggling rush back to camp is clearly marked by the skeletons all along the front. Durnford's body was wrapped in a tarpaulin and buried under a heap of stones. The Natal Carbineers buried their dead comrades roughly. The gunners did the same by theirs. Efforts were made, at least, to conceal all the bodies of the men who had not belonged to the 24th Regiment. These were left untouched by special orders from General Newdigate. General Marshall had nourished a natural and seemly wish to give interment to all our dead who so long have lain bleaching at Isandhlwana, but it appears that the 24th wish to perform this office themselves, thinking it right that both battalions should be represented, and that the ceremony should be postponed till the end of the campaign. In vain Marshall offered to convey a burial party of the regiments with tools from Rorke's Drift in waggons. One has some sympathy with the claim of the regiment to bury its own dead; but why postpone the interment till only a few loose bones can be gathered? As the matter stands, the Zulus, who have carefully buried their own dead, who do not appear to have been very numerous, will come back to-morrow to find that we visited the place not to bury our dead, but to remove a batch of waggons.

Wandering about the desolate camp, amid the sour odour of stale death, was sickening. I chanced on many sad relics—letters from home, photographs, journals, blood-stained books, packs of cards. Lord Chelmsford's copying book, containing an impression of his correspondence with the Horse Guards, was found in one of his portmanteaus, and identified, in a kraal two miles off. Colonel Harness was busily engaged collecting his own belongings. Colonel Glyn found a letter from himself to Lieutenant Melvill, dated the day before the fight. The ground was strewn with brushes, toilet bags, pickle bottles, and unbroken tins of preserved meats and milk. Forges and bellows remained standing ready for the recommencement of work. The waggons in every case had been emptied, and the contents rifled. Bran lay spilt in heaps. Scarcely any arms were found, and no ammunition. There were a few stray bayonets and assegais, rusted with blood. No fire arms.

All this time teams of horses were being hitched somehow on to the soundest of the waggons, till about forty fit to travel had been collected on the crest. Scouting parties had been firing the Zulu kraals around, which were blazing brilliantly. A report came in that some of these had been occupied the previous night, and had been hurriedly abandoned, the shields and assegais being left behind. Smouldering ashes were found in one, but not a single Zulu was visible; not even the old women. All had cleared off, and Lowe's detachment joined from the burning movement without having fired a shot or struck a blow. By twelve at noon the recovered waggons had started under escort for Rorke's Drift, and soon after the return march commenced, and was finished without incident.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The plague of rain, from which we have suffered so severely of late played sad havoc with the customary pleasures of the Newmarket July week. Nevertheless, in spite of an almost continuous downpour, the course was never in really bad order, and, except on the last day, the racing was of a very high character. Of course the July Stakes was the great event of the Tuesday, and Marc Antony's form at Stockbridge was so good that he secured the place of first favourite. However, on this occasion "public form" was never in the hunt with "private trials," and Musk and Ambassadress, a couple of youngsters that had never ran before, came right away from their field. The former, who won very easily, is a chestnut colt by Carnival—Meteor, and is, therefore, half brother to The Spark, who was a smart youngster, but very difficult to train; and Ambassadress is a filly in Lord Falmouth's stable, by Queen's Messenger—Pretence. It is very unusual to find Lord Falmouth without one or two crack two-year-olds, and we fear that this season his juveniles are not up to the customary standard. Di cord, who seemed hopelessly out of form at Ascot, beat Peace and Muley Edris in the Midsummer Stakes on the Wednesday, and Phénix accomplished an extraordinary performance in the Summer Cup, as he gave Hackthorpe 6 lb. and "lost him." The performance of the latter was, however, far too bad to be true; still Out of Bounds and Trappist could do nothing with the French crack, and his Epsom backers looked blacker than ever. Bend Or, the winner of the Chesterfield Stakes on the Thursday, was bred by the Duke of Westminsier, and is by Doncaster from Rouge Rose. He gives every promise of growing into a Derby winner, for, except that his pasterns are a shade too long, it is very difficult to find a fault with him. Petal, by Hermit—Gardenia, who won a race on the following day, was second, but a 7 lb. penalty put The Song quite out of court. The meeting of Phénix and Silvio, over the Bunbury Mile, excited great interest and some very heavy wagering. The Derby winner had to concede 2 lb. for the year between them, and, for once in a way, ran gamely, but a tremendous struggle ended in favour of the Frenchman by a head. By collateral running, therefore, Paul's Cray can be shown to be about the same horse as Silvio, "which is absurd," as Euclid tells us of certain superficially sound propositions. The match between Sir John Astley, on Drumhead, and Mr. Caledon Alexander, on Briglia, was really the only feature of note on the Friday, and Sir John, who scaled 16 st. 6 lb., won very easily indeed. We were gratified to note that Mr. Savile, who has suffered a terrible run of ill-luck for the last three or four years, won a couple of races with the useful Lincolnshire. The Liverpool Meeting opened in presence of a large concourse on Tuesday, when the principal race was for the Molyneux Cup, won by Storm, after a good race with Tower and Sword and Centenary. The Liverpool Cup fell to Maximilian on Wednesday, Glendale being second, and New Laund third.

Some very important sales of blood stock took place during the July week, and a good many horses changed hands, though, as has been the case for some time past, prices generally ruled low. The grand-looking Shannon, supposed to be in foal to Springfield, however, reached 1550 gs., and will join Mr. Taylor Sharpe's stud. Mr. Gee's horses in training sold fairly well, Spitzberg (800 gs.) heading the list; but Mr. Chaplin did not realise nearly such prices as usual for his yearlings, a filly by Hermit—Salamanca (500 gs.), a filly by Thunderbolt—Hazeldean (470 gs.), and a colt by Hermit—Stray Shot (510 gs), doing most to make up a fair average. Formosa (1000 gs.) was the prima donna of Mr. Gee's stud matrons, and Modena (800 gs.), Little Jemima (620 gs.), and Mandragora (530 gs.), were the most noticeable of the remainder. A yearling colt by Queen's Messenger—Retty (1000 gs.) was well sold; and the eighteen from the Yardley Stud made the capital average—as times go—of 273 gs. Twelve of them were by Sterling, and an own sister to Isonomy (1400 gs.) headed the list, a colt by Sterling—Siluria (1000 gs.) and a colt by Sterling—Sea Mark (700 gs.) coming next.

The most important cricket-match that was played towards the end of last week was that between the Gentlemen and Players at Kennington Oval, which was won by the former in a single innings with 126 runs to spare. This hollow victory was mainly due to the splendid bowling of Messrs. A. G. Steel and A. H Evans, who were never changed throughout the match, and took nine and ten wickets respectively. The Hon. A. Lyttelton (49) and Mr. A. G. Steel (not out, 46) did most of the scoring. Kent has beaten Sussex very easily, in spite of the fine bowling of Lillywhite for the latter county. Mr. F. Penn (51) was top scorer for Kent, and O'Shaughnessy took twelve wickets at the small expense of 40 runs. The Gentlemen v. Players' match at Lord's this week was drawn.

In spite of the miserable weather, there was a capital attendance at the Metropolitan Amateur Regatta on Tuesday. Once more the London R.C. carried off the chief honours of the day, as its representatives secured the Junior Sculls, Senior Sculls, Metropolitan Pairs, Senior Fours and Metropolitan Champion Cup. The amateur champion, F. L. Playford, came in first for the Senior Sculls, but his Henley luck stuck to him, and he was disqualified for fouling C. G. White, who had beaten L. Bidault, the French champion, in the second heat. The latter, who is 7 ft. 1 in. in height and weighs 17 st. 9 lb., sculls in a boat about the size of an ordinary pair-oar, and uses abnormally broad sculls; but he did not go more than a quarter of a mile, stopping when White had secured a couple of lengths lead of him. We have no doubt that Playford will once more assert his claim to be considered the best amateur sculler of this or any other time, when he defends the Wingfield Sculls.

Catherine Webster was on Tuesday, at the Central Criminal Court, found guilty of the murder of Mrs. Thomas, at Richmond, and was sentenced to death. The prisoner made a statement exonerating the witnesses Church and Porter (whom she had previously charged with having committed the crime), and accusing another man of having instigated her to commit the crime.—As was stated in a large portion of our issue last week, in the case of the Euston-square murder, Hannah Dobbs was found "Not guilty."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (trade-mark "Anti-Fa " registered) is the celebrated American Remedy for Corpulency.

Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a ver corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much fr m rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is not a secret nostrum, but a compound, concentrated, and very superior fluid extract of Fucus Vesiculosus, a species of sea lichen, so much extolled by the French and other medical journals as the newly-discovered remedy for corpulency. There are several species of the Fucus generally found growing together upon the rocks, but the Vesiculosus is the only variety that has been found to possess the desired qualities. That used in the manufacture of Allan's Anti-Fat is selected and gathered at the proper seasons by an experienced botanist, and the extract made from it is carefully prepared by a skilful chemist, in a manner best calculated to retain the peculiar active properties of the plant. M. Dufrere, the celebrated French physician, says that most of the failures to obtain good results from the fluid extract of Fucus arise from the use of the wrong species of the plant, from which much of the extracts found with the apothecaries and chemists are made, or from improper treatment in manufacturing these extracts.

The Botanic Medicine Company of Buffalo and London were among the very first to engage in manufacturing extracts from Fucus, and they have spared no pains or expense to obtain the true Fucus Vesiculosus, and their long experience in preparing extracts has enabled them to make an article that fully represents the medicinal properties, which are easily destroyed by the unskilful treatment of the chemists.

The Anti-Fat can therefore be relied upon to produce the most efficacious results.

In placing this remedy before the public as a positive cure for obesity, we do so knowing its ability to cure as attested by hundreds of testimonials, of which the following are samples:

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12 1879:—"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9 lbs. in four weeks.

THOMAS NEWSOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Radcliffe-street, South Ken ington, S.W.
June 2, 18.9.

To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.

"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine (Anti-Fat) both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, losing on an a verage 5 pounds per week.

"Yours respectfully, HARRY BRAHAM."

A Lancashire Lady writes, under date of May 5, 1879:—"Having been told by a very stout lady that your medicine (Anti-Fat) has done her a great deal of good, I should be obliged by your sending me a bottle."

"Porchester-terrace, Lancaster-gate, Hyde Park, W.

"Mrs. —— presents her compliments to the Manager of the Botanic Medicine Company, and begs to say that the six bottles of Anti-Fat, had on May 6, have produced a satisfactory result, and will be glad to have one dozen bottles sent by Parcel Delivery at once, for which she incloses cheque for three pounds six shillings (63s.).—May 30, 1879."

Since writing our first little circular treatise upon the subject of Corpulency, many hundreds of cases have come under our personal observation, and in all good results have followed the use of the Anti-Fat. In no case has any unpleasant or injurious effect been produced. Instead of regarding obesity as an abnormal condition, many people have erroneously considered it as an evidence of health, and any agent that reduces fat is therefore at once suspected of being injurious. Starting to reason from the false position that fat is an evidence of health, it is not surprising that they should, very naturally, fall into the error of supposing that an agent possessing properties capable of reducing corpulency would prove injurious to the health. Reasoning, however, from the rational basis, that an undue deposition of fat, constituting obesity, is not a healthy but a morbid condition, it is quite as natural for us to arrive at the opposite conclusion, which is sustained by experience and observation—i.e., that the reduction of fat in cases of corpulency is invariably followed by an improvement of strength, spirits, and physical comforts. Allan's Anti-Fat sold by Chemists everywhere Price 6s. 6d. per Bottle. Send stamp for Pamphlet entitled "How to get Lean without Starvation."

THE UNIVERSAL STEAM TRAM-CAR

CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, LIMITED.
ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Company has been formed for the purpose of purchasing, working, and generally dealing with the invention of Mr. Joseph Apsey, for "Improvements in Steam Tram-Cars," protected by English, Belgian, French, United States Italian, Russian, Austrian, and Spanish Letters Patents the benefit of which patents, and of all improvements that may be made by the inventor, are to be acquired by the Company as part of their purchase.

The subject of the invention is a tram-car worked by steam, its particular merits being that it complies more completely with the requirements of the Board of Trade, and the recommendations of the Committee of the House of Lords, than any other existing steam car. It can turn with facility sharper curves than are to be found on any tram line or railway, and with ease ascend a gradient of 1 in 20. The car is self-contained, and can be driven from either end. The brake power is so arranged that it can without trouble be stopped within its own length when running at the highest rate of speed allowed by Act of Parliament. It will be invaluable to the large number of non-paying branch railways, the car and engine being but a fraction of the cost of an ordinary locomotive. The vendors receive no payment in cash beyond the actual expenses incurred. They have also agreed that half the number of shares which they are to receive shall be "deferred" shares, and only rank for dividend after the 7000 shares now issued shall have received a dividend in every year amounting to £10 per cent, thus giving the 7000 shares a pecuniary 10 per cent preference.

The Company has acquired very spacious premises, situated at West Ham, Stratford E., containing suitable workshops for the manufacture of Engines, Carriages &c., amply sufficient to allow the largest orders to be executed. Around the boundary of the premises a single line of rails has been laid in a circular form, so placed as to show the facility with which this car can be driven on the most difficult line in existence, and on which a car driven by steam power is now being exhibited (by order) to the public.

For some time past Steam Tram-Cars have been working on a small scale both in the United Kingdom and on the Continent, and the results show the cost of steam power to be only half that of horse traction. Orders are already under negotiation, and steps being taken to place the cars of this Company on some of the existing lines.

It will be matter of the utmost importance for those Companies which have a new and numerous rolling stock with cars already running, that such cars can be easily fitted on to the platform which carries the machinery, thus avoiding the expense of providing a new car body, and effecting a vast saving of time.

THE UNIVERSAL STEAM TRAM-CAR

CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Limited.—Forms of application for shares prospectuses, drawings, opinions of the press, &c., and special orders to view the works, and the car in motion, together with every other information, may be obtained from the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, 35, Finsbury-circus, London, E.C.

"CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE" says:—
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly-nourished frame."

"NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE" says:—
"The nutritive qualities of cocoa over either those of tea or coffee are now so generally acknowledged that the steady increase shown by official statistics in its consumption during recent years ceases to be a matter of surprise. One of the first firms to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our breakfast-table was Messrs. Epps and Co., whose name, since 1839, has been so continuously before the public, and whose 'Homœopathic Cocoa is as familiar in our homes as the proverbial 'household words.' Those whose business it has been to watch at Messrs. Epps's works the elaborate and complex processes, and to note the care and labour bestowed before the crude cocoa bean is considered ready for consumption, cannot but admit that the popularity Messrs. Epps's productions have secured is fully deserved. The vastness of these works may be imagined when it is stated that four millions of pounds of prepared cocoa alone are prepared there yearly. The reputation gained, now many years since, for Mr. James Epps's preparation, both for its purity and its value as a dietetic, has been more than maintained. A constant increasing demand fully testifies to this—which must be as gratifying to Messrs. Epps as it is certainly flattering to the good faith they have kept with the public to secure so gratifying a result."

"ALL THE YEAR ROUND" says:—
"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to the Euston-road, hard by the Regent's Park, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

"COURT JOURNAL" says:—
"In a climate so varying and trying as our own, to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost among these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a soluble and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over four millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

"CASSELL'S HOUSEHOLD GUIDE" says:—
"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston-road, London."

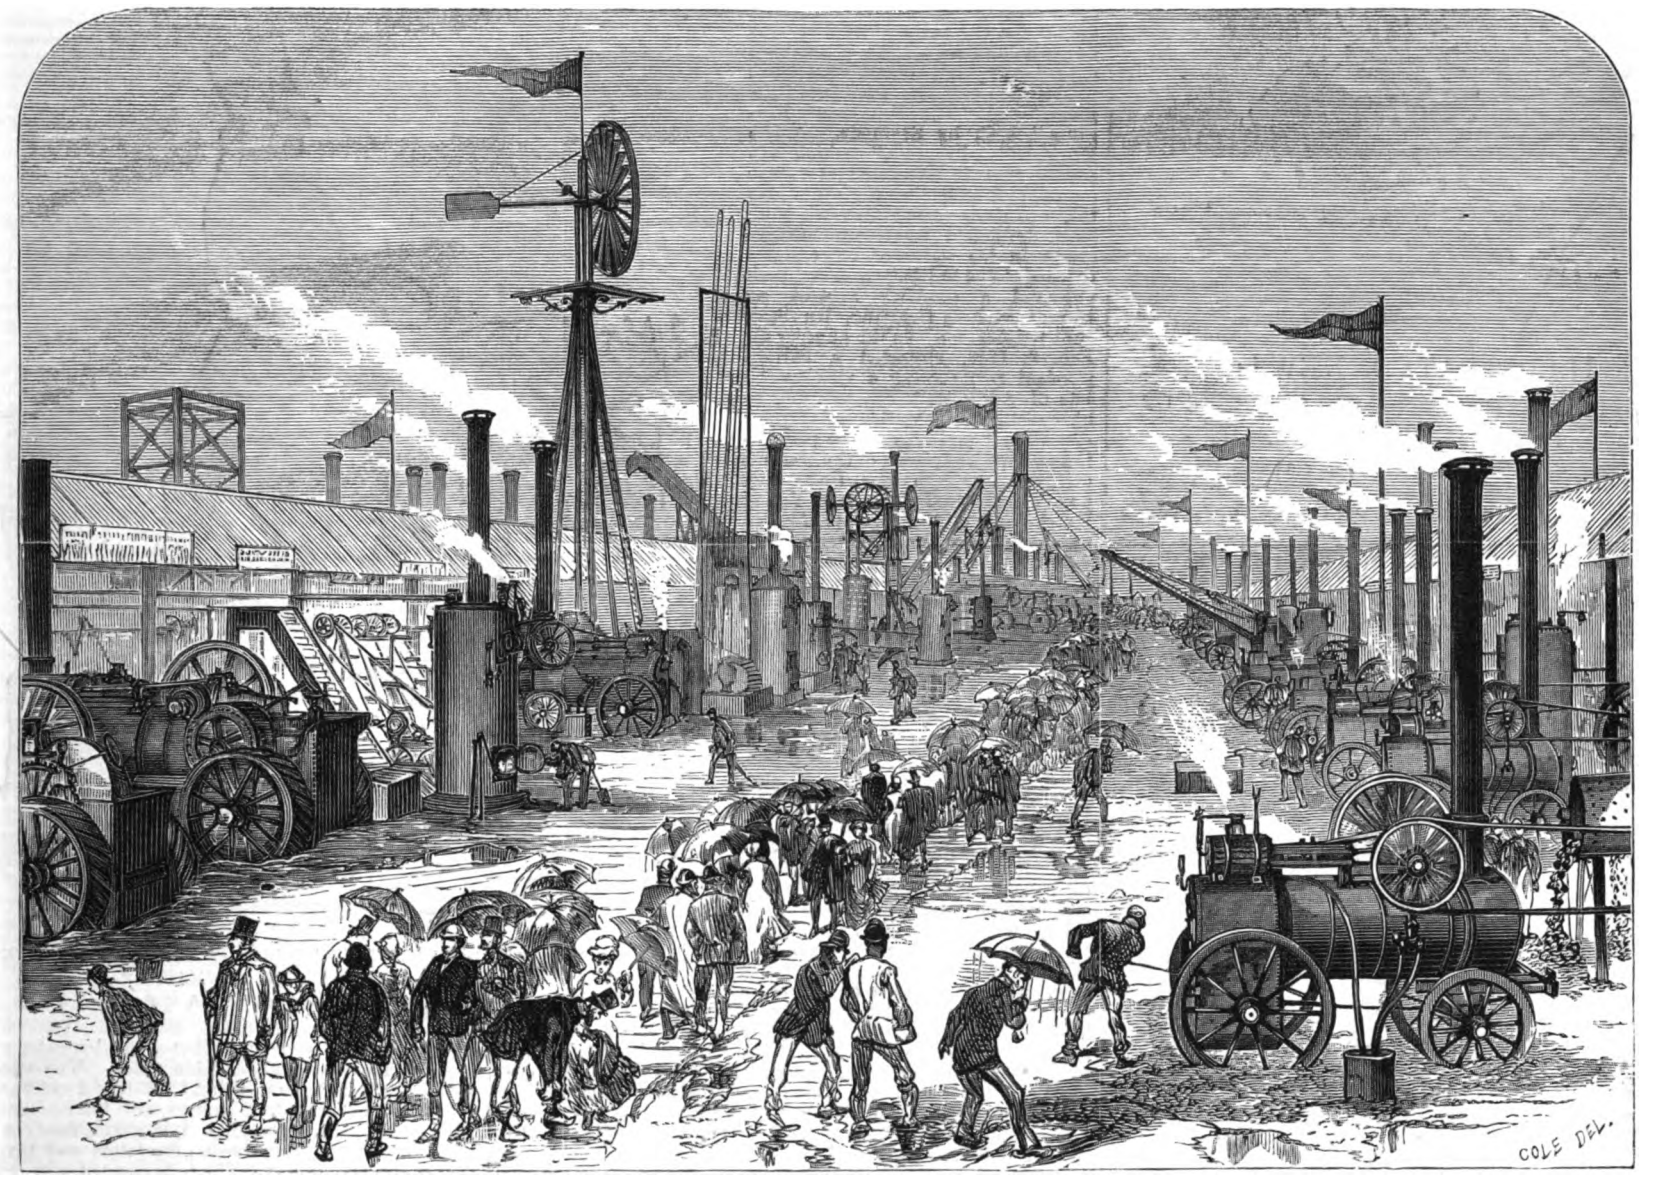
"MORNING ADVERTISER" says:—
"In the middle of the seventeenth century an announcement appeared in one of the few journals of that period, to the effect that 'out of Bishopsgate-street, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West Indian drink, called chocolate, to be sold at reasonable rates.' This is the first record we have of the introduction of cocoa into England. For a time it flourished as a fashionable drink, and then, like all fashions, subsided. Nearly two centuries after, in 1832, the duties, which had been almost prohibitive, were greatly reduced, and one of the first to take advantage of re-establishing the popularity of cocoa was Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists. Under the name of 'Prepared Cocoa' they introduced a soluble and convenient preparation, which required no boiling, and was palatable and highly nutritious. It met a public want, speedily became popular, and year by year has increased in demand, till the consumption now exceeds four millions of pounds yearly."

"CHRISTIAN WORLD" says:—
"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in the Euston-road.'"

"JOHN BULL" says:—
"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over four millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

"CHURCH REVIEW" says:—
"Although we cannot yet boast of a free breakfast-table, still the active legislation in furtherance of that object during the last half century leaves us much to be thankful for. A striking instance of the general good resulting from the repeal of heavy imposts upon our food supply is afforded by the marvellous increase in the consumption of cocoa since 1833, up to which period an almost prohibitive duty was levied. In 1830 the total amount consumed in this country was less than half a million pounds yearly. At the present time one firm alone, that of Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists, sell annually four million pounds."

"LAND AND WATER" says:—
"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use; and, being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during the visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage, might be likewise of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"



"MINING WORLD" says:—
"The preparation of pure and nutritious articles of diet is, in point of philanthrophy, noble work. The wear and tear upon brain and muscle in this age is growing more and more intense, so that without some compensating influence the end must be hopeless collapse in individuals and national decay collectively. Fresh air and more wholesome and nutritious diet must be had at any price. Both food and drink need great improvement. A few chemists have done great public service in this respect. Mr. James Epps, in the preparation of cocoa in its various forms, has done more, perhaps, than any other person to supply the tables of even the poorest with a most agreeable and wholesome article of diet. The application of modern science at his extensive works has brought cocoa, once the dear-bought luxury of the higher classes, within the reach of all, and there may now be found on the labourer's table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal breakfast-tables of early kings could boast. Cocoa as prepared by Mr. Epps is palatable refreshing, strengthening, and inestimably preferable to the trashy tea and coffee in general use."

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

Some of the engravings illustrating the murder of Mr. Weare appeared in the Morning Chronicle the day before their publication in the Observer, and they were also published simultaneously in the Englishman, which appears to have been in substance another edition of the Observer without the advertisements. The name of W. Hughes is attached to them as the engraver.

The Observer was loudly condemned for publishing the Weare and Thurtell illustrations, and it did not for some time bring out any more engravings; but this was probably owing more to the commercial depression prevailing at the time than to the strictures that had been passed upon newspaper morality.

About this time Bell's Life came into Mr. Clement's hands, and henceforth it shared, with the Morning Chronicle and the Englishman, in the illustrations prepared for the Observer. It had, however, a distinct series of illustrations of its own, which was continued for several years. But before describing them I must refer to one or two characteristic engravings which appeared in Bell's Life in its early days. On Nov. 28, 1824, the first large woodcut was published, representing a prize fight on a raised stage, and entitled the "Tip Top Milling at Warwick." According to the account accompanying the engraving, this prize-fight was a most brutal exhibition, without any display of what boxers call "science"—a mere exchange of hard blows, ending in one of the combatants being carried insensible from the stage. The coming fight was made known far and wide, so that when the day arrived vehicles from all parts of the country brought hundreds of spectators to the scene. The fight took place, openly and without fear of interruption, on the race-course at Warwick, the Grand Stand being crammed with spectators, and a ring of waggons, on which clustered crowds of eager gazers, surrounded the stage. This is all shown in the engraving in Bell's Life; and the different objects in the background, such as the church, the keep of Warwick Castle, the cemetery, &c., are pointed out by figures of reference with the most conscientious care. There is a very long account of the battle, couched in language only understood by members of the "fancy."

LISTON AS PAUL PRY.
From "Bell's Life," 1825.

In 1825 the town was being amused by Liston, as "Paul Pry," then a recent creation of the stage. On Nov. 8 in that year Bell's Life published a woodcut representing the comedian in that character, which I have copied as an early example of the illustrations of the great sporting journal.

In 1827 Bell's Life commenced a series of caricature sketches by Cruikshank, Seymour, and Kenny Meadows, entitled a "Gallery of Comicalities." This continued at intervals, along with other sketches entitled "Phizogs of the Tradesmen of London" (half-lengths of Butchers, Cobblers, &c., commencing in 1832); "Kitchen Stuff, or Cads of the Aristocracy" (heads of gentlemen's servants); "Portraits down the Road" (heads of characters seen on a stage-coach journey, such as the Landlady, the Commercial Traveller, the Chambermaid, &c); "The Sporting Album" (sketches from life, commencing 1834). These caricature subjects were continued to the end of the year 1840. The greater number are much too coarse, cynical, and vulgar for the taste of the present day. Sometimes a series of sketches extended through several consecutive weeks, such as "The Pugilist's Progress" and "The Drunkard's Progress," both by Seymour. "The Drunkard's Progress," which appeared in 1829, consisted of twelve scenes, and embodied the same idea that was many years afterwards more fully developed by George Cruikshank in his series of large plates entitled "The Bottle." Now and then appeared a sporting subject by Harvey, such as Coursing, Hunting, Bull-Baiting, &c. In the number for Feb. 8, 1829, appeared a curious woodcut representing a view in the Isle of Anglesea, which was said to have excited the attention and surprise of passing travellers from its presenting an excellent profile of the Marquis of Anglesea, who was then very popular. In 1831 portraits of Young Dutch Sam and Ned Neal, the famous pugilists, were published; and in 1838 the initials of John Leech began to appear to some of the cuts. Portraits of prize-fighters, race-horses, representations of racing-cups, &c., were given at intervals until 1851, when the last illustration, a monument to Tom Cribb, appeared.

As further examples of the illustrations in Bell's Life, I copy two, which were published in 1831.

About 1825 there was another sporting paper in existence, conducted by the celebrated author of "Tom and Jerry." It was called Pierce Egan's Life in London, and, like Bell's Life, had its sporting and other columns decorated with little woodcut headings, and sometimes published an engraving of a racing-cup.

At the beginning of 1827 the Observer resumed its illustrations of news, and on the death of the Duke of York published a long memoir of his Royal Highness, accompanied by an equestrian portrait of the Duke, "taken during his last visit to Newmarket." In the number for Jan. 21 are engravings of the remains of his Royal Highness lying in state in St. James's Palace, and a view of the interior of the Royal Mausoleum at Windsor. The above were engraved by Slader, and were published simultaneously in the Englishman and Bell's Life.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESSS THE DUKE OF YORK, TAKEN DURING HIS LAST VISIT TO NEWMARKET.
From the "Observer," Jan. 8, 1827.

The number published on Aug. 13, 1827, contains a large portrait of Mr. Canning, then just deceased. This portrait has the names of Jackson and Smith attached to it as the engravers. In the number for Sept. 30 there is a "correct view of the Suspension Bridge, Hammersmith, to be opened to the public on Saturday, Oct. 6, 1827." This is engraved by Slader, and appears also in Bell's Life the same week. The following week the Observer published a large plan showing the alterations proposed in St. James's Park in connection with the building of Buckingham Palace; and on Nov. 18 appeared a plan of the port of Navarino, accompanying an account of the naval battle at that place. In December was published a view of "Mr. Gurney's new Steam-Carriage, as it appeared in the Regent's Park on Thursday, Dec. 6, 1827," and later in the same month a representation of Mr. D. Gordon's new steam-coach. Both these engravings are curious and interesting, as showing the attempts that were made fifty years ago to apply steam to the propulsion of carriages on common roads.

MR. GURNEY'S NEW STEAM-CARRIAGE AS IT APPEARED IN THE REGENT'S PARK ON THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1827.
From the "Observer," Dec. 9, 1827.

Mr. Gurney was a medical man, but gave up his practice and devoted himself to scientific studies, and particularly to the construction of locomotive engines for turnpike travelling. He had seen Trevithick's engine, and when a youth had frequently met Trevithick himself. He had thus become imbued with a conviction of the practicability of making a steam-carriage that would travel on common roads. Other inventors succeeded in doing the same thing, but Mr. Gurney attained the greatest amount of success. With his steam-carriage he made a journey from London to Bath on July 28, 1829, performing the return journey at fourteen miles an hour, or the eighty-four miles in nine hours and twenty minutes, stoppages for fuel and water included. In 1831 he established a regular steam conveyance between Gloucester and Cheltenham, a distance of about nine miles. The steam-carriages commenced plying on Feb. 21, 1831, and continued running four times a day for four months, with tolerable regularity and without accident. The project, however, received such determined opposition from coach proprietors and turnpike trusts that it was abandoned. The tolls exacted were so heavy that at one gate they amounted to eight guineas. Mr. Gurney is said to have expended £36,000 on his enterprise, but without any permanent beneficial result. His inventive genius, however, contributed to develop the high speed of the locomotive and the consequent success of railways. He died Feb. 28, 1875, aged eighty-two years.

Mr. Gordon took out a patent for a steam-coach in 1822, and constructed two different machines. One had its wheels surrounded by cogs, or projecting teeth. This engine was to be placed within a large rolling drum, about nine feet in diameter and five feet wide, the inside of which should be fitted with circular rack-rails fitting the wheels of the steam-engine. Thus the motion of the engine would cause the drum to roll forward, on the same principle that a squirrel causes a cylindrical cage to revolve; and the rolling of the drum was to move a carriage connected with it. The other machine had two long propellers or legs, intended to obviate the supposed tendency of wheels to slip, when ascending a slope.

The Thames Tunnel, which was begun in 1825, by Mr. Brunel, was on more than one occasion threatened with destruction by irruptions of water. On Jan. 12, 1828, six workmen perished by a sudden rush of water into the workings, and on the 20th the Observer published an engraving representing the catastrophe. On the 9th of June appeared "A correct view of Ascot Heath Race Course, taken by an eminent artist on Thursday last." This "eminent artist" was William Harvey, and the cut bears the names of Jackson and Smith as the engravers. A sheet containing a selection of comic sketches from Bell's Life was issued with the Observer of July 20, 1828, accompanied by a statement that the sketches (twenty-seven in number) cost one hundred and forty-two pounds, drawing and engraving. This sounds very trivial, when contrasted with the large sums now paid by illustrated newspapers.

THE AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

Unfavourable weather has attended the holding of the great International Agricultural Show at Kilburn to its close, including the extension of the show of implements up to Thursday evening. Rain has, indeed, held off for the whole or parts of two or three days; but from the opening to the closing of the exhibition there has been no drying of the great area of mud in the show-yard sufficient to enable pedestrians to get about in comfort. In addition to the sleepers and burnt earth which rendered the main roadways traversable, and the plank pathways which were still better to walk upon, wattle hurdles were laid down in all directions; but the mud soon found its way through these, so that the only advantage which they afforded was that of preserving visitors from sinking more than a certain depth in the mire. The trustful pedestrian who ventured upon them was every now and then disgusted by the spurting up of the liquid mud through their insterstices as he trod on hurdles which covered peculiarly sloppy places. Shoeblacks have had their reward for the extra work which occasioned an unusual demand for their services; but unfortunate washerwomen, who do their jobs by contract, or at so much per piece, will long remember the hard rubbing entailed upon them by the saturation of stockings and skirts with Kilburn mud.

Her Majesty the Queen paid her deferred visit to the show on Saturday morning, arriving soon after ten o'clock and remaining in the show-yard about an hour. Her Majesty was accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, and attended by Lady Erroll, Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, and Colonel Du Plat. At the Queen's Park station the Royal party was received by the Prince of Wales, as President of the Royal Agricultural Society, and by several members of the Council, including the Duke of Sutherland, the Duke of Manchester, the Earl of Leicester, Earl Spencer, Viscount Bridport, Lord Skelmersdale, Lord R. Grosvenor, Colonel Kingscote, and Mr. Jacob Wilson. The Prince of Wales rode beside the carriage of her Majesty to the main entrance of the show, where loyal demonstrations were made by the people assembled, and especially by a body of Irish tenant farmers, a portion of the party of 350 organised by Canon Bagot. Her Majesty was driven to the great horse ring, in the centre of which she remained in her carriage while the horses, cattle, mules, and donkeys were paraded. Mr. H. M. Jenkins, secretary of the society, and Mr. Jacob Wilson, steward of the general arrangements of the show, here had the honour of being presented to the Queen, who complimented them upon their efforts to make the exhibition successful. Later in the day the Duke of Cambridge visited the show.

Entirely, we believe, on account of the unfavourable weather, the society must suffer a heavy loss, amounting, according to one estimate, to nearly £15,000. Up to Monday evening, which was the close of the show as far as the live stock are concerned, the numbers of visitors who had paid for admission each day were as follows:—Monday, June 30, 4319, at five shillings each; Tuesday, 5317 at five shillings; Wednesday and Thursday, the two half-crown days, 22,147 and 9431; Friday, Saturday, and last Monday, the three shilling days, 35,162, 50,255, and 45,000. Thus about 170,000 persons had paid for admission at the gates up to Monday evening, and in addition there were many who purchased tickets for the week, and the numbers who have since attended to see the implements on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. When the grand total is given it will appear to be a large one; but in reality it will not be half what it was expected to be, and, no doubt, would have been, if fine weather had afforded to the show its utmost attractiveness.

Our illustrations to-day represent a few excellent specimens of the live stock, a portion of the machinery in motion, and a few stationary engines and machines. The hackney mares and foals were a rather small, but fairly meritorious, class. The first prize was taken by Mr. H. Miller's Bella, a neat and useful hackney. In the second place was Mr. Lancaster's Maid of All Work, a very clever old mare, well known in the Yorkshire and other show-rings. Other mares familiar to show-goers were Mr. Kirby's Nelly and Mr. Hodgkinson's Trudchen, both well-formed animals. Trudchen's foal is remarkable as being descended from the famous American trotter, Shepherd F. Knapp, a horse which first made his appearance in this country at Islington some years ago, and created a great deal of admiration by his wonderful action. Mr. D. M'Intosh's Electricity is a useful, and Mr. Waller's Kitty a lengthy, cobby mare.

The Earl of Ellesmere's Young Prince of the Isle, winner of the first prize in the class for three-year-old agricultural horses not Clydesdales or Suffolks, also of the Champion Cup awarded to the best horse in classes 1 and 2, is a very handsome and symmetrical bay, and a capital walker. He is a son of Prince of the Isle, and on his mother's side he claims descent from the famous horse, Welsher's Honest Tom. He was bred by Mr. Fryer, of Chatteris. Sampson III., another of Lord Ellesmere's horses shown in our Engraving, the second-prize three-year-old in the class just mentioned, has more of the drayhorse character than Young Prince of the Isle, being a thick-set, short-legged, powerful horse. He was bred by Mr. Child, of Chatteris, and his blood is of the Sampson and Young England's Glory strains. Mr. Richard Garrett's Cupbearer III., winner of the first prize in the class for Suffolk horses, four years old and upwards, is a well-known prize-taker, and a capital type of the Suffolk horse, with all its virtues and defects. For the Suffolk Champion Prize, he was beaten by Mr. Biddell's Jingo, first of the Suffolk two-year-olds. This decision of the judges, however, has been very much questioned by critics. A grand, compact, and weighty Clydesdale is Mr. Buchanan's Druid, winner of the first prize in his class, and the Champion Cup, as the best horse of the breed.

The Prince of Wales gained the cup given for the best Clydesdale mare or filly. The other cup-winners in the horse classes were Mr. D. Green, for the beautiful Suffolk mare Smart; and Mr. Lawrence Drew, for his agricultural filly Camilla.

The horse show as a whole was the greatest ever got together, and many of the classes were excellent. The thoroughbreds and hunters, however, were by no means so generally creditable as the grand collection of agricultural horses, though there were, of course, some fine animals of all sorts. The hackneys, as a whole, may be best described as having been a fair show. To give even the principal prize-winners in all the classes would occupy more space than we can afford to-day; and we must be content with this general summary, in addition to the particulars of some of the agricultural classes given above.

Sea Gull and her family, shown in our Engraving, made up an admirable group of shorthorns. Sea Gull herself is a noble old cow, and beside her stood her two noted sons, Telemachus VI. and Telemachus IX., and her two daughters, Sea Bird and Sea Lark. Telemachus IX. took the £100 champion prize as the best shorthorn bull in the show-yard; but most critics greatly prefer his elder brother, while others would have liked another animal, hereafter to be mentioned, to take the crack prize. The other £100 prize, for the best shorthorn female, was taken by Mr. Hutchinson, with Gainful. Perhaps the greatest sensation in the awarding of prizes to shorthorns was caused by the judges placing first in the class for bulls over three years old Anchor, a bull bred by Mr. Richard Chaloner, of Moyalty, in the county of Meath. The Earl of Ellesmere's attractive Lord and Mr. Willis's Rear Admiral were the chief rivals of the Irish bull. The first of these won chief honours in his class at Bristol last year, and is a remarkably fine animal; but the decision in favour of Anchor was popular, as the bull is in lean condition, and it is a common complaint that mere fatness carries too much weight in the competition at shows of breeding stock. Anchor is a straight, level bull, with plenty of length, and with capital quarters, though he has faults which are the more apparent on account of his lean condition. But he is a good, hardy, useful animal, and many lookers-on hoped he would win the prize that was taken by Telemachus IX. Other first-prize animals amongst the Shorthorn bulls were Mr. Willis's Vice-Admiral, Mr. Handley's Master Harbinger, and Mr. Joseph Stratton's calf Mercury. In the female classes, besides Gainful and Sea Gull, Mr. Hutchinson's Grateful, Mr. Foljambe's Azucena, and Lord Fitzhardinge's Lady Wild Eyes 15th, were first in their respective classes. Altogether, the show of Shorthorns was perhaps the largest and best that has ever been seen.

The Herefords were not numerously represented, but the quality of many of the animals was very fine, and did credit to the breed. The winners of first prizes were Mr. Aaron Rogers, whose bull Grateful carried off also the Champion Cup, Mr. T. J. Carwardine, Mr. Arkwright, Mrs. Sarah Edwards, whose cow Leonora was the winner of the Cup for the best female amongst the Herefords, and Mr. W. Taylor.

The pretty Devons made a nice show. The champions were Mr. Walter Farthing's Lord Newsham, and his Pretty Face. Mr. Farthing also won three other first and two second prizes. Viscount Falmouth was first in two classes, and Mr. W. Rolles Fryer in two others.

There was a great and good show of Sussex cattle. This breed has made a great advance in recent years, and at Kilburn three out of the eight classes were commended by the judges. Mr. James Braby, Mr. J. S. Hodgson, Messrs. J. and A. Heasman, Mr. George Smith, Mr. Louis Huth, and Mr. Blake Duke carried off the chief honours.

The other breeds were nearly all exceptionally well represented. The most remarkable feature of the cattle show, however, was the large and excellent exhibition of Jerseys, by far the largest and finest ever seen. Mr. J. Le Brun carried off the Champion Cup for the best bull with Duke, a very fine specimen of the breed; Mr. S. B. Borth's Favourite, a beautiful cow, gained the other champion prize. Mr. F. Le Brocq, Mr. George Simpson, Mr. J. P. Mariett, Mr. R. Corbett, Mr. J. R. Newberry, the Rev. J. R. Watson, and Mr. R. N. G. Baker were the other first-prize winners. Foreign cattle were very indifferently represented, owing to the unwillingness of foreign breeders to undergo the inconvenience of subjecting their animals to quarantine.

The show of sheep was a large and good one, and there was great competition in many of the classes, especially amongst the Southdowns. Of pigs, the exhibition was not much larger than it has been at previous Royal shows.

The dairy department, especially the exemplification of different methods of making cheese and butter practised in this and some foreign countries, as shown by the Aylesbury Dairy Company, attracted a large share of attention throughout the week.

The implement department of the Exhibition was, as stated last week, on an enormous scale. There was, however, a remarkable dearth of novelties, though the improvements on well-known machines were, as usual, numerous. Mr. Samuelson, of Banbury, showed a new hay-presser, invented by M. Theo. Pilter, of Paris, a very ingenious machine, which gained a silver medal. Perhaps the most important novelty to the Royal show was Messrs. Burgess and Key's sheaf-binder, which was first shown at the Smithfield Club Show last year. This invention has several special advantages as a self-binder. First, it can be attached to or detached from the reaper at pleasure—a very important consideration; next, its binding platform is only a little above the level of the reaper platform; lastly, it binds with string instead of wire, which all other successful binders use. It would, of course, be premature to speak confidently of the success of this machine in ordinary field-work. It was privately tried last harvest by the inventors, and will probably be shown in public this season. It is of such admirable simplicity in its working parts that the most confident opinions as to its success are expressed by many good judges. The knotting apparatus is a wonderful little piece of mechanical ingenuity and simplicity. It was shown apart from the machine, from which it can be easily detatched. A great improvement in their binder has been introduced by Messrs. Burgess and Key since they showed it at the Agricultural Hall. This consists of a sheaf-compressor in the form of a strong cord which winds round and nips the sheaf at the same time as the small string is knotted round it, thus taking off the strain and allowing the use of smaller and cheaper string for binding than could otherwise be used. Messrs. Clayton and Shuttleworth, of Lincoln, showed an improved steam-power chaff-cutter, which embodies several improvements. Mr. Brenton, of St. Germains, gained a medal for some new door and gate fastenings, very ingenious and useful. Silver medals were also awarded to Messrs. Alan, Ransome, and Co. for their ingenious contrivance for making the staves and heads of butter firkins, to Messrs. M'Kenzie and Sons for a gorse-crusher, to Messrs. Hornsby and Sons for a turnip-cutter, to Mr. A. Clert for a corn-screen, to M. Odile Martin for an apparatus for fattening poultry, to the Kirkstall Forge Company for patent shafting, to Mr. Henry Brinsmead for a straw-shaker, to Mr. Francis Ley for a driving-chain for machinery, to Messrs. Polyblank and Co. for a band sawing-machine, to Messrs. Nalder and Nalder for a straw elevator attached to a thrashing-machine, to Messrs. Gibbons for a drum guard for thrashing-machines, and Mr. George H. Innes for a similar appliance. Mentions of the second class are awarded to M. Francois L. Herron, the Pulsometer Company, Messrs. Eastwille and Kenyon, Everett, Adams and Co., Noie, of Paris, Thomas Adams, Christy, Voitellier and Rouillier, and Arnoult, for various implements and improvements.

The well-known implement firms were all represented at Kilburn, and as even the chief of them are too numerous to be mentioned in this article, we will not single out any of them. The great seedsmen, Messrs. Sutton, Carter, Webb, and Wheeler, made great and attractive displays, which, as usual, attracted a large amount of attention from the visitors. In looking over some of the miscellaneous exhibits, our attention was especially called to Mr. George Cheavin's (of Boston, Lincolnshire) Rapid Water-Filters, which have been wonderfully successful in taking prizes at various exhibitions, having gained amongst other honours that of the grand silver medal at the Paris Exhibition last year. These filters are especially to be commended for the ease with which they can be cleaned.

The show of ancient and modern implements attracted much attention. The history of some of the old implements deserves especial attention, but two or three of these are noticed separately. Other features of this greatest of all agricultural shows were highly appreciated by visitors, and the only pity is that the weather was so persistently bad as to keep thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, away, and to a great extent to mar the pleasure of those who braved it. It is to be hoped that the site chosen for the Royal Show at Carlisle next year is not on a clay soil, nor on a low level. If we are not mistaken, the Bath and West of England Society have chosen the race-course at Worcester for their next exhibition, and that, we understand, is liable to be flooded after heavy rains. After the muddy horrors of the two great shows of this year, at Kilburn and Exeter, it is not unreasonable to hope that our two great Agricultural Societies will take special precaution against a repetition of such unfortunate experience.

OLD AND NEW ENGINES, MINING AND AGRICULTURAL.

By way of exemplifying the progress of mechanical inventions, and especially those of engines designed for mining, draining, irrigating, and agricultural operations, we give Illustrations of three useful engines belonging to very different periods of time—namely, Savery's water-raising engine, or pump, of 1698; then, the first steam-engine constructed for driving a corn-threshing machine, which was Trevithick's, in 1811; and, lastly, the improved modern engine, called the Pulsometer, which may be applied with great advantage to various purposes, excavating or well-sinking, drawing off sewage, dealing with liquid matters in factories, and not only in the field or mine, but in the farm-yard or household.

The principle of raising water by the direct action of steam upon its surface in two chambers alternately, the water being first lifted into the chambers by atmospheric pressure, to fill a vacuum caused by the condensation of waste steam, was employed by Thomas Savery a hundred and eighty years ago. His exposition of this ingenious contrivance, and of its manifold uses and advantages, is quaintly set forth in an essay published at the time, with an imaginary dialogue between the author and another person, which has been reprinted in the Miner's Friend. His patent was taken out in 1698. In June, 1699, he submitted a working model to the Royal Society; and before long the invention gained a considerable share of public attention. It was of the greatest service in the development of the mining industry of England. The general principle involved in Savery's engine is identical with that which has recently suggested the Pulsometer; but there is this important difference, that the valves of Savery's engine had to be managed by hand, requiring the continual attention of the attendant, whilst the Pulsometer is absolutely automatic, and may be left for weeks without interference. Various modifications of Savery's machine were made by Desaguliers and others, but they were more, rather than less, complicated than the original engine. It was also found difficult to get boilers made of the requisite strength.

In the Pulsometer the condensation of the steam is not effected by the cooling of the vessel, either by an external shower, as in Savery's engine, or by an internal injection, as in Desaguliers' apparatus, but by the sudden contact of the steam, after it has done its work of depressing the water, in one of the chambers, with the surface of that water. Another quite original feature of the Pulsometer is the automatic action of the valve, which regulates the flow of steam to each chamber alternately, and which thus controls the number of pulsations and the quantity of liquid discharged. The pump, being filled with water, is ready for work. Steam is then admitted through the steam-pipe from above, by partly opening the stop-valve, and passes down one side of the neck, pressing on a small portion of the surface of the water in the chamber exposed to it, so that there is but very slight condensation of the steam at first. The water of this chamber is driven into the rising main. But, as soon as the level of the water descends to the orifice which leads to the discharge, the steam blows through with a certain degree of violence. Then, being at once brought into immediate contact with the water, an instantaneous condensation of the steam takes place. In consequence of this, a vacuum is so rapidly formed in the chamber just emptied, that the ball-valve at the top closes, preventing the further admission of steam; and the vacuum being completed, water rushes up through the suction-pipe, and fills the chamber again. The second chamber is by this time in the same state that the first chamber was at the beginning; and so they go on, acting upon one another. This engine can scarcely ever get out of order.

One of our Illustrations is that of Trevithick's steam-engine for driving a threshing-machine. This engine was built, at a cost of £70, by Mr. Trevithick of Hayle, in 1811, for the late Sir Christopher Hawkins, for threshing corn on his own farm of Trewithan, at Probus, near Grampound, in Cornwall. It has been in use ever since, and is now the property of his nephew, Christopher Henry Thomas Hawkins, Esq., of Trewithan. The boiler was new about twenty-five years ago. It appears that the fire went through the boiler and out at the other end; the flame travelling round the outsides, which were inclosed at the further end by a brickwork flue to about half the height of the boiler. This was all buried somewhat in the ground. In Cornwall the main shaft which carries the flywheel is fixed in the wall, as here represented; but at Kilburn, the boiler not being required to work this old engine, the brick flue which partly came round the boiler has not been erected. The Illustration represents this part as it is at the show—that is, not embedded in the ground. Two back timbers are left out of the Illustration, as they were only fixed up at Kilburn. The engine has been worked here by compressed air.

At yesterday week's sitting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, the general purposes committee in their report submitted a letter from the trustees of the Peabody Donation Fund, offering to purchase the freehold of several sites under the Artisans' Dwellings Act at twenty years' purchase, upon a rental of threepence per superficial foot, and recommended that the offer be accepted. An amendment was moved rejecting the offer on the ground that the execution of the plan would be disadvantageous to the interests of the ratepayers; but the original motion was carried by a large majority.

A meeting of the National Life-Boat Institution was held on Thursday week. It was reported that the Lizard life-boat had been instrumental in saving the distressed brig Scotscraig, of Dundee, and her crew. The Newbiggin life-boat had also been the means, during a gale of wind and very heavy sea, of assisting ashore six fishing-cobles which had been overtaken by a sudden storm and were in much peril. Payments amounting to £1910 were made on some of the 269 life-boat establishments of the institution. The receipt of various contributions and legacies was announced, including a further sum of £20 from "M. L. C., of South Australia, in grateful remembrance of merciful preservation from imminent peril at sea in 1862." The committee expressed their deep regret at the death of Lord Lawrence, who had always taken a warm interest in the welfare of the life-boat cause, and was a liberal annual subscriber in aid of its funds. Reports were read from the inspectors of life-boats to the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

M. Massenet's "Il Rè di Lahore" was successfully given, for the second time, on Thursday week, and was announced for repetition on Tuesday. On Saturday "Le Prophète" was repeated, again with the fine performance of Mdlle. Rosine Bloch as Fides, and other features of the cast the same as recently, excepting the character of John of Leyden, which was transferred to Signor Sylva, who sang with good effect in the declamatory passages of his music, and was much applauded in several instances, especially after his delivery of the narration of John's vision and the triumphal hymn, his share in the final duet with Fides having also been impressively given. The performances announced for this week—the last but two of the season—were repetitions of operas recently given, with the exception of "Hamlet," which is to be performed this (Saturday) evening, for the first time this season.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season takes place this (Saturday) afternoon. As usual, the programme includes performances by most of the principal artists of the Royal Italian Opera, Madame Adelina Patti being among those announced.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Madame Marie Roze made her first appearance this season yesterday (Friday) week, as Pamina, in "Il Flauto Magico," and was warmly welcomed, after an absence of nearly two years in America, where she has met with very great success. Her performance on the occasion now referred to was distinguished by all her former refinement, with rather enhanced dramatic and vocal power. Madame Gerster's brilliant execution of the two bravura airs of the Queen of Night (the first one encored) was another special feature in the rendering of the opera, the cast of which included Madame Trebelli as one of the attendants on the Queen of Night, Madame Sinico as Papagena, Signor Frapolli as Tamino, Signor Del Puente as Papageno, Herr Behrens as Sarastro, &c.

On the following morning, "Aïda" was given, for the fifth time here, with the character of Amonasro transferred to Signor Pantaleoni, who made his first appearance in England and met with a deservedly favourable reception. He possesses a fine baritone voice, which he uses with skill and judgment, and he is an exceedingly good actor. He at once established these facts in the first scene in which Amonasro appears, and improved the impression by his fine performance in the great duet with Aïda in the third act. The cast was otherwise as recently noticed. Signor Arditi conducted.

Last Saturday evening, "Il Trovatore" was given, and Madame Marie Roze obtained another success by her fine singing as Leonora; excellent also having been the performances of Mdlle. Tremelli as Azucena, Signor Fancelli as Manrico, and Signor Galassi as the Count di Luna.

On Tuesday M. Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" was performed for the first time at this theatre. The work was originally produced at Paris in 1866, and was first brought out in Italian in 1870, during Mr. Mapleson's temporary occupation of Drury-Lane Theatre. On that occasion, and subsequently, we spoke in detail as to the characteristics of the music, and may now briefly refer to its latest performance, when the title-character and that of Federico were sustained as before. Madame Christine Nilsson's Mignon was again full of charm, both vocal and personal; and her delivery of the romance "Non conosci" (the well-known "Kennst du das Land"), the characteristic Styrienne, "Conosco un Zingarello;" the prayer in the last act, and other incidental passages, was admirable alike for refinement, expression, and dramatic feeling. The co-operation of Madame Trebelli was again a powerful aid to the general effect. The fine voice and polished style of this artist were displayed with great success in Federico's music, the "Rondo Gavotte" in the second act having been encored. Mdlle. Kellogg, in the character of the volatile actress, Filina, also contributed much to the efficiency of the cast, and gave the lively music of the part with much brightness, especially the solo "Io son Titania." Signor Campanini as Guglielmo, sung in his best manner, and gained a deserved encore in the romance "Ah! non credea." M. Roudil was a satisfactory Lotario, and the character of Giarno and Laerte were efficiently filled, respectively, by Signori Franceschi and Rinaldini. The opera was altogether very effectively given, Sir Michael Costa having conducted as usual.

On Monday "La Traviata" was the opera, and included the brilliant singing of Madame Gerster as Violetta, the cast having been otherwise also as on former occasions. Repetition performances filled up the remainder of the week, which was announced as the last of the regular season.

The eighth and last concert of the sixty-seventh season of the Philharmonic Society, last week, included the performance of a manuscript symphony by Professor G. A. Macfarren. The work had been heard before at one of the concerts of the extinct British Orchestral Society. It is divided into four movements—an Allegro in E minor, a "Serenade" in C major, a "Gavotte" in G (with subsidiary "Musette" in C), and a finale in E major. Each portion was applauded, especially the "Gavotte;" and the composer was called on to the platform. Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony and Weber's "Jubilee" overture were the other orchestral works. M. Saint-Saëns gave a brilliant rendering of his second pianoforte concerto (in G minor), and also played a prelude and fugue (in A minor) by Bach on the organ; and vocal pieces were effectively sung by Mdlle. Hohenschild and Mr. W. H. Cummings. Mr. Cusins was warmly greeted on the completion of the thirteenth year of his occupation of the office of conductor of the society's concerts.

Mr. J. Farmer's sacred oratorio "Christ and His Soldiers" (composed of well-known hymns, and intended to be sung to children and young persons) was performed at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon.

The extra concert given by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir on Monday evening included fine performances of Bach's motet for double choir, "The Spirit also helpeth us;" Mendelssohn's hymn "Hear my prayer," the soprano solo by Miss Robertson, Weelkes's madrigal "As Vesta was descending," and that by Morley, "My bonny lass," and modern part-songs; and other vocal pieces by the lady just named, Miss F. Robertson, and Mr Joseph Maas. Mr. Charles Hallé played some pianoforte solos with great effect; and Herr Sam Franks, a new violinist, executed two pieces with great success. Mr. Leslie conducted, as usual. The Prince and Princess of Wales were present.

The annual concert of the excellent conductor, Signor Arditi, took place at the Steinway Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when a varied programme was contributed to by several of the principal vocalists of Her Majesty's Theatre and other eminent artists. On the following afternoon Mdlle. Castellan, the accomplished violinist, gave a concert at the residence of Mrs. Owen Lewis, Lancaster-gate. Among the other concerts of the week have been those of the very juvenile pianists, Mdlles. Louisa and Jeanne Douste, of Miss Emma Barker, and Mdlle. Leona Fabre, and M. Mortier de Fontaine, a pianist of Continental celebrity.

A matinée musicale was given—under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses Prince and Princess Christian, the Duke of Cambridge, and Count and Countess Gleichen—at 41, Queen's-gate (by permission of the Earl and Countess of Strathmore), on Tuesday, in aid of St. Mary's Home, given by Sir Charles Young and Mrs. Monckton.

The competition for the Sterndale Bennett prize of ten guineas for pianoforte-playing was held at the Royal Academy of Music on the 3rd inst. There were twenty-two candidates, and the prize was awarded to Margaret Gyde. A second prize of five guineas, presented by Mr. W. Dorrell, was gained by Alice Heathcote. The competition for the Heathcote Long prize of ten guineas for pianoforte-playing was also held. There were eleven candidates, and the prize was awarded to F. W. W. Bampfylde.

The Earl of Kintore presided on Saturday afternoon at the opening of the east wing of the Tonic Sol-Fa College at Forest-gate. There was a large assembly of friends of the movement, and the proceedings were varied by the singing of glees and choruses by the whole audience. Mr. Curwen, president of the college, stated that in four years nearly £4000 had been raised in small contributions from thousands of pupils and teachers, there having been but few large donors—it was essentially a people's college. He was happy to say that the wing now opened would be occupied on Wednesday morning by forty or fifty young student teachers from all parts of the kingdom. Mr. A. J. Ellis and others addressed the meeting.

The serious illness of Mr. Henry Smart, the well-known organist and composer, terminated fatally on Sunday. Mr. Smart, who was a nephew of Sir George Smart, has produced a large number of compositions, including an opera, "The Gnome of Hartzburg," the dramatic cantata "The Bride of Dunkerron," and the oratorio "Jacob;" besides innumerable pieces for the organ, hymns, and chamber trios, duets, and songs—all of which are characterised by masterly skill and refined taste. As a performer on the organ he was also deservedly celebrated, his latest position in this respect having been as organist of St. Pancras Church, which appointment he had held for many years up to the time of his death, in his sixty-seventh year. Mr. Smart had recently been awarded a pension of £100 a year on her Majesty's Civil List.

THEATRES.

To-night, at the Gaiety, the engagement of the Comédie Française is announced to terminate. The season, on the whole, has been very successful.

On Wednesday, at the Lyceum, the tragedy of "Hamlet" was performed for the benefit of Miss Ellen Terry, whose Ophelia has won golden opinions from good judges. Mr. Henry Irving vacates the Lyceum in August; but Miss Géneviève Ward will reopen the house, under her own management, with a new and original drama.

Mr. Hare's management of the Court ends next Saturday, the 19th inst., when his benefit and last appearance at the theatre will take place. The St. James's will open under his management and that of Mr. Kendal in October next. Mr. Wilson Barrett succeeds to the management of the Court.

On Monday Miss Louise Moodie appeared at the National Standard in the dual part of the heroine of "East Lynne."

The Haymarket will reopen in October, under the management of Mr. Bancroft, having been previously remodelled.

Miss Glyn and Mr. Brandram give to-day a joint reading at the Star and Garter Hotel, Richmond. It is the first time that these eminent artists, in their respective ways, have met on a common platform. Miss Glyn delivers selections from "Macbeth," and Mr. Brandram, besides a scene from "The School for Scandal," recites "The Execution of Montrose," "The Jackdaw of Rheims," and "Homeward Bound." The entertainment is under distinguished patronage.

THE MAGAZINES

Mr. Black's new serial contribution to the Cornhill is hardly a success so far. There is considerable humour in the dialogue, but the story is desultory and not very interesting, and the whole is so steeped in local colour that a good topographical acquaintance with the western coast of the Scotch Highlands is needed to enter into it. The most noticeable among the other contributions to a barely average number is Mr. Leslie Stephens's criticism on Gray, a poet entirely within his range, as requiring for his appreciation less of imaginative sympathy than of literary tact. There are also a good account of the Comédie Française, and a parallel, neither wholly discouraging nor over-flattering to national amour propre, between English and French painting as represented in the national exhibitions of the respective countries.

Perhaps the most generally attractive contribution to Macmillan will be Mr. Henry James's "Diary of a Man of Fifty," a little comedy of Italian life executed with much of his airy grace, although betraying, it may be, some slight falling off in ease of language and facility of invention. Mr. J. C. Morison's sketch of the elder members of the Mirabeau family will be read with interest. The most really valuable paper in the number, however, is Viscountess Harberton's plea for individual liberty for women, a remonstrance not so much with the other sex as with women themselves, showing them how many privileges it is in their power to secure without political agitation of any sort. In a thoughtful essay Mr Matthew Arnold, while rebuking the exaggerations of ultra-Wordsworthianism, professes anew his own loyalty to this great poet, and even claims for him a place in universal literature, which will hardly, we fear, be accorded to a writer, however exquisite, destitute of the creative faculty, and of objective, plastic power. Nothing is said of Shelley, the only one of Wordsworth's contemporaries who can be seriously brought into competition with him.

There is, on the other hand, enough of Shelley in Fraser's Magazine, where he is the sole subject of Professor Shairp's lecture, and one of the leading subjects of Shirley's agreeable chat on "Bibliomania in 1879." Mr. Shairp's discourse is apparently designed to persuade the young men of Oxford that admiration for Shelley is a note of immaturity, but is more likely to convince them they have been delivered into the hands of the Philistines. The number is a disappointment altogether, except for the retrospect of the past history of the magazine, and the admirable descriptive passages in Mr. Blackmore's "Mary Anerley," which, however, threatens to be too long-winded and circumstantial. The staff of contributors on whom Principal Tulloch is able to rely justifies the expectation of more successful adventures in the future.

The pièce de résistance in a good number of Blackwood is the detail of the blockade and relief of Colonel Pearson's force at Ekowé, by one of the besieged. From the nature of the case this narrative will be read with breathless interest, although the writer's literary ability is not of a high order. Another very valuable contribution is the description of Prince Torlonia's collection of antique sculpture at Rome, the more acceptable as the Prince's museum is not generally accessible to the public. Opinions will probably vary as to the merit of the ideal works here so enthusiastically extolled; but there can be no difference as to the importance of the complete collection of Imperial portrait-busts, if all are authentic. The scene of "Reata" changes from Mexico to Poland, and the Polish pictures of scenery and manners have all the brilliancy and vividness of the Mexican. "The Ghost of Morden Tower" is too artificial to produce the thrilling effect intended.

The Fortnightly Review is, as a whole, singularly unattractive this month, but contains two contributions of considerable mark. One is Mr. Lowe's proposal of a convertible paper currency as a panacea for the financial embarrassments of India. The scheme can only be appreciated by financial experts, but it is at all events satisfactory in an age of compromises to find one statesman with sufficient nerve to propose a bold measure. The other important article is Mr. Lillie's review of, or rather panegyric upon, the literary and theological career of Cardinal Newman. All Mr. Lillie's encomiums are individually just, but taken altogether they seem to suggest that the reaction in favour of the Cardinal has gone quite far enough.

The Contemporary Review is more interesting, although one or two of the most promising papers are somewhat disappointing. Mr. T. Hughes hardly convinces us of the necessity for a vindication of Franklin, and the charm of M. Rénan's account of the Jewish revolt under Hadrian is necessarily impaired by translation. Mr. Blackley successfully demonstrates the expediency of rendering insurance compulsory upon the labouring classes, but is not altogether so convincing as regards its practicability. Professor Mivart selects and defines the various properties which distinguish living beings from inanimate nature; Professor Caird, continuing his very candid exposition of the philosophy of Comte, deals principally with its metaphysical and religious aspects; but the most generally interesting paper in the number is Dr. Richardson's account of chloral and kindred narcotics, and their pernicious employment as habitual stimulants.

The Nineteenth Century consists chiefly of valuable papers, not particularly readable by those who do not take a special interest in the subjects under discussion. To this category belong Colonel Knollys's exposition of the shortcomings of the present recruiting system, Mr. Vernon Smith's survey of the great wheat-producing districts of North America, and Lord Norton's remarks on colonial problems. A more interesting paper than any of these is the Abbé Martin's criticism on M. Ferry's Education Bill, especially valuable for its clear statement of the position of the religious congregations. M. Martin's tone of suppressed hostility towards the Republic is, however, calculated to excite serious doubts whether the teachers in religious schools are really so indifferent in political matters as he would represent them. The Rev. Orby Shipley's motives for quitting the Church of England offer no novelty. M. Sarcey contributes a neat account of the Comédie Française, and Mr. Caird a very interesting summary of the impressions he has derived from his recent visit to India as a Famine Commissioner. This paper is illustrated by an excellent map.

The American periodicals present their usual variety. The North American Review commences with an unpublished poem by Voltaire of no great merit. All the other articles are highly important, proceeding from personages of unimpeachable authority on the subjects treated of. Mr. Bright and Mr. Bonamy Price discourse of protection, Mrs. Beecher Stowe of the progress of education among the emancipated slaves, Mr. Poor on the alleged wrongs of the Pacific Railroad, and Professor Newcomb of the relations of science and theology. Admiral Porter's account of his mission to San Domingo is very entertaining. In the Atlantic Monthly we have chiefly to notice a very able story, "Massy Sprague's Daughter," Mr. Grant White's contrast of the English and American climates, and Mr. Andrews's review of United States commerce with the Spanish portion of North America. Edison's inventions, Madame Bonaparte's letters, Brazil, clairvoyance, the metric system, and the American theatre, supply matter for a singularly varied number of Scribner's Monthly.

Time is also highly varied, but variety is gained at the expense of substance. The two serial stories are excellent, Mr Forbes's Anglo-Indian sketches most amusing, M. Grousset's character of Thiers painfully perverse and ungenerous; and of the other contributions there is hardly anything to be said. Home, a new magazine conducted by Mrs. J. H. Riddell, the authoress of "George Geith," will obtain a warm welcome on the strength of the editor's reputation as a novelist, which her own contribution, "Daisies and Buttercups," promises to extend.

In the Gentleman's Magazine we have principally to notice the continuation of Mrs. Linton's powerful story, and a pleasant sketch of "Some Australian Capitals." The Month continues Mr. Stevenson's important historical studies on Mary Queen of Scots, and Mr. Lucas's reply to Mr. Paley's objections to the antiquity of the Homeric poems. Temple Bar, besides the sequel of "Probation," has an exceedingly spirited sketch of the captain of a slave-trader, two lively papers on French writers of memoirs, and a memoir of Colonel Evelyn Wood. Belgravia and Tinsley are readable, with no special features except a tale by "Ouida" and Mr. McCarthy's "Donna Quixote" in the former periodical; and London Society is chiefly remarkable for a detail of the ungenerous treatment which Sir H. Bessemer received from the Government in his early days. The University Magazine will attract numerous readers by a portrait and memoir of Mr. Burne Jones, hitherto only known to the public by his works. There are also an excellent essay on Drayton, by Miss M. Robinson, and a pretty story by the late Cicely Marston. St. Nicholas maintains its wonted supremacy among magazines for the young.

We have also received the first part of Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin's Fine-Art Edition of "Longfellow's Poems," profusely illustrated; Part I. of a History of Protestantism, by the same firm, containing some excellent engravings, and a noble woodcut, "Luther's First Study of the Bible," from the painting by E. M. Ward, R.A.; the first part of "The Etcher," a magazine of the etched work of Artists, containing three examples; The Theatre, with photographic portraits of Miss Moody and Mr. Vernon; the Fern World, the Greenhouse, Part 7 of the Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Masonic Magazine, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Familiar Wild Flowers, Haydn's Dictionary of Popular Domestic Medicine, Haydn's Bible Dictionary, Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, Josephus, Men of Mark, Science Gossip, Magazine of Art, Science for All, Cassell's Illustrated History of Russo-Turkish War, Mission Life, Excelsior, Kind Words, Argosy, St. James's Magazine, Foreign Church Chronicle, Our Native Land, Charing-cross Magazine, Golden Childhood, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, Myra's Journal of Dress and Needlework, Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal, Sylvia's Home Journal, the Ladies' Treasury, the first number of Weldon's Ladies' Journal of Dress, Fashion, Needlework, Literature, and Art; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardener's Magazine, Day of Rest, Weekly Welcome, Social Notes, Young People's Paper, Sunday Reading for the Young, and the Christian Age.

Holiday Numbers have been received of London Society, containing stories by Mrs. Riddell and other authors of note; of the Belgravia, crowded with interesting tales and sketches; and of All the Year Round, in which Miss Braddon leads off with "A Shadow in the Corner," followed by other celebrities.

OBITUARY.

FRANCES COUNTESS WALDEGRAVE.

The Right Honourable Frances Elizabeth Anne Countess Waldegrave, wife of the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue, Lord Carlingford, died suddenly of bronchitis, at her London residence, on the 5th inst. Her Ladyship was daughter of John Braham, the famous opera singer, and was four times married—first to John James Waldegrave, Esq., of Navestock; secondly, Sept. 28, 1840, to George Edward, seventh Earl Waldegrave (who died Sept. 28, 1846); thirdly, Sept. 30, 1847, to George Granville Harcourt, Esq., of Nuneham Courtenay, M.P. for Bedfordshire, who died Dec. 19, 1860; and fourthly, Jan. 20, 1863, to the Right Hon. Chichester Parkinson Fortescue, M.P., created Baron Carlingford in 1874, but has died without issue. For several years Frances Countess Waldegrave was one of the most prominent and popular leaders of London society, and her receptions at her town house, Carlton-gardens, and at her beautiful villa, Strawberry Hill, near Twickenham, brought together the chief members of the Liberal party, to which her Ladyship was devotedly attached. During the period of her husband's tenure of office as Chief Secretary for Ireland, Lady Waldegrave dispensed a graceful hospitality in Dublin, and gained universal esteem by her kindness and charities. Under the will of Lord Waldegrave, she succeeded to a very considerable landed estate, including Strawberry Hill, Middlesex, Dudbrook House, Essex, and Chewton Priory, Somersetshire.

LORD OSSULSTON.

Charles, Lord Ossulston, Lieutenant Rifle Brigade, died of cholera on the 29th ult., on his way from Afghanistan, where he had been serving with the fourth battalion of his regiment. He was born Dec. 31, 1850, the eldest son of Charles Augustus, present Earl of Tankerville, by the Lady Olivia Montagu, his wife, only daughter of George, sixth Duke of Manchester. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the Army, in the Coldstream Guards, in 1870. By his Lordship's death, his next brother, the Hon. George Montagu Bennet, A.D.C. to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, becomes, as Lord Ossulston, heir-apparent to the earldom of Tankerville—a title formerly enjoyed by his ancestors, the Greys, and subsequently recreated in the person of Charles, second Lord Ossulston, who had married the Lady Mary Grey, daughter and heiress of Forde, Earl of Tankerville.

MR. WHITELAW, M.P.

Alexander Whitelaw, Esq., of Gartshore, in the county of Dumbarton, and Woodhall, in the county of Lanark, J.P. and D.L., M.P. for the city of Glasgow, died on the 1st inst. at Gartsherrie House, Coatbridge, aged fifty-six. He was eldest son of the late Alexander Whitelaw, Esq., by Janet, his wife, daughter of Alexander Baird, Esq., of Lochwood, Lanarkshire, and became eventually a partner in the great firm of Baird and Co., ironmasters, of Gartsherrie. He was elected M.P. for Glasgow, February, 1874, and was chairman of the first Glasgow School Board. He was author of pamphlets on "National Education," "Church Endowment," &c., and belonged to the Conservative party. He married, in 1859, Barbara Forbes, youngest daughter of Robert Lockhart, Esq., of Castlehill, and leaves four sons and five daughters.

THE REV. SYDNEY TURNER.

The Very Rev. Sydney Turner, Rector of Hempsted, near Gloucester, died on the 26th ult. He was the youngest son of the eminent historian, the late Sharon Turner, and was born in April, 1814. Mr. Turner may be considered as the father of the reformatory system for boys in this country, and with Mr. Baker, of Hardwicke Court, and Miss Mary Carpenter, he did more towards reclaiming the erring British youth of both sexes than a score of Acts of Parliament could effect. In May, 1876, he was presented by the masters and matrons of reformatory and industrial schools with an address, a gold watch, and a purse of 100 sovereigns for a portrait, in recognition of his services as Government Inspector; and a few months later Lord Houghton presented him with a piece of plate and £1000 on behalf of the committees of the reformatory and industrial institutions. In acknowledging one of these presentations, Mr. Turner said that whereas, forty years previously, there were only two reformatories and no industrial schools, there were then sixty-five reformatories, containing nearly 6000 boys and girls, and 117 industrial schools, containing nearly 12,000, in full work in every part of England and Scotland. In 1875 Mr. Turner was, on the resignation of the late Dr. McNeile, nominated by Lord Beaconsfield to the Deanery of Ripon, which office, however, he soon resigned on account of failing health.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Vice-Admiral Charles Starmer, on the 26th ult., at Woolwich-common.

Commander Thomas William Langton, R.N., at Cheltenham, in his eighty-third year.

Captain Chestney Simmons, R.N., on the 26th ult., at 11, Victoria Park, Dover, suddenly, in his eighty-first year.

The Rev. Edward Bowyer Sparke, Canon of Ely, and for forty-eight years Rector of Feltwell, on the 28th ult.

General John Lewis Taylor, late Bengal Army, of Deyrah Dhoon, India, on the 23rd ult., at Mussoorie, aged seventy-two.

General William Raikes Faber, C.B., Colonel 17th Regiment, and M.A. University College, Oxford, on the 24th ult., at Staplegrove Lodge, Taunton, aged seventy-three.

Captain Thomas Rogers Blewitt, late of H.M. Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, and of the 86th Regiment, on the 1st inst., at Gunnersbury.

Mary, Lady Chichester, wife of Sir Arthur Chichester, Bart., of Raleigh, Devon, and eldest daughter of John Nicholetts, Esq., on the 28th ult., at Youlston, Barnstaple. Her Ladyship had ten sons and four daughters.

The Rev. Robert Le Poer McClintock, of Spencer Hill, Castle Bellingham, in the county of Louth, on the 30th ult., in London. He was the son of John McClintock, Esq., of Drumcar, in the county of Louth, by his second wife, Lady Elizabeth, daughter of William Power, Earl of Clancarty, and was thus half-brother of John, Lord Rathdonnell, who died on May 17 last.

Anne Holwell Danby, Mrs. Vernon Harcourt, widow of Admiral Octavius Henry Vernon Harcourt, R.N., on the 26th ult., at Swinton Park, Yorkshire, aged eighty-three. This lady, daughter of William Gater, Esq., succeeded, under the will of her first husband, who was representative of the great family of Danby, of Swinton, to the Mashamshire estate, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, acquired by the marriage of Sir Christopher Danby, of Farnley, with Margaret, sister and coheir of the last Lord Scrope, of Masham.

Lieutenant-Colonel John Pitt Kennedy, late 42nd Foot, and formerly Military Secretary in India to Sir Charles Napier, on the 28th ult., at 66, St. George's-square, aged eighty-three. He was fourth son of the Rev. John Pitt Kennedy, Rector of Balteagh, by Mary, his wife, only child of Major Thomas Carey, of Lough Ash, in the county of Tyrone, and elder brother of Tristram Kennedy, Esq., formerly M.P. for the county of Louth, and of Evory Kennedy, M.D., of Belgarde Castle, in the county of Dublin, President of the Royal College of Physicians, Ireland, 1854-61.

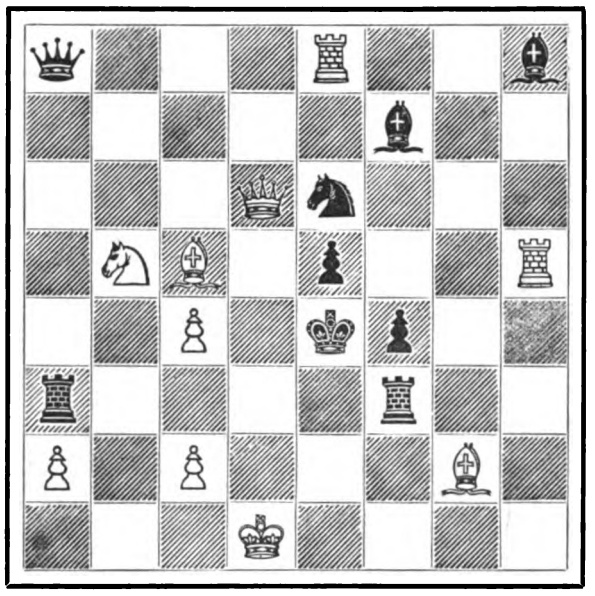
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1844.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R takes P	P to K 3rd*
2. Q to R 8th	Any move
3. Mates accordingly.

* If Black play 1. Kt to K 3rd, White continues with 2. Kt to B 5th (ch), and 3. R or Q mates, according to the adversary's move.

PROBLEM No. 1847.

By HARRY JACKSON, Dewsbury.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

A Game played recently at Simpson's Divan between Mr. F. SYDNEY ENSOR and the Rev. G. A. MACDONNELL.

(King's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. P to Q 4th	Q to R 5th (ch)
4. K to K 2nd	P to Q 4th
5. P takes P

This butterfly variation of the gambit has already been broken on the wheel of misfortune, and it is, therefore, not easy to account for Mr. Ensor's attachment for it. When the player who opens a game with the advantage of the move can be compelled, at this early stage of the contest, to choose between a draw and a greatly compromised defence, we are reminded of the epitaph upon the baby that died at the age of twenty-four hours:—

"Since I was so soon done for,
I wonder what I was begun for."

5.	Kt to K B 3rd

If Black here played 5. Q to K 2nd (ch), White, to avoid the immediate loss of the game or a draw by perpetual check, must play his King to K B 3rd; after which, if he has any expectation of winning, he should be fortified against a prolonged attack of hope deferred.

6. Kt to K B 3rd	B to K Kt 5th
7. P to B 4th

It is necessary to protect the doubled Pawn, and it would be inconvenient to defend it with the Kt at Q B 3rd, as he intends playing his King to the Queen's side of the board.

7.	Q Kt to Q 2nd
8. K to Q 2nd

8. K to Q 3rd produces much the same position if Black continues with 8. B to B 4th (ch), &c.

8.	Q to B 7th (ch)
9. Q to K 2nd (ch)	Kt to K 5th (ch)
10. K to B 2nd	B to K B 4th
11. K to Kt 3rd	B to K 2nd
12. B takes P	Castles (Q R)
13. P to Q R 3rd	K R to K sq
14. Q to Q sq

In view of the masked battery in front, it is no doubt advisable to move the Queen; but exchanging with the adversary seems preferable as the least of two evils.

14.	K Kt to B 4th (ch)
15. K to R 2nd

If 15. P takes Kt, Kt takes P (ch); 16. K to B 3rd; for if 16. K to R 2nd, Black plays as in the text.

16.	B to B 3rd (ch), and White must lose the Queen or be mated in a few moves. And if 15. K to B 3rd the following is a probable continuation; ex. gr.:—

15.	B to B 3rd
16. Q Kt to Q 2nd	R to K 6th (ch)
17. B takes R	Q takes B (ch)
18. K to Kt 4th	B takes P
19. Q to K 2nd *	Kt to Q 6th (ch)
20. K to Kt 5th	P to R 3rd (ch)
21. K to R 5th	B to Kt 3rd (ch)
22. K to R 4th	Kt mates.
* 19. Kt takes B	Q takes Kt
20. Kt to Kt 3rd

He must prevent Q taking Kt P with a check.

20.	Kt to R 3rd (ch)
21. K to R 4th	P to Kt 4th (ch)
22. K takes P,

and Black mates in three moves.

15.	B to B 7th
16. B to Kt 3rd	B takes Q

Black could win, of course, by 16. B to Kt 6th (ch); for, if 17. Q takes B, Kt takes Q, and if White captures the Queen Black mates by 18. Kt to Q 8th. The move in the text is stronger however; for White, instead of 18. B takes Q, would play 18. Q Kt to Q 4nd, getting two pieces instead of one for the lost consort.

17. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q to K 6th
18. R takes B	Kt to R 5th
19. P to B 5th

White plays an up-hill game with much ingenuity. He now threatens 20. Kt to Q B 4th, driving the Queen out of play, for if 20. Q to K 5th, then 21. B to Q 3rd; but the big battalions are on Black's side.

19.	Q Kt takes B P
20. P takes Kt	Q takes B P
21. B to Q B 4th	Kt takes Kt P
22. K takes Kt	Q takes P (ch)
23. K to Kt sq	B to B 3rd
24. B to K 5th	R takes B
25. K to B 2nd	K R takes P,

and White resigned.

The sixth game in the match between Messrs. Potter and Mason, which our last report left adjourned, was resumed on the 2nd inst., and, after very few moves, was abandoned as drawn. The adjourned position is a curiosity in its way, and it is certainly an instructive end game. Most players would be inclined to pronounce it to be "a win" for Black; but the result of the actual play only confirms independent analysis. The following was the position of the pieces:—White (Mr. Potter), K at K B 3rd, Kt at Q R 5th, Pawns at Q 4th and Q R 5th; Black (Mr. Mason), K at K 3rd, B at K 2nd, Pawns at K Kt 2nd, K B 4th and 5th, and Q 4th. Black played the K to Q 2nd, and the game was drawn. The seventh game, begun on the same evening and concluded on the 5th inst., also resulted in a remise after three hours' play; and the eighth stands adjourned as we go to press, the score being Mr. Potter, 2; Mr. Mason, 1; drawn games, 4.

We regret to hear from Mr. Gossip that a reprint of his recent work, "Theory of the Openings," has been introduced into America without his consent. For the protection of the author, the Rev. Mr. Ranken has undertaken to supply authorised copies, and these can be obtained upon application to that gentleman, addressed to St. Ronans, Malvern.

The current number of the Chessplayers' Chronicle (Dean and Son, Fleet-street) contains the programme of the first meeting of the British Amateur Chess Association and the conditions of play to be observed in the several tournaments arranged for the occasion. The meeting will be held on Monday, the 28th inst., and following days, at the rooms of the Union Society, Oxford. The other contents comprise two specimens of the late George Walker's skill, opposed to M. Kieseritzki and Herr Harrwitz, besides a large number of original games annotated by Professor Wayte, and tourney problems. The Monthly Record presents a report of the events of the Chess World, in a somewhat formal way; and Mr. Andrews's problem department is conducted with unexceptionable judgment.

It is noteworthy that our Problem this week is the composition of a youth of sixteen! Master Jackson has already played in provincial tournaments against experienced players.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring them again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article.

Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

BRIDAL BOUQUET BLOOM.
Beauty, a brilliant complexion, the fountain of youth. Bridal Bouquet Bloom for Beautifying the Complexion—a most agreeable and refreshing balm to the skin. Ever blooming, ever young. A vegetable liquid extracted from Nature's lovely blooms This exquisite preparation, by a single application, requiring but a moment of time, imparts to the face, neck, arms, and hands a delicate softness and marble purity with the tint and fragrance of the lily and the rose.
It removes tan, freckles, sunburn, and all roughness and blemishes. For creating restoring, and preserving beauty Bridal Bouquet Bloom is without a rival in the world. One trial of it will convince any Lady of its great superiority over any other liquid and the numerous powders. By its use all roughness, redness, and chapping are prevented. Patronised by all the European Courts and the élite of America. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers only Three Shillings and Sixpence, in large Bottles. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar, hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.
A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1879.

Amid accessories of the most profoundly impressive character, the body of Louis Napoleon, the Prince Imperial, was on Saturday last committed to the tomb. England, in association with whose military service he fell, paid to his mortal remains, since transported hither with vigilant and tender care, such homage as may well express her own sorrow for the melancholy event, but which can do but little, of course, to lighten the burden of woe which oppresses the bosom of the Imperial lady who is now, not merely a widow, but childless. A public but not an officially State Funeral served to draw together at Chiselhurst a representation of all classes of English people, from her Majesty the Queen to her humblest subjects, for the purpose of testifying respect for the departed and feeling commiseration for the bereaved Empress. Necessarily, in this act of devotion there was a personal intermingling of the Royal House and what yet remains of the Bonapartist family. The Funeral was significant of every sentiment befitting so solemn an occasion, save such as might have indicated a political purpose and it was, perhaps, all the more stirring to the tenderer emotions of humanity, inasmuch as it was strictly and purely personal in its meaning. We have gone to the grave to weep with no other view than to express the affectionate regret we feel in the untimely loss of the honoured guest whom we had taught the profession of Arms, and who was cut off in voluntary service with our own Army.

Considered merely as a spectacle, the Funeral of the Prince was sufficiently striking. But it is not in this light that most people will regard it, nor is this the characteristic of it which will be best remembered. Every incident of it betokened the sincerity and depth of the mental and moral feelings which it excited. The tears were real. The distressful commiseration for the loss which the Empress Eugénie has sustained was but feebly illustrated by the sights and sounds, "the pomp and circumstance" of the occasion. Mind rather than matter was pre-eminent in giving voice to the public sorrow. From beginning to end of what may be called the melancholy pageant, a genuine pathos pervaded its every feature. Especially was this the case in connection with the movements of our own Royal Family. In this respect, what must be described as a public funeral presented characteristics seldom seen except at private interments of the dead. There was no theatrical display—none, at least, inappropriate to the solemnity—but a real outburst of manly and womanly emotion. The tragic elements which prevailed at the death of the Prince, the inexpressible desolation of the Imperial Mother, the lessons of mutability in human affairs which the case enforced upon the mind, the remembrance of the virtues of the departed young man, and the tale of broken hopes, baffled aspirations, and defeated purposes which the circumstances so rudely told, preoccupied the thoughts and feelings of the mourners, and shut off for the time being all interest in the mere external traits of the scene. The realities to which it pointed stood out so clearly from the outward semblances in which they were pictured that the latter were forgotten, and the overpowering force of the former was exclusively recognised. Seldom in recent times has any public ceremonial so closely touched the hearts of those who took part in it.

We are in hopes that, after a brief interval of reflection, even the most ardent supporters of the French Republic will admire, rather than resent, the deep personal interest which has been displayed in this country in association with the Burial of the Prince Imperial. It will, no doubt, be remembered that Louis Napoleon was the guest of the Nation; that, together with his parents, he cast in his lot with us when yet in his boyhood; that he received instruction and submitted to discipline in our Military Schools; that in his going in and out amongst us he engaged the sympathies of all with whom he came in contact; that he voluntarily and persistently elected to join his comrades when they were ordered out to South Africa; that he met his death in a manner which, even as Englishmen, we could not but deplore; that, in some sort, we felt ourselves responsible for his cruel "taking off;" and that, without the smallest reference to political susceptibilities or antipathies, we were, whether we chose it or not, practically guardians of his welfare. Of the sense which these considerations excited in our minds we have given unaffected expression at his Funeral. No generous people could have done less. We have treated him as one belonging to ourselves, while we have held ourselves completely aloof from any tendencies he may have betrayed, or any thoughts he may have entertained, touching the political future of his country. He was a genuine Frenchman, but we have mourned over him as we should have done over an Englishman of like position, character, and promise. We have never discovered even in the highest walks of our society any special interest in impeding the progress of the Republic in France. On the contrary, we have noted the self-restrained attitude which it has assumed with satisfaction, and that satisfaction has been almost unanimously and loudly expressed. We have not changed our attitude in this regard. To bewail a friend does not necessarily imply a participation in all the expectations which his friends have cherished of him. France need not fear the outbreak of Imperialism in this country—at least so far as she is concerned. Any attempt to turn late events to political account against the established Government of France, or against the Constitution which she has thought fit to adopt, would instantly provoke an opposition so general and irresistible as to demonstrate its futility.

No! Our sorrow at the tomb of the Prince Imperial forebodes no danger to the settled institutions of our neighbour. Neither our Queen, nor our Court, nor our Parliament, nor our Army, is ignorant of the true foundations upon which international friendship must rest for security. It is not for us to dictate to others the form of Government under which they shall live. Our history, from time immemorial, has exhibited no love of Cæsarism in the British Race. But we are mindful of the duties of hospitality, and the personal affections which we form either for Princes or for Leaders of the people, we do not readily surrender to suspicions or susceptibilities not grounded upon facts. We have bidden farewell as became us to Prince Louis Napoleon. We shall also minister tenderly, as becomes us, such consolation as we can to the Empress Eugénie. But we shall not join to assist in the plans, whatever they may be, of the Bonapartist Family. While the tears are still in our eyes, we honestly give our hands to the French Republic, and, so long as the French people approve of it, we unfeignedly wish it "God speed."

Mr. Isaac Spooner, who has been stipendiary magistrate for the Wolverhampton district for twenty years, has resigned his office through ill-health.

Mr. Kenneth Reed, youngest son of the chairman of the London School Board, and Mr. W. Anderson, of Queen's College, Belfast, left the head of Lake Allen in canoes on the 18th inst. and have not since been heard of; but their boats have been found empty. Sir Charles and Lady Reed have gone to Carrick-on-Shannon to await tidings of their son, but it is feared that the young men have perished.

In dealing with the will of the late Mr. Sullivan, M.P., Judge Warren on Wednesday held that the law did not require a codicil to be signed by the witnesses in the presence of each other. The Judge made an arrangement between the litigating parties—a rule of Court under which Mrs. Sullivan obtained £1000 per annum and the heir-at-law £16,000, the remainder passing to the testator's sister; and the will and codicil being admitted to probate.

The consecration of the Rev. Canon Walsham How as Bishop of Bedford will take place in St. Paul's Cathedral on the Festival of St. James, Friday, July 25.

The Company appointed for the Revision of the Authorised Version of the Old Testament have finished their fifty-eighth session. The second revision has been continued as far as the end of Psalm cxlviii.

The Archbishop of York has invited all the Bishops of the Northern Province to join in directing the use of the prayer for fair weather in all churches. He has addressed the same direction to the clergy of the diocese of York.

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided at the annual distribution of prizes at the Lambeth Schools yesterday week, and gave an address, in which he spoke of the interest now taken by all classes in education, and of the great advantages which the rising generation enjoy in that respect. Last Saturday his Grace laid the foundation-stone of a college at Croydon for the better education of women.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein held an ordination at his cathedral on Trinity Sunday, when the following were admitted as deacons:—William Henry Robins, Charles Barton Shaw, John William Stenson, and Henry Peter Higginson, all of St. Cyprian's Theological College, Bloemfontein, and the last-named also of St. Bees' Theological College, Cumberland. The Archdeacon of Bloemfontein (Dr. Croghan) preached the sermon.

On Sunday week, before the early celebration at Kilkhampton, the Bishop of Truro admitted with imposition of hands Mr. E. Chamier, B.A., University College, Oxon (a solicitor at Stratton), to the office of Reader in the Church of England, and licensed him for work in the parishes of Kilkhampton and Poughill. The Bishop has also licensed Thomas Melhuish Comyns (Scholæ Cancellarii, Truro) as Reader for the parishes of Kilkhampton and Kenwyn.

On Thursday, the 10th inst, the Chancel of the parish church of Eccles, near Attleborough, was, after thorough restoration, re-opened for Divine service. The east window has been filled with stained glass, the subject chosen, the Ascension, in memory of the late Richard Lubbock, thirty-eight years Rector of the parish. The Archdeacon of Norfolk, preacher at the afternoon service, made an earnest appeal to a numerous congregation to promote and assist the work of restoration throughout the rest of the church. The building is of more than local interest. Till the time of Henry VIII. the Bishops of Norwich had a residence in Eccles, and the south aisle of the parish church, allowed to become a ruin towards the close of the last century, was used as the episcopal chapel.

Mr. Cheetham graduated at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1850, when he was sixth senior optime and eighth in first class Classical Tripos. In 1861 he was appointed to the vice-principalship of the Theological College at Chichester, where he remained for two years, during which he also held the curacy of St. Bartholomew's. He is at present Chaplain of Dulwich College, having been elected by the governors in 1866. He was the author of the Lecture on "Pearson" in Canon Barry's volume of King's College Lectures on "Masters in English Theology," and in his essay on the famous author of the treatise on the Creed he insisted strongly on the importance of maintaining a learned body of clergymen who are not only preachers but theologians

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

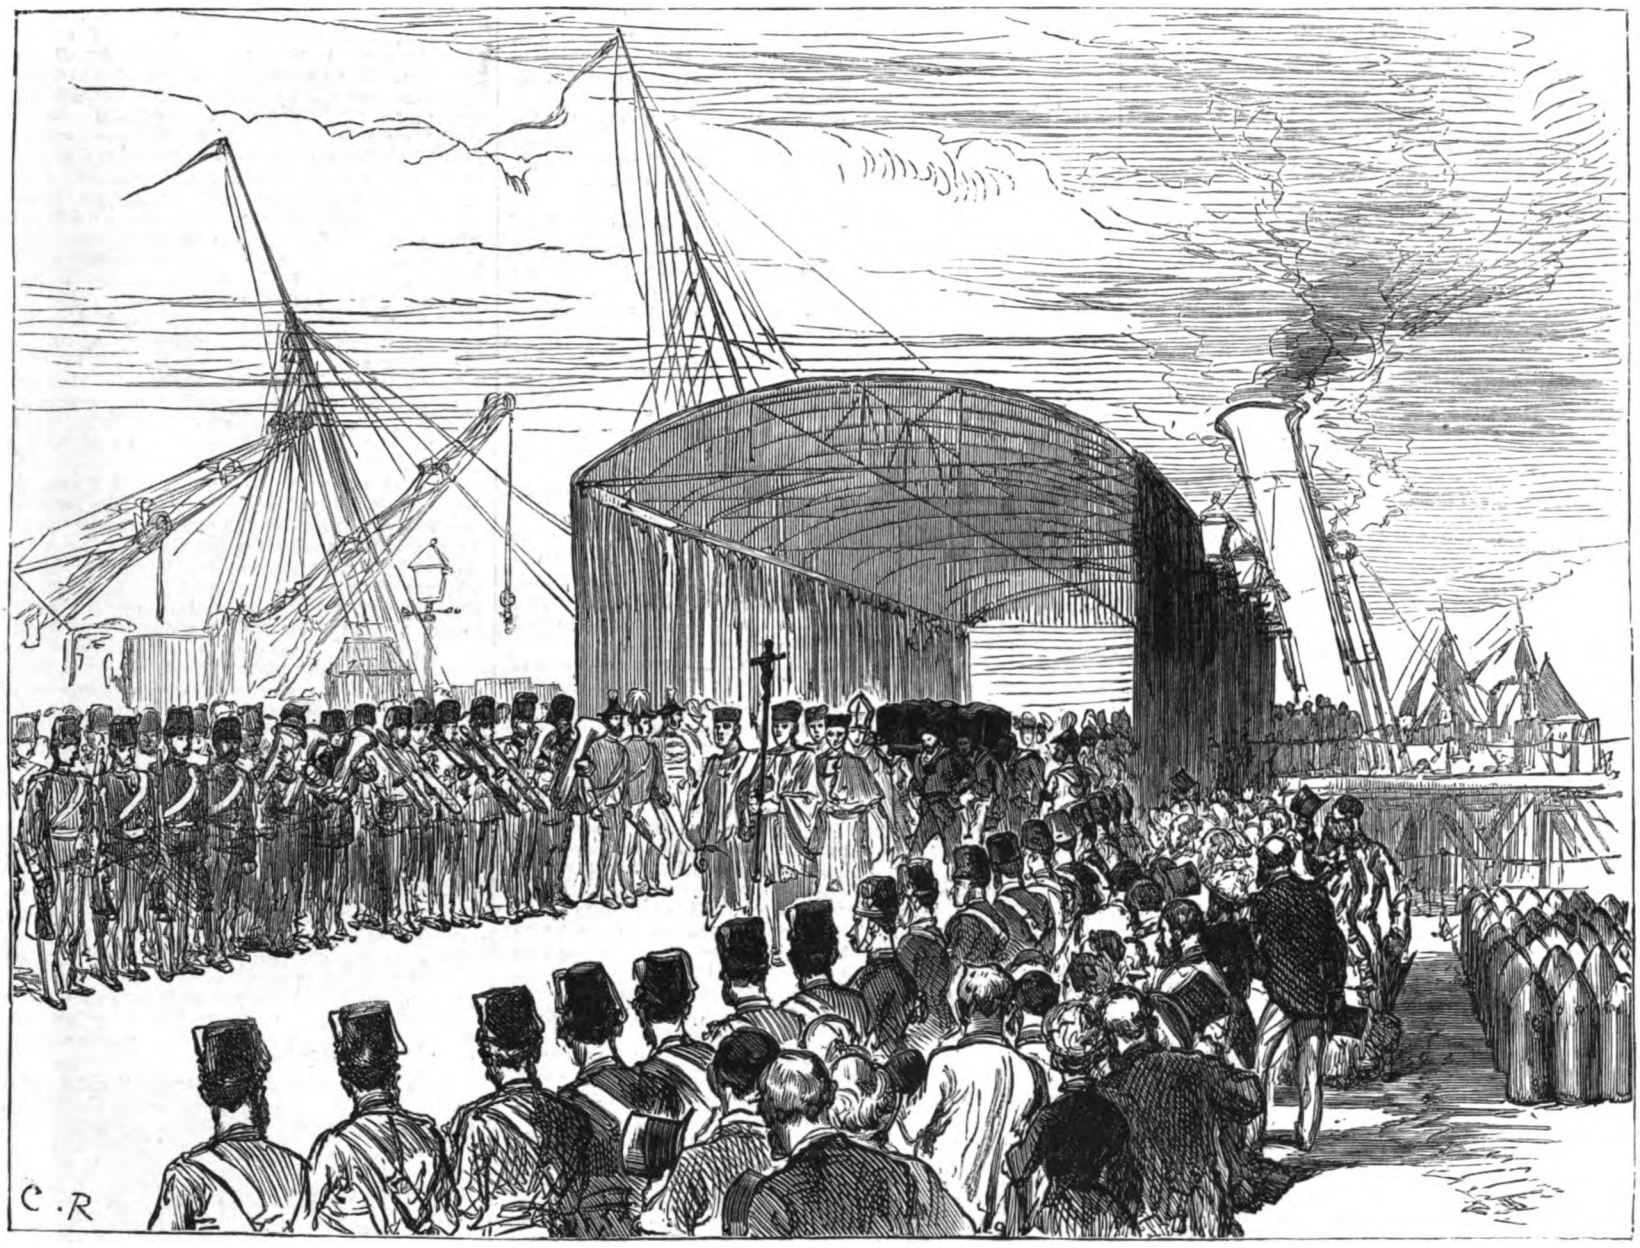
The eighteenth annual meeting of the Volunteers who aim to win the prizes of the National Rifle Association began on Monday last, from a business point of view. But the Victorias and London Scottish, according to the wont of these well-seasoned and hospitable campaigners, had pitched their tents some days earlier. The Victorias on Sunday held a special camp service of their own, conducted by their own regimental chaplain; and the spiritual wants of the general body of volunteers were attended to by Dr. Neville, Bishop of Dunedin. The Canadian team arrived in camp on Saturday and were received by Colonel Gzowski, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, by whose instrumentality the Dominion Rifle Association was first formed. Neither the weather nor the saturated condition of the ground seemed to have any terrors for the volunteers, whose entries for the several prizes were very little short of the exceptionally high totals of last year. This year's arrangements include an important alteration as to the public. The council decided that at gun-fire no one would be admitted except on payment of half the usual admission-fee, or sixpence each. This new rule led to a riot on Tuesday evening, a number of men assembling for the purpose of effecting a free entrance into the camp through a breach of uprooted palings, but being effectually repulsed by the officers and privates in charge of the camp. Ere the shooting is referred to, it should be remarked that the English Twenty have sustained a great loss, and all frequenters of Wimbledon will miss a most popular officer in Captain Field, of the H.A.C., who for many years acted as captain of the English Twenty.

The shooting for the Alfred and Alexandra Prizes was begun on Monday; but the only competition concluded on the first day was the Alfred, a prize that was instituted in 1873. Last year, for the first time, it was won with a highest possible score. This year the feat has been more than paralleled, for whereas then only Lieutenant Ward, of the 2nd Flintshire, succeeded in putting in a bull's-eye for each of his seven shots, no less than four marksmen on Monday exhibited the same steadiness, each scoring 35, and the four chief money prizes, amounting in the aggregate to £55, had therefore to be divided between Corporal Brand, 26th Kent; Quartermaster-Sergeant Larmer, 5th Surrey; Lieutenant Livesay, 1st Sussex; and Private F. Osborne, of Birmingham. Subsequently, in accordance with the new regulation as to the settlement of ties, but for the honour of place simply, these four fired three extra shots each, with the result of placing Private Osborn at the top. At the Alexandra 500 yards stage, Private Varso, London Irish, made 35 points; and the same highest possible score was attained in the Windmill competition by Colour-Sergeant Riley, 3rd Westmorland, who, in shooting off the ties, made 14, and was the winner.

The contest for the Daily Telegraph Cup and Prizes was commenced and finished on Tuesday. The first prize consists of a silver jug and two goblets, in case, of the value of fifty guineas; and it is supplemented by thirty-six money prizes given by the N.R.A., of the aggregate value of £100. It was won by Private Smith, 41st Middlesex, with a score of 35 points, Private Gentles, 1st Stirling, making a similar score, but being beaten on the tie.

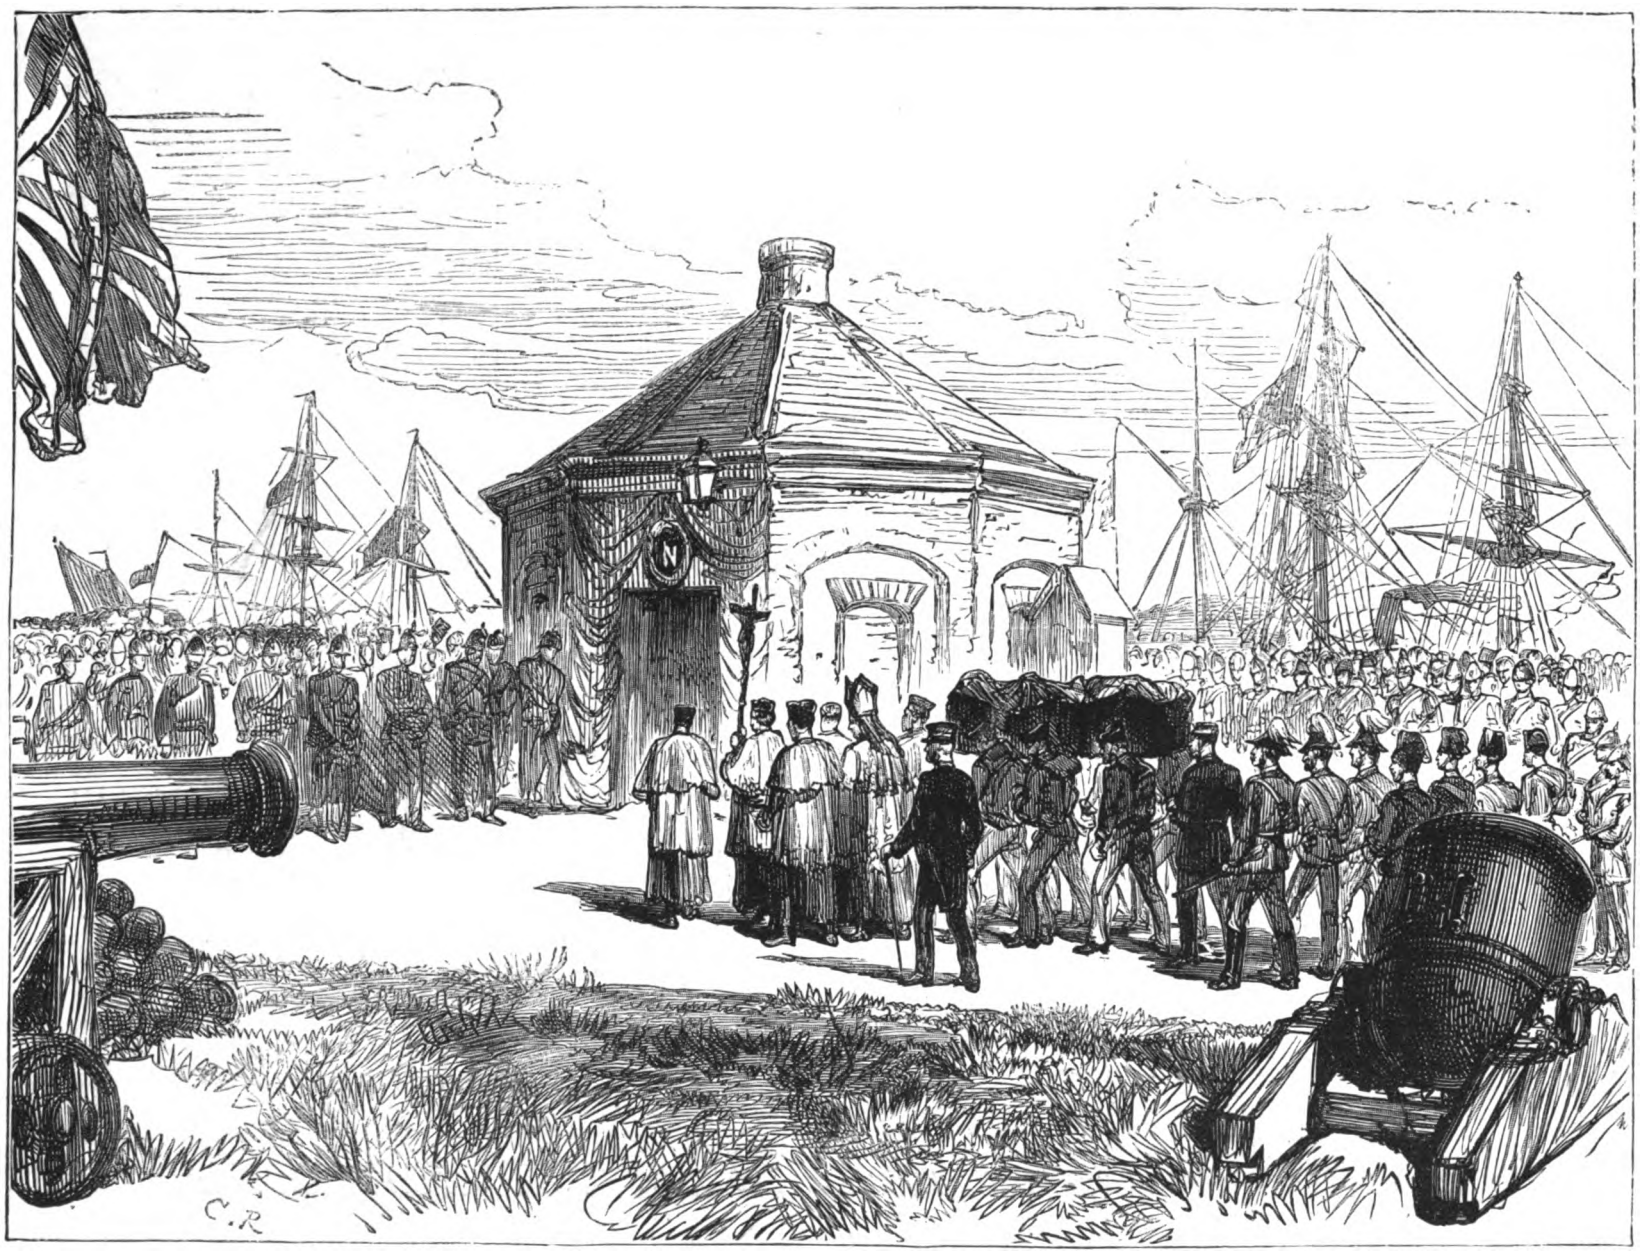
In the first stage of the competition for the Queen's Prize on Tuesday, some good shooting was chronicled. 2368 competed in the first stage for 360 money prizes of the aggregate value of £1668, the best shot taking £60 and the silver medal. In the second stage the best sixty shots will compete for the Queen's Prize and the gold medal. The scoring for the Queen's on Tuesday fully supported the view of those who were of opinion that even at short ranges the Martini-Henry would surpass the Snider in accuracy. No fewer than six competitors made the highest possible score of 35. Twenty-three made scores of 34, and thirty-nine made scores of 33. The successful marksmen at 200 yards were:—Sergeant O'Brien, 41st Middlesex (Enfield); Private R. Smith, of the same corps; Private Clarke, 1st Renfrew; Sergeant Roberts, 1st Devon; Private Clarke, 10th Gloucester; and Sergeant Chubb, 7th Stafford. Among those who had fallen only one point short of the coveted all-bull's-eyes were Sergeant Sutherland, 31st Lanark; Private Hay, Artists; Corporal Dakin, Swindon; Private Turner, Artists; Major Young, 39th Middlesex; Lieutenant M'Kerrall, London Scottish; Quartermaster Curtis, 1st Surrey; Sergeant Crouch, also of the Camberwell Corps; Private Fulcher, 1st Cambridge; Sergeant Bolt, 5th Devon; Sergeant McAuslan, 6th Dumbarton; and Private Love, 6th Ayrshire. The names of many marksmen who have made themselves famous at previous Wimbledon meetings are conspicuous in the above list. On Wednesday the competitors shot at 500 yards. Private Kydd, Forfar, made at 200 yards 33 points, and at 500 succeeded in making 34, bringing his total to 67, or three points only below the highest possible score. He was soon followed by Colour-Sergeant Heemson with 65; Lieutenant Dickenson (Cumberland), Captain Ford (Devon), 64 each; Sergeant Roberts (Devon), Lieutenant Akerigg (Cumberland), Quartermaster-Sergeant Edgar (Dorset), and Private Humphry (Cambridge University), 63 each; Private Clarke, Gloucester, 66; &c. The great successes of the day were twelve and ten bull's-eyes, respectively made by Mr. Humphry, of Cambridge, and Mr. Mackenzie, of the Edinburgh Long-Range Club, for the Whiteley and Pigou prizes.

The winner of the Silver Medal, £60, and Silver Badge, in the Queen's first stage, on Thursday, was Quartermaster Macdonald, 10th Forfarshire. At noon, Private Rae, Stirling, Gold Medallist of last year, stood first, with 94—one point below the winning score of last year. It was then reported that another Gold Medallist, named Atkinson, with whom Rae a few years ago lost a tie, had also made 94. It turned out, however, that two men of that name were competing—Corporal Atkinson, 1st Durham, the Gold Medallist of 1875 and Private Atkinson, 3rd Renfrew, a new shot at Wimbledon. It was the latter who tied Rae at 94 points These were soon eclipsed, however. Just before the cessation of firing for luncheon Quartermaster Macdonald, 10th Forfarshire, put in score of 33 at 600 yards, which, added to the 63 obtained at the two previous ranges, put him a point ahead of everybody.



The shooting for the Princess Alexandra prizes was continued on Thursday; Friday is fixed in the programme for the Prince of Wales's and St. George's competitions, with a variety of other interesting contests: and Saturday's bill-of-fare comprises the continuation of the Prince of Wales's contest, the Lords and Commons match, and the China Cup.

We have much pleasure in adding that a handsome writing-desk, made from various Canadian woods, was presented on Tuesday to Captain Mildmay, the secretary of the association, at the Canadian camp, by Colonel Gzowski, on behalf of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association.



The Roumanian Ministers on Wednesday tendered their resignation to Prince Charles, and the Chambers immediately assembled in sections to consult upon the course to be pursued in view of the step taken by the Government.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Both Chambers met yesterday week. The Senate was occupied mainly with the railway schemes. The Chamber proceeded with the Budget, the general discussion on which was closed, and the clauses of the Budget of Receipts proceeded with. The Chamber of Deputies on Saturday adopted the opening clauses of the Senatorial Bill relating to the establishment of the seat of the Legislature in Paris, and resolved to defer until Tuesday the voting upon article 5, the original draught of which was amended by the Senate. The Chamber decided not to sit on Monday, the anniversary of the taking of the Bastille. The Bureaux of the Senate on Tuesday elected the Committee upon M. Jules Ferry's Educational Bill. It is composed of MM. Jules Simon, Daguenet, Lavernière, Buffet, and Parieu, who are hostile to the bill, and MM. Foucher du Careil, Schœlcher, Pelletan, and Bertauld, in favour of it; consequently, five opponents and four adherents of the measure. In the Chamber of Deputies the debate on the bill relative to the return of the Chambers to Paris was concluded on clause 5, which maintains the right of the President of the Chambers to make a direct call upon the military forces for protection, was adopted by 310 votes against 131. The debate on the Budget was then resumed, and the whole of the direct taxes were voted.

On Sunday about 19,000 of the troops of Paris and its immediate neighbourhood were reviewed by President Grévy at Longchamps. Great crowds of people were present, notwithstanding the bad weather. The official tribune, decorated with flags and shields bearing the letters "R. F." was occupied by President Grévy, M. Martel, M. Gambetta, General Gresley, and Admiral Jaureguiberry. The Duc de Nemours and Marshal and Madame MacMahon were also present.

A private meeting, presided over by the Duc de Larochefoucault Bisaccia and attended by over 4000 persons, was held in the Cirque d'Hiver at Paris on the 10th inst., to protest against the Ferry Law.

Monday being the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille, various fêtes took place in Paris in celebration of the event. M. Gambetta held a reception at the Palais Bourbon, the entertainment provided including a concert, supported by the most eminent singers in Paris, and a ballet, in which the dancers were dressed in the costumes of 1789, the airs as well as the steps being taken from the best authorities of that period. The soirée was a brilliant success, and was attended by the whole Diplomatic Body, the leading members of the political, financial, and literary world, all the Ministers, and many Senators and Deputies.

The Times Correspondent at Paris describes two scenes on Monday night in connection with the celebration of the anniversary of the storming of the Bastille. One was M. Gambetta's reception, which appears to have been successful, but dull. But, he says, the chief interest of the evening lay elsewhere. "On leaving the Palais Bourbon, I went straight to the Bastille fête in the Bois de Boulogne, got up under the presidency of M. Victor Hugo and M. Louis Blanc for the benefit of the amnestied Communists. At the grand entrance of the Bois, where I was obliged to alight, there was seen in the distance a blaze of light of all colours advancing towards me, and up came about 1000 or 1500 persons, men and women, with red lanterns, tricolour flags, and torches in serried ranks. The dense mass filled the whole road, their lanterns and torches gleaming in the darkness of a starless night. The women had tucked up their dresses and showed their white petticoats. Two bands played the Marseillaise and the Champs de Départ. Spasmodic blazes of Bengal lights from time to time lit up the advancing procession. Along the route were massed thousands of spectators, who responded to the cry of Vive la République. Mixing with the crowd, I only once heard the cry of Vive la Commune, and it was not echoed. I struck out in front of the procession and drove forward to the Arc de Triomphe there to await it. Here spectators were crowded in every corner. The procession approached. It was singing Marchons, marchons, qu'un sang impur, &c., when suddenly red and green Bengal lights lit up the Arc de Triomphe. I was curious to see what would follow, for it was strange enough to see the Arc de Triomphe illuminated in honour of amnestied Communists. Would it pass under the arch, would it go down the Champs Elysées, would it go down to the Palais Bourbon and cheer M. Gambetta's fête? It reached the arch and turned to the right amid fresh Bengal lights. The music grew louder, the voices shriller, and the procession passed round the arch, and halted at the side of the popular bas-relief. Some words were exchanged, the band played again, cheers rang from every side, then the lanterns and torches were put out, and the crowd slowly dispersed at the order of a group of some ten persons. The spectacle was really picturesque, and the brilliant but staid festivities of the Palais Bourbon cannot be compared with this popular display."

A service for the repose of the soul of the late Prince Louis Napoleon, held at Lyons last Saturday morning, led to a popular outbreak, the disturbance lasting over an hour.

ITALY.

Signor Cairoli submitted to King Humbert on Saturday an almost complete list of the members of the new Cabinet. With the exception of the two subordinate portfolios of the Navy and Commerce, the Ministry is constituted as follows:—Signor Cairoli, President of the Council of Ministers and Minister of Foreign Affairs; Signor Villa, Minister of the Interior; Signor Grimaldi, Minister of Finance; Signor Baccarini, Minister of Public Works; Signor Vare, Minister of Grace and Justice; Signor Perez, Minister of Public Instruction; and Signor Bonelli, Minister of War. Signor Perez was Minister of Public Works in the second Depretis Administration; Signor Baccarini held that portfolio under Signor Cairoli last year; and General Bonelli entered the same Cabinet on the retirement of General Bruzzo in October, 1878. The other Ministers now hold office for the first time.

SPAIN.

The debate in the Congress on the reply to the Speech from the Throne was concluded on Monday night. After a speech from Señor Segasta, the leader of the Constitutionalists, who attacked both the Ministry of Señor Canovas del Castillo and that of General Martinez Campos, the two last statesmen replied, repeating the arguments they had employed in their previous speeches respecting the last Ministerial crisis, the attempt to assassinate the King, and the affairs of Cuba. The address was then voted by 247 against 44.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Dr. Stremayr, the President of the Austrian Council of Ministers, was on Monday unanimously elected by the first division of the Bukovina landowners as their representative in the Reichsrath.

The elections for the Austrian Reichsrath were concluded last Saturday. The result of the elections is the return of 173 members of the Liberal groups and 175 Conservative and National candidates. Three of those elected have declined to sit, while two have been elected for two places, thus rendering necessary five supplementary elections.

Professor Brücke, who has been elected Rector of the University of Vienna, is the first Protestant who has held that office since the foundation of the University.

The seventh Corn and Seed Market at Vienna will be held on the 25th and 26th of next month. An international exhibition of engines and implements for flour mills, bakeries, breweries, distilleries, and agriculture will be connected with it.

RUSSIA.

An Imperial order was published yesterday week empowering the Governors-General to exercise their discretion in political cases, and send them for trial before the military courts or the ordinary tribunals.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that a fatal torpedo explosion occurred at Cronstadt on the 9th inst. Five men were killed, seven dangerously wounded, of whom several have since died, and ten slightly wounded. The accident is attributed to carelessness. An explosion is also reported at Omsk, in Siberia. A pound of gunpowder was placed under the floor of the private apartments of the superintendent of the prison, and exploded. The building caught fire, but the fire was soon put out, and no one was hurt.

The Moscow Gazette understands that the National Exhibition at Moscow is to be postponed from 1880 to 1881, in consequence of the inability of Russian manufacturers to prepare goods for show in so short an interval as is now allowed them. The work of erecting the building will, however, go on.

The Odessa Messenger states that never before has there been so much corn stored at Odessa as at the present time, as no orders come from abroad, and every day there arrive from 100 to 150 cartloads.

The Government is fitting out an expedition to explore the Siberian rivers, with a view to improving the navigation between the seacoast and the interior. The exploring party will make charts of the river Obi, map out the channel by means of buoys, and determine the conditions which govern the navigation of the stream. A sum of 63,000 roubles has been allotted for this purpose by the Minister of Finance.

AMERICA.

In contrast to what is being experienced in this country, a Times' telegram says that a wave of intensely warm weather is spreading over the United States, a temperature at or above 100 deg. being reported from South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Missouri, Texas, Nevada, and California, the highest being 109 deg. at Augusta, Georgia, and 103 deg. at Jacksonville, Florida. The temperature in seaboard cities ranges from 95 deg. to 98 deg. At Charleston, on Sunday, fifteen deaths from sunstroke occurred.

Cases of yellow fever, some of which have proved fatal, are stated to have occurred at Memphis.

CANADA.

The Orangemen's celebrations at Toronto and Moncton last Saturday passed off without disturbance.

The Toronto Globe publishes reports from 400 places in all parts of the Dominion showing that the spring wheat crop promises to be slightly below the average. The "fall" wheat is 11 per cent. above the average crop, and the barley crop will be an average one. The condition of corn is the worst of all the cereal crops.

INDIA.

The Viceroy issued last Saturday in the Gazette of India a congratulatory address on the skilful conduct and conclusion of the Afghan war. The gallantry, steadiness, and strict discipline of the British troops of all arms, native and European, are (the telegram says) recognised in glowing terms, and also the tact and discretion of the political officers. The address concludes with a warm acknowledgment of the loyalty of the native Princes. It is further announced that the Indian Government have recommended that medals, with clasps for Ali Musjid and Peiwar Kotal, shall be granted to the British force engaged in the campaign.

Prince Alexander is now in possession of the Bulgarian throne. In the Church of St. Michael, in Tirnova, before the National Assembly which elected him, he has taken the oath of fidelity to the Constitution. On Monday the Prince arrived in Sophia, and, after bread and salt had been presented to him by the inhabitants, he proceeded to the church. The streets were crowded, and decked with flags, and many triumphal arches had been erected. Upon leaving the church the Prince went to the palace, where he received the State officials. In the evening there was a display of fireworks, the town being illuminated in honour of the Prince's arrival.

FINE ARTS.

A picture (signed) by Lorenzo Lotto, part of the bequest of Miss Solly, has been placed in the National Gallery. It represents a family group of a man and woman, probably a husband and wife, in Venetian, or at least Italian, costumes, a little girl and a little boy nearly nude. The former are seated at a table whereon is a dish of cherries, and the man is in the act of giving a bunch of the fruit to the boy. The background is open, presenting a view of a bay, with a mountain, apparently intended for a volcano. One interesting feature of the group is that of the female figure, which in physiognomy, allowing for variations of artistic treatment, dress, and pose is a counterpart of the superb portrait, also in the National Gallery, by Paris Bordone, of a lady of the Genoese family of Brignole—a splendid blonde bella, with yellow hair, in a low crimson satin dress, her hand to her hip. Both masters were natives of Treviso, both studied at Venice, and it is evident that one of the portraits of this lady is a copy or close imitation of the other. This circumstance, however, presents some difficulty, since Lotto was the senior of Bordone by about twenty years, though the lady in his picture is but little older than she appears in the superior presentment by his young townsman. And yet one would say, judging by the imperfect draughtsmanship and modelling, and its Venetian character generally, that the group is a comparatively early work by Lotto, painted not long after he was a scholar of Giovanni Bellini and Giorgione. As, however, the age of the lady—nineteen—is given on the Bordone picture, it is certain that (if the same person) she is some years older in Lotto's picture; therefore the latter must have been painted in emulation of the former. But among Lotto's later works are some vastly finer as regards solidity, effect, and chiaroscuro; indeed, certain of his portraits are among the best of his time. But his powers arrived somewhat tardily at maturity. He was born about 1480, and at first established himself at Venice, then returned to Treviso, which was in the Venetian state: he often signed himself Pictor Venetus. About 1513, however, he settled in Bergamo, and hence has been called Bergamasco; but according to Vasari he also painted at Ancona, Loretto, and other towns. He died about 1558. At Hampton Court is a fine portrait by him, long attributed to Correggio, the signature having been painted over.

An etching by M. Courtry, after Muncaksy's picture of "Milton Dictating 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughters," now exhibiting at Bond-street, has been published. As we remarked, in our review of the picture and the photograph from it, the artist's scheme of effect lends itself readily to reproduction in black and white, and we may now add that his sudden transitions from light to dark with little intermediate gradation is peculiarly fitted for effective interpretation by etching. M. Courtry has made the most of this special adaptability of the original, and, bringing his own best powers to the task, has produced a very acceptable version of a work which has striking merit, though, as we have already remarked, not, we think, deserving the encomia it has received abroad.

M. Schoeck, a landscape-painter, who has been medaillé at Vienna, is exhibiting a number of his pictures at the gallery, 20, Piccadilly. They represent views in various countries of Europe and North America, including some from the Arctic regions, the fruit, it is said, of ten years' travel. The subjects are interesting; and M. Schoeck is a vigorous painter, with, however, a tendency to force his effects, and his execution is to English eyes rather unpleasantly loaded and unrefined.

Mr. Heath Wilson and Mr. Pullan have dispatched from Florence to London a large design for the decoration of the cupola of St. Paul's, which they offer by way of suggestion to the Decoration Committee. It is earnestly to be hoped that the plan sketched by the late Mr. A. Stevens, and the projected employment of some of our leading artists to execute designs for the mosaic workers, will be reconsidered.

In September next a new gallery and museum will be opened in the Wedgwood Institute at Burslem. On the occasion will be exhibited a collection of paintings by two natives of the district, George Mason and J. Holland, the loan of whose works is invited by the committee. The whole of the pottery and porcelain bought by the Government in the Paris Exhibition of 1878 will be displayed in the new gallery.

The Earl of Bathurst has presented to the Royal Institution a large bust of Dr. William Hyde Wollaston, by Chantrey; and Lady Goldsmid has presented a bust of the late Sir Francis Goldsmid, Q.C., admirably executed in marble by Mr. Theed, to the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn, in commemoration of the fact that Sir Francis was the first Jew ever called to the Bar.

It is proposed to open a Free Exhibition of Pictures, Drawings, Photographs, &c., during the vacation of the Working Men's College in South London next August and September, when the spacious rooms will be otherwise unused, if owners of such works of art will lend them for this purpose in sufficient number. Every care will be taken of them, and they will be fully insured against loss by fire. South London is destitute of any museum or art-gallery, and it is believed that the inhabitants of the poor and crowded neighbourhood of Lambeth would value such a collection as it is desired to make.

The annual report of the Arundel Society has been issued. The position of the Association remains nearly stationary, though there has been a decline in the number of new members during the last four years. The expenditure was £6325. The publications for this year are chromo-lithographs after P. della Francesca and Giorgione. Next year will be issued a chromo-lithograph of the interior of the Piccolomini Library at Siena, with the frescoes by Pinturicchio, and another after the same painter of the Virgin, Child, and Saints, in the conventual church of Monte Oliveto. Two commissions were given during 1878 for copies from frescoes in the Piccolomini Library. It is proposed to produce a copy from Lord Pembroke's curious picture at Wilton House, representing Richard II. and his Queen praying.

The inhabitants of Barnard Castle, in the county of Durham, are gratified to learn that Mr. Robert Harley, a townsman, has been appointed Curator of the Bowes Museum. Mr. Harley's last appointment was on the staff of Professors at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. Previously to that he was Head Master of the School of Art at Cambridge. Before, however, obtaining his Cambridge appointment he had studied in the Royal Academies of London and Antwerp, and in the Department of Science and Art at South Kensington. It will thus be seen that his knowledge of the fine arts is considerable, fully qualifying him for the important post he now holds. The Bowes Museum, as our readers know, has been erected at a cost of more than £100,000 by an individual benefactor. The magnificence of the building is worthy of the art-treasures it will contain, which are of incalculable value. These were collected by Mr. Bowes and his first wife, the Countess of Montalbo, during many years, in various parts of Europe. The Bowes Museum, with its contents and its park, will, ultimately, it is understood, be presented to the town of Barnard Castle.

A three-days' meeting of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archæological Society terminated at Cheltenham on Thursday, the 10th inst. Mr. T. Gambier Parry was president. The report of the council stated that it had been decided to open two museums—one at Gloucester and the other at Bristol. The first day was devoted to visits to places of antiquarian interest in and around Cheltenham. On Wednesday visits were paid to Southam House, the residence of the late Lord Ellenborough, and one of the oldest houses in the county; Cleeve Church, a fine parish and collegiate church, with styles of architecture varying from Early Norman to a Jacobean gallery; and Sudeley Castle, at times the temporary residence of Royalty, and now owned by Mr. J. C. Dent. On Thursday some early British and Roman remains along the brow of the Cotswold hills were inspected, and visits were also paid to two or three churches. There were two evening meetings, at which papers were read on local antiquarian subjects.

The sum fixed by the French Government for next year's Budget for the service of the fine arts is 7,706,730f., being an augmentation over the Budget for the current year of 186,720f. In the report to the Chamber of Deputies containing this estimate it is incidentally mentioned that a Commission is still considering the means for arresting the decoration of the Pantheon at Paris with religious subjects, and continuing, or even substituting, the decoration already effected by pictures and statues of a secular character, in conformity with the original destination of the edifice, as set forth in the decree of the Assemblée in 1791.

The exhibition of the Musée des Arts Decoratifs, in the Pavillon de Flore of the Tuileries, is in course of being changed into a retrospective exhibition without closing the doors, the cases and objects being replaced seriatim. Among the new attractions are a fine collection of works of Arabian art lent by M. de Saint-Maurice.

The authorities of Paris propose to form a gallery to contain all the available views of the city, ancient and modern.

An exhibition of the works of the celebrated sculptor M. Clesinger has been opened in Paris. Included are his beautiful statue of "Phryne," the "Bull of the Campagna," and the two equestrian groups of "Perseus and Andromeda" and "Nessus and Dejanira."

The death is announced of Mr. Frederick Richard Lee, R.A., at Cape Colony. Mr. Lee was one of the oldest members of the Royal Academy. He was born, in 1798, at Barnstaple, Devon. At a very early age he received a commission in the 56th Foot, and served in the Netherlands. He quitted the Army in consequence of ill health, and became a student of the Academy in 1818. He devoted himself exclusively to landscape painting, and first exhibited at the British Institution, from whose directors he subsequently received a £50 prize. In 1824 he contributed to the Royal Academy Exhibition. In 1834 he was elected an A.R.A., and in 1838 an R.A. During his long career he was a very constant exhibitor till 1870, when he withdrew to the rank of Honorary Retired Academician; since which period he has occupied most of his time yachting, visiting various distant countries. Several of his pictures were painted in conjunction with Mr. T. Sydney Cooper. Examples of his agreeable and workman-like if somewhat prosaic productions are in the Vernon, Bell, and Sheepshanks' gifts to the nation.

NOVELS.

Trim away some of the melodramatic overgrowth and we have in How He Won Her, by Mrs. Eiloart (Samuel Tinsley and Co.), a story which it does one good to read, wholesome in tone, vigorous in style, interesting in subject, worthy in sentiment, human in scope, excellent in purpose. It is not a work of high art, so far as constructive skill and literary graces are concerned; but it is, on the whole, eminently readable, and it possesses the comparatively rare charm of establishing at the outset, and confirming as it proceeds, sympathetic relations between the reader and the most prominent characters. Nothing could very well be more charming, in its simple, touching way, than the romance in which the poor little lame girl and the noble prince of her imagination play the principal parts; or, in its equally simple and almost equally touching, though more homely and more humorous way, than that in which the diffident, unselfish Dick displays his devotion towards the slowly awakened, gradually converted, repentant Mary Ann. But more touching, perhaps, than either is that which is told in a few short graphic paragraphs, describing how the "unpopular man," the despised and low-born money-lender, was left out in the cold to ponder over the truth or falsehood of the common saying, "'tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." A bitter wail, however, makes itself heard, from time to time, throughout the tale, notwithstanding its generally healthy, cheery strain; and many a harsh, stern, uncompromising utterance seems to testify that the writer feels keenly and resents deeply what is represented as the unreasonable forbearance and martyrdom expected of injured women by purblind or hypocritical society. Especially is this the case, when the relations between husband and wife or mother and children are dealt with in the spirit of one who seems inclined to apply to those peculiar connections the rule of retaliation implied in the savage law, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. Certainly, in the story under consideration, the provocation given is extreme and the indulgence demanded exceeds that which would accord forgiveness until seventy times seven; but, for all this, there is something which grates unpleasantly upon the feelings when an admirable woman behaves towards her profligate and despicable husband and towards her remarkably steady but almost equally despicable son in the strong-minded manner, accompanied by an unfeminine employment of unanswerable argument and cool irony, which is adopted by the otherwise amiable Mrs. Glynne, who, we are told, "was not one to love the worthless," and in connection with whom we are significantly informed that "the noblest type of woman does not grow from the spaniel race." True, but it is not woman's nobility which gives her that magic spell of hers, and it is a question whether, if she must be likened to something canine, she would not appear more irresistible for the qualities which distinguish the spaniel than for those which are conspicuous in the mastiff. At any rate, there is something almost too repulsive and unnatural in the representation of a gentle lady not only regretting to her husband's face that he is not dead, as he was supposed to be, but expressing to a stranger a wish that he had been killed by that stranger's hand, and determining to secure her own deliverance at the risk of putting a rope round his neck, and of having to enjoy her freedom under the disadvantage of possible remorse and of the notoriety attaching to felonious associations. A true lady, a true woman, though married to a devil, would hardly be capable of such a course; only a very "superior" person, brought up according to "the higher education of women," could display such sublime disregard of everything but sheer justice, could miss the opportunity afforded for the crowning act of self-sacrifice. Or perhaps an unusually stout-hearted, epicene sort of fish-wife might display such Roman resolution, such inflexible regard for right and equity; but not a lady like Mrs. Glynne. By-the-way, some mention is made of a pension which she is supposed to receive as an officer's widow; and, if memory may be trusted, she took no steps such as might have been expected of a lady with so strict a sense of justice, when she discovered that she was receiving money to which she had no claim, and such as would have probably stopped the novel altogether, to say nothing of bringing the diabolical husband to his knees, before the end of the first volume. But it may have been mere report that the "widow had not much to live upon but her pension and the slender remnant of her father's fortune;" and it would certainly have been a pity if so pleasant, on the whole, and in some parts so charming a novel, had come to a premature conclusion.

Anything like novelty of scene is so rare in fiction now-a-days that Mr. Richard Dowling's weird romance, The Mystery of Killard (Tinsley Brothers), would be welcome, if only for its freshness. But it has many other good qualities. We believe this to be the author's first three-volumed novel. Its undoubted merits, therefore, deserve especial commendation. Vigorously is the story opened in a small fishing village on the coast of Ireland; and distinctively portrayed at the outset are the characters of John Cantillon and his wife, and a stranger driven within their gates by the gale. A rocky islet known as the Bishop's lies off Killard, and furnishes the "Mystery," which has an evil influence on the clearly limned personages introduced to us. The Bishop's is inhabited by a morose deaf mute, David Lane, who seeks a wife similarly afflicted, in order to preserve the great secret of his life. Washed by the Atlantic, Killard and the Bishop's are pictured in calm and in storm with great charm and power; and a hurricane which rages on the Bishop's the night a rash and prying landsman visits the islet to unravel the "Mystery" is described with a vividness not surpassed by Victor Hugo. If the current of the story moves slowly in the first volume it runs swiftly enough in the last two, the concluding chapters being full of quick dramatic action, clever delineations of strongly contrasted human eccentricities, interwoven with which is a love story of singular freshness. "The Mystery of Killard" is, in brief, a novel interesting in itself, and, in spite of a few crudities here and there, full of brightest promise of further good work from Mr. Dowling's pen.

SHEEP-SHEARING.

The belongings of sheep-shearing are both picturesque and prosaic: picturesque in the process, prosaic in the result. We will deal with the former first. The time for sheep-shearing is early in June, but this year it had to be much later; for, until the sun has been able to "cream the bushes"—to make the elder come into bloom—it is not thought to be safe—in West Worcestershire, at least—for newly-shorn sheep to be turned out in the meadows.

The shearing of sheep is an olden custom, as old as the days of Nabal, who had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats, and who "sheared his sheep" in Carmel. Prior to the shearing, however, comes the washing, to free the wool from dirt and grit; and this is done upon a certain day, when the sheep to be shorn are all washed together, and thus is the process managed. The sheep, hemmed in with hurdles by a pool or river or by a mill-backwater, are let out one by one, and a chain put round them, when they are pushed into the stream to men who stand there, who seize and scrub them till each fleece is clean, then let them go; when, after floundering out and waiting by the side until their weight is lessened by the drainage from them, the washed sheep climb the bank and roam the meadow. Should there be nothing deeper than a brook at hand, as sometimes happens, a dam is made across it; and where there is not a run for the sheep when they emerge from the water, as is the case where the washing has to be done "on loan," another fold for them is hurdled off until they can be taken to their pasture. Though the "shearing" of sheep is narrated in Scripture, there is no mention made of "washing;" and in some places—in the Dartmoor district, for instance—sheep-washing is dispensed with, the wool being sold "in the yolk"—i.e., with the clogged oil and dirt still in it; but the price for it is less by one fourth than for well-washed wool.

In the washing of sheep, the mode in most favour is that of brisk hand-rubbing; but with those who believe in scrubbing iron or wooden paddles are used, or a stout broom-head; and while the majority of sheep-washers get into the water and hold the sheep against them, with the head well up, there are those who, more careful of themselves, keep on dry land and wash them from the shore, or from a barrel let into a hole at the side, and in which the washer stands. This washing of sheep, from its very surroundings and the time of year—the time of meadow-sweet and blossomed beans and honeysuckle-clover, when skies are blue, and bees are out, and cows are in the water—is at all times picturesque, and none the less so from the country children who, with sun-tanned faces and with white sun-bonnets, so crowd about it, and shout with lusty joy as sheep escape, or clap their hands when busy circling swallows dip the wing, or laden timber-waggons, with their sturdy teams, go creaking by, leaving a healthy smell of well-dried bark behind them. Such scenes lack not on-lookers, and in some districts the "sheep-washing parties"—genial gatherings of old friends and neighbours—are still kept up, as is also "the shearing dinner," when some of the young farmers will assist in the shearing, in emulation of the best man there, whose number often is "five in the hour, and catch and tie up, too!"

The usual time for shearing is in a month from washing—it is with some though but a week—when the new oil from the clean skin has got into the wool; and it takes place in the barn, where the shearers kneel or sit, with the sheep held close against them, the shears being worked round it as each part gets loose until the whole fleece comes away. It is then rolled up and tied, and the shearing goes on till the flock has been shorn, when the fleeces are placed in the granary, and a noisy supper ends it, the gentlemen of the party joining the workmen in their merriment, and the ladies looking on, till it is time "to drive home by the light of the moon."

Where working shearers shear the sheep payment is made for it by the score or hundred. Fat sheep are shorn in April and in May—as they are sold for mutton, and are not turned out—and stores are shorn in June. Those who keep long-woolled sheep shear lambs as well; but, as lambs' wool wont hold together in the fleece, it is put up loosely into bags or cloths. It is, of course, of less value than good fleece wool; but, if the quantity of it is not in undue proportion, the dealers—"wool-staplers"—will take the whole clip at one price per pound. The price of wool differs each year, and it is this year lower than ever, "lower," say the sellers, "than for twenty years," as it is but tenpence-halfpenny; the chief cause of the drop being bad condition, as the wool, through the long, cold winter and the heavy rains, is sticky, clogged, and rank. The average price used to be one and ten; but of late years it has drifted downwards.

When the wool has been sold it is turned over to the "sorter," who shortly sifts the lot, the finer fleeces being kept separate, and the coarser parts placed by themselves, such as the rougher body portions, and the discoloured wool. It is then duly packed and baled, when it is ready for home use or export.

There are different sorts of wool, and they are used for different purposes; the fine short fleeces for the best broadcloths, the coarser wool for the narrow ones, and the long thick flakes for the hosiers. The wools which used to be in best repute were the Southdowns and the Ryelands, but they have given way of late years to Merinos, those wools of finer texture from Australia. Of the varieties of sheep, the following, amongst "wool bearers," are those most in favour with the English breeders. In long wools, the Leicester, Lincoln, Cotswold, Devons, and Kents; in "mediums," the Dorset Horns, Oxfords, and Somersets; and in "shorts," the Southdowns, Hampshire Downs, and the Shropshire. A foreign wool, too, of much value, is that of the Alpaca, the native sheep of Peru, as it is long, strong, and silky, firm and fine. The heavy fleeces of the Oxford Downs are also fine and silky, but the wool most sought for, for length of staple and bright, high lustre, is that of the "good Kents," the native breed of Romney Marsh.

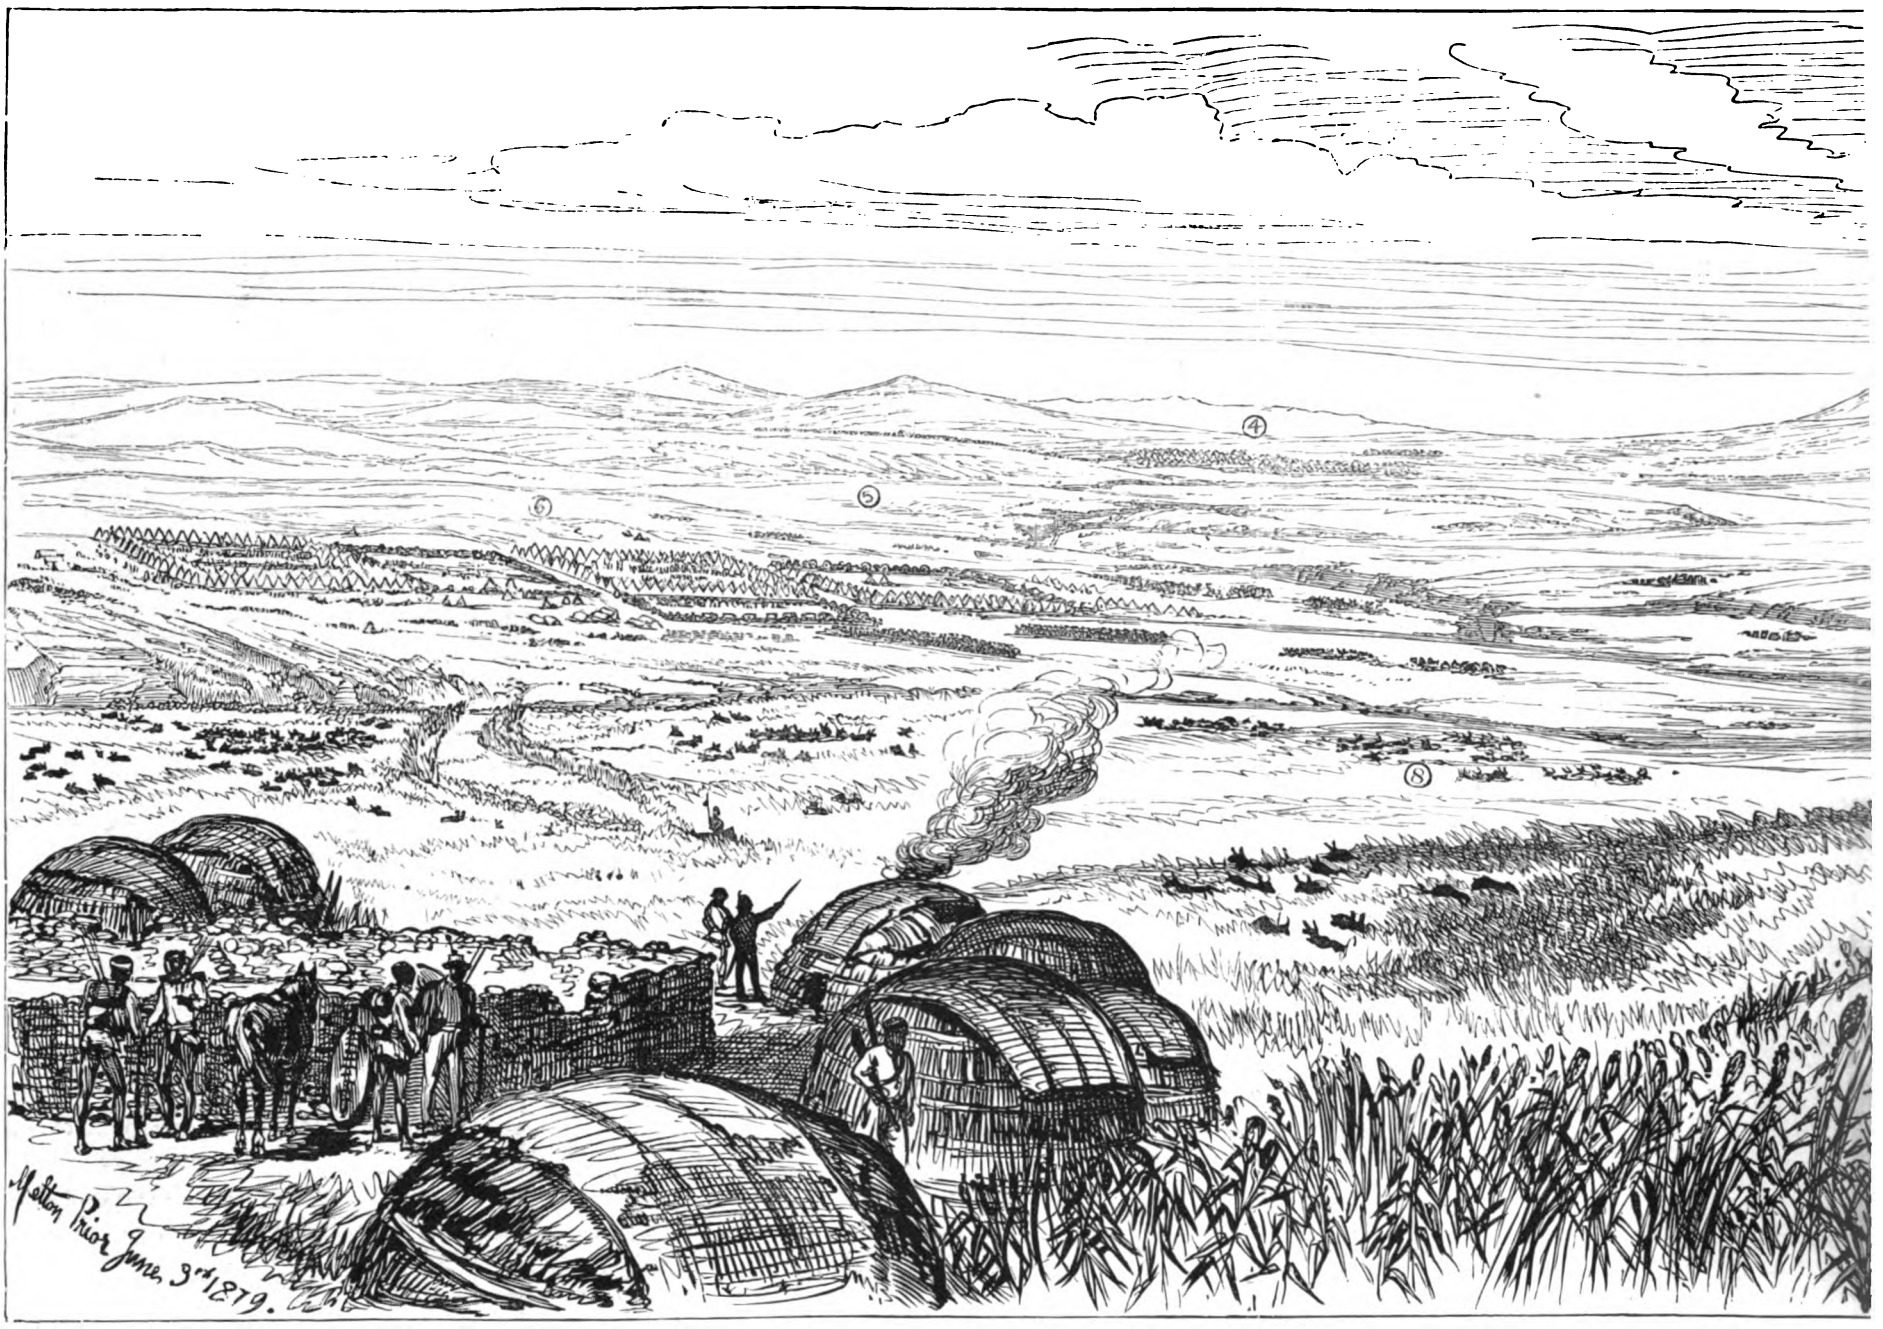
Breed has, no doubt, much to do with wool-bearing; but an important element is the soil itself; and it was laid down as a principle, in a paper read before the Acclimatisation Society of Paris, that "wherever the land is good, there the wool is equally so," as it was found that wool "grown" on poor, sandy soil was harsh, short, and brittle. This leading principle must, however, be modified now that artificial feeding is so much in vogue, as it has been clearly shown that a generous diet, if continually sustained, will produce both bulk and quality, and make the wool serrated, bright, and glistening: whilst under opposite conditions the fleece will be light and the staple thin, and of a wan, pale colour. In the former case the serrations in a fleece, on which so much depends—as they are invaluable to the manufacturer as hooking the fabric together—amount to the incredible number of 2000 to an inch, and even in best fleeces to 2700; while in the latter case—the fleece of an ill-kept animal—they are few and ineffective, and apt to part readily when the wool is stretched. With respect to how much a fleece will weigh, much depends on condition and breed. A good Cheviot may weigh as little as four or five pounds, and a Cotswold seven or eight; while an old Lincoln will turn the scale at from ten to sixteen pounds, with a length of wool of from twelve to eighteen inches. There is one fleece which differs wholly from all others, and that is the fleece of the Shetlands—those sheep that eat seaweed, flesh, and fish—and it is "plucked" not shorn, being composed of two coats, an under one, "fors," of short thick wool, and an outer one, "scudder," of long hair only. In summer the "fors" gets loose, and it is then pulled off by hand. There is one fleece, too, which is singular, the fleece of the Black-faced Heath, which is long-waved and wiry, and partakes more of the character of hair than of wool.

The uses to which the fleecy covering of a sheep is converted are many and important ones, and some of them are embodied in the following saying:—"No sheep no wool; and hence, no woolman, spinner, weaver, clothier, cloth-worker, fuller, tucker, shearman, or draper." With which quaint distich, through the exigencies of space, we are compelled to end this paper.

Mr. Gray, M.P., has accepted the Lord Mayoralty of Dublin for next year.

The Birkenhead Town Council has resolved to erect public baths, at a cost of about £3000. The subject has been frequently before the town, and a site was purchased twelve years ago.

In an action for breach of promise, which occupied Mr. Baron Huddlestone and a special jury the whole of Saturday last, at the Carnarvonshire Assizes, and in which the plaintiff, Sarah Owen, a widow, fifty years old, claimed £1000 damages of Benjamin Williams, a gentleman farmer, ten years her senior, a verdict was returned for the defendant.



Last Saturday evening the Kentish Town and Gospel Oak Coffee-Tavern Company (Limited) opened its first coffee-tavern. The tavern occupies large and handsome corner premises in the upper part of the Malden-road, a thickly-populated working-class neighbourhood, and is named the Rose and Thistle. The opening of the tavern to the public was preceded by a public meeting in the St. Andrew's School-room close by, which was presided over by Mr. Samuel Hoare, J.P., one of the Middlesex magistrates.

The annual dinner of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain was given on the 10th inst. at the Grosvenor Gallery Restaurant, Dr. B. W. Richardson presiding. Earl Fortescue replied for the House of Lords, and Mr. Palmer, M.P., for the House of Commons. The chairman gave "Success to the Sanitary Institute," stating that they were about establishing an educational system which, in some respects, but in a more humble way, should resemble that of the Scotch colleges, which had conferred such great benefits.

At University College, London, the Hollier Scholarships of £60 for one year have been thus awarded:—Greek, G. W. Kilner; Hebrew, H. J. Cohen. The Clothworkers' Exhibition of £50 a year, tenable for two years, for chemistry and physics, has been awarded to J. Sakurai.—On the 9th inst. the annual speeches were delivered by the pupils of Malvern College, and the prizes distributed to the successful students by Earl Beauchamp, chairman of the governing body. A long list of honours was read by the head master, including, among others, two open classical scholarships, two first classes in moderations at Oxford, three second classes in the final schools, a Cooper's-hill appointment, and six Sandhurst cadetships.—The Foundation Scholarships in the Upper School, Dulwich, have been awarded as follows:—To F. O'D. Hoare, R. Greeven, W. N. Fleming, T. H. Passmore, H. T. Prescott, H. A. Izod, M. W. Woods, and F. J. A. Arch. C. D. Matthews, J. L. Wurm, H. M. R. Hopkins, and A. E. W. Mason were mentioned as deserving special commendation.—The 9th was Speech Day at Highgate School. The speeches, which are traditionally of a high standard, were perhaps even better than usual. At Oxford, C. G. Thomas, Scholar of Oriel College, has obtained a First Class in Moderations (Classical); E. P. Morgan (Oriel), a First Class in Natural Science; F. D. Dalton, Scholar Corpus Christi, a Second Class Lit. Human., and the Ellerton Theological Essay Prize. After the speeches, the company, which was a large and distinguished one, were received at lunch in his garden by the Rev. C. M'Dowall, Head Master. Mr. C. T. Blanshard, B.A., F.C.S., late Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford, First Class Natural Science, Science Master of Cheltenham College, has been appointed Modern and Science Master.—At the annual Speech-day at Durham, the Archdeacon of Durham gave three of the Dean and Chapter Scholarships, of £60 each, to be held for three years at any of the Universities, to Eugene Cradock, John Wethey, and Joseph Maccartie.—Mr. E. G. Hardy, late Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford, and Assistant Master at Felstead School, has been elected Head Master of Grantham Grammar School, out of about fifty candidates.—Mr. T. H. Baines, B.A., of Christ's College, Cambridge, late assistant master on the Conway, has been appointed to an assistant-mastership at Trent College.

DEATH OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, at the head-quarters of the Army in the Zulu War, has sent us the Sketches we have this week prepared for the Illustrations of the lamentable death of the Prince Imperial, which are presented in the Number here placed before our readers. The first is a general view of the whole locality, with the camps of General Newdigate and of Brigadier-General Wood in the distance, and with particular indications of the Zulu Kraal near the river, where the Prince and his party unsaddled their horses and lay down to rest; also of the precise spot where the unfortunate young Prince's body was found next morning, and where the two slain troopers of Bettington's Volunteers Horse were found. Another Sketch represents the kraal and the mealie-ground or field of maize, with the wall and six native huts, exactly as described in the statements of the soldiers and of subsequent visitors to the spot, which we have already published. The arrival of the Prince's body at the camp, on June 2, the day after his death, having been found by the reconnoitring party which General Marshall led out for that purpose, has also been related circumstantially in former reports of this sad affair. But our Special Artist's sketches will have undiminished interest for all in England who have just been called upon to renew, upon the occasion of the funeral last Saturday, their sympathy with the widowed Empress, and their expressions of regret for the untimely death of her son.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Liverpool course is usually very hard during the July Meeting, and this year, in spite of constant rain, it was never really heavy. The St. George Stakes, for three-year-olds, to which £500 was added, proved a great success, and the antagonism of Chippendale, Discord, Caxtonian, Reconciliation, and Adventure was very interesting. The Ascot doings of the first-named entailed a 3 lb. penalty upon him; still, as he had shown himself to be about the equal of Silvio at weight for age, he was naturally backed against the field. The pace was so bad at first that Archer was compelled to take Chippendale to the front to make his own running, and, after nearly everything in the race had looked like winning at one time or another, Robbie Burns, the outsider of the party, who did not look to be half fit, beat Discord very easily indeed, Reconciliation being a good third, and all the rest pretty close up. The winner, however, was objected to, on the plea that his nominator appeared in the Forfeit List, and, the matter being brought before the stewards, they ultimately disqualified Robbie Burns, and awarded the race to Discord. Chippendale must have been quite upset for want of a pace; and on the following day Discord, meeting Robbie Burns on 12 lb. better terms, turned the tables on him with scarcely an effort. Evasion, who ran so well in the July Stakes at Newmarket, at last rewarded the confidence of her supporters by taking the Mersey Stakes from three opponents, of whom Illuminata appears to have trained completely off. A field of eleven turned out for the Liverpool Cup on the Wednesday, and once more the luckless Glendale (7 st. 12 lb.) filled his accustomed berth of second. This time, however, there is no excuse to be made for his defeat, as he ran ungenerously until nearly the finish of the race, when he came with a tremendous rush, but could never quite catch Maximilian (7 st. 7 lb.). The latter has not brought in much return for the 4100 gs. that was given for him, still he has won three or four races, and has not proved such an impostor as do the majority of sensational yearlings. New Laund (5 st. 13 lb.), who ran very well, was only a neck behind Maximilian, but nothing else was near the three placed horses, as The Mandarin (8 st. 12 lb.) proved unable to stay the distance, and Carillon (5 st. 7 lb.) did not perform nearly so well as was anticipated.

Two fine days in succession and the presence of the Prince of Wales on the Thursday made the Kempton Park Meeting last week a brilliant success, and, considering that the Club was only established a year ago, the progress made in that time has been really wonderful. Turning to the sport, we note that Placida ran right away from Alchemist in the Trial Stakes, and it seems probable that now the Oaks winner's best course is about six furlongs. Whitebine, a very useful colt by Brown Bread—Voyageuse, carried his penalty home very cleverly in the Royal Two-Year-Old Stakes, but 4 lb. extra, and the allowances claimed by others in the race, proved too much for him in the Kempton Grand Two-Year-Old Stakes, which resulted in a dead-heat between Country Dance and Triermain. The former is a well-named daughter of Doncaster and Highland Fling, and was bred by Mr. Taylor Sharpe. She cost 700 gs. as a yearling; but Triermain has run too indifferently at Ascot and elsewhere to make her performance a praiseworthy one, especially as she was in receipt of 6 lb. from him, and also she only beat Whitebine by a neck at 15 lb. The Kempton Park Cup was the only noteworthy feature of the last day, and, in spite of the very liberal addition of £500, only seven horses faced the starter. Master Kildare (8 st. 7 lb.), who ran for the first time in the colours of Lord Hastings, was backed wherever a shade of odds could be obtained, despite the fact that his wind has become slightly affected since he was last seen in public. Abbaye (6 st. 8 lb.) was the only one that could make anything of a fight with him; and Placida (9 st. 7 lb.) was an indifferent third, but might possibly have failed to gain that position if one or two of the others had been ridden out.

The cricket records of the present season have been one almost unbroken series of disappointments, and now the Eton and Harrow match has to be added to the long list of unfinished contests. The weather, on the first day, was magnificent, and the scene at Lord's almost as brilliant as ever; but on Saturday came constant heavy showers, and the stumps were finally drawn when Harrow required 49 runs to win, and had six wickets to fall, so that it is impossible for either side to claim much advantage. There was nothing very remarkable in the play on either side; but of course the heavy state of the ground was sadly against brilliant performances. T. G. H. Moncrieffe (not out, 34) was batting exceedingly well for Harrow when the game was abandoned. C. T. Studd, the Eton captain, took eight wickets for 41 runs, and the brothers Ramsay bowled with great effect for Harrow, R. C. Ramsay securing ten wickets at an expense of 63 runs; nor must we omit to notice the fine wicket keeping of M. C. Kemp on the same side. Gentlemen v. Players at Lord's last week had also to be abandoned when it looked as though the latter would secure a victory, as the amateurs could do nothing with Shaw's bowling. Ulyett (61) and Lockwood (39) were the only heavy scorers on either side, though Mr. A. H. Evans (not out, 26) played a very good innings. The score of the first innings of the Derbyshire eleven in their match with Notts was almost a cricket curiosity, as they only put together 16 runs, Morley taking seven wickets for the same number of runs. Selby (53) batted exceedingly well for Notts, and that county eventually won in one innings, with 99 runs in hand. Lancashire has achieved a decisive and most meritorious victory over Yorkshire, beating the "big county" by an innings and 32 runs. This result was almost entirely due to the exertions of the Messrs. Steel, as Mr. D. Q. Steel made 52 runs, and Mr. A. G. Steel (31) got rid of eleven men for 73 runs; Mr Hornby (36) also scored freely. This week two usually unfortunate counties—Surrey and Derbyshire—have each scored their first victory for the season. The former defeated Kent by eight wickets, as Lord Harris's eleven collapsed for the wretched total of 38 runs at their second attempt, Blamires getting rid of six men for 15 runs. Mr. F. Penn (48) was the only batsman who made a good stand on either side. Derbyshire v. Yorkshire was a very close affair, the former only winning by 27 runs. Foster (68) was the only one of the victorious team who scored freely; and on the other side Bates (not out, 52) batted exceedingly well. Mycroft's bowling analysis was a very good one, as his thirteen wickets only cost 65 runs; and Hill and Pease bowled very well for Yorkshire.—The national testimonial to Mr. W. G. Grace will be presented to him at the Pavilion at Lord's on Tuesday afternoon next. It will consist of a book containing the names of all the subscribers to the fund, a purse, and a timepiece. The subscription-list includes 100 guineas from the Marylebone Club, £50 each from the principal county clubs, and the individual subscriptions range from £25 to twopence.

The final round of the open championship match at Lawn Tennis was played on the grounds of the All-England Club at Wimbledon on Tuesday. The weather being fine, a very large number of spectators assembled to witness the proceedings. The players were Mr. J. T. Hartley and Mr. V. St. Leger, the Irish Champion. The contest was very keenly fought throughout. In the end Mr. Hartley won by three sets to love, the scores of the different sets being: Number one, six games against two; number two, six games against four; number three, six games against two. The play of the competitors was frequently applauded. On the conclusion of the championship contest, a members' handicap, which had to be postponed from the previous day on account of the rain, was run through.

The Bicycle Union Fifty Miles Championship was decided at Stamford-bridge at the end of last week. Though there were four starters, the event was merely a match between H. L. Cortis (Wanderers' B.C.) and W. L. Ainslie (Dark Blue B.C.). The latter led until half the distance had been completed, but then Cortis went right away from him, and the Oxonian retired at thirty-five miles, leaving Cortis to finish alone. The winner's time, from twenty-four miles, is the best on record, and he completed the fifty miles in the marvellous time of 2 hours 56 min. 1 sec., which beats anything hitherto accomplished by no less than 11 min. 13 sec.

THEATRES.

Simultaneously with the fashionable performances of the Comédie Française at the Gaiety (the season of French plays at which theatre came to an end on Saturday evening last, when the total of forty-two representations were estimated by Mr. Hollingshead to have yielded the sum of £19,805 14s. 6d., or a general average of £472) the credit of native histrionic art was notably upheld by Mr. Henry Irving at the Lyceum. It is satisfactory to be able to record that large and enthusiastic audiences warmly appreciated the wide range of Mr. Irving's talents, which have enabled him in one week to exhibit vivid and powerful impersonations of such utterly dissimilar parts as the dual rôle in "The Lyons Mail," "Hamlet," Claude Melnotte in "The Lady of Lyons," "Charles I.," and the terribly real embodiment of Mathias, the Polish Jew, in "The Bells." In three of these pieces the grace and charm of Miss Ellen Terry's acting served as an inimitably tender foil to the rare intensity of Mr. Irving's style—the versatility of which will be conspicuously illustrated at Mr. Irving's benefit next Friday and Saturday. Returning to the Gaiety, the regular company, which presents with sufficient spirit a programme generally made up of operetta, farce, and burlesque, reoccupied the boards on Monday, and performed with due liveliness in "The Happy Village," "Stage Struck," and "Pretty Esmeralda," Miss Eveleen Rayne quite realising the title of the burlesque. The success of Mr. Charles Reade's adaptation at the Princess's of "L'Assommoir" has led to its being travestied at the Folly by Mr. Savile Clarke and Mr. Lewis Clifton, who give to their burlesque the title of "Another Drink," and who have secured in Madame Dolaro and Mr. G. W. Anson representatives quite capable of equalling Miss Amy Roselle and Mr. Charles Warner in the rôles of Gervaise and Coupeau. The musical accompaniments to "Another Drink" are furnished by Mr. E. Solomon. At the Adelphi Mr. Hermann Vezin repeats this (Saturday) afternoon his carefully studied representation of Richelieu. To-night the admirers of Miss Neilson will flock to the Haymarket, where this popular actress begins a fortnight's engagement, appearing as Juliet and Rosalind on alternate evenings. Mr. Hare will this evening bring his prosperous rule over the fortunes of the Court to a close, and will shadow forth the programme which he and Mr. Hare intend to open their joint management of the St. James's with next October.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's popular entertainment is announced to close on Saturday, July 26, and, after a few weeks' tour in the provinces, the little company will reassemble at St. George's Hall on Monday, Sept. 29.

Miss Cowen gave one of her charming dramatic recitals at Steinway Hall on Tuesday afternoon, well supported by Mrs. Osgood and Miss Alice Fairman as vocalists.

The Court of Common Council has adopted a report, brought up by the Coal, Corn, and Finance Committee, recommending the purchase by the Corporation of the open and waste land known as Burnham Beeches, the purchase-money to be paid out of the grain-duty fund.—On the recommendation of the Markets Committee the plans for the new fruit and vegetable market at Smithfield, at an estimated cost of £115,000, have been approved; ten additional slaughter-houses and other works at the Foreign Cattle Market ordered to be built, at an expense of £25,000.—The Court of Common Council has resolved to contribute to the Hospital Sunday Fund, £105; to the Gentlewomen's Self-Help Institute, £52 10s.; the Thames Church Mission, £105; the Reparation Fund of St. George's, Southwark, £105; the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, £210; the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army, £105; and the Field-lane Ragged Schools and Refuges, £262 10s.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's curfew tolled the knell of the departing Session on Monday; but, ere we can follow "the ploughman homeward" on "his weary way," it is necessary to hark back to an exciting episode in the House of Commons. Passing reference could alone be made in the latest edition of this Journal last week to the very exceptional step taken by the Irish Home-Rule members on the evening of the 10th inst. The House was in Committee on the Army Discipline Bill, when Mr. Sullivan rose, and demanded that progress should be reported, in order that, with the Speaker in the chair, a question might be raised as to notes being taken in a side gallery by somebody who was not a member of the House. In measured tones and faultless language did Mr. Sullivan call attention to this implied fraction of a rule; and Mr. Callan was proceeding to enlarge on the alleged enormity of the offence when the Speaker interrupted him, and quietly explained that he had, for his own information, directed an officer of the House to make the notes in question to supplement the brief minutes ordinarily made of the business in Committee, the said notes being perfectly fair and impartial, and having no reference whatever to "particular members of the House." This last allusion was made to allay the suspicions of the Irish members, who sensitively deemed that they were subjected to more than their fair share of note-taking by the sweet little cherub who sat up aloft. But the passions of Mr. Parnell and Mr. O'Connor Power, once roused, were not to be instantly appeased by this simple explanation, nor by the Speaker's prompt return to his deserted dinner. Their insatiable appetite for controversy even led them to the length of impugning the conduct of the Speaker, although Sir Stafford Northcote and the Marquis of Hartington united in urging that notice should be given of so unusual a step. Confusion was later rendered worse confounded by Mr. Gray's espial of the obnoxious young gentleman again taking notes, and—though the note-taker wore nothing red in his attire—his excited motion that progress should once more be reported. It was not until the succeeding (Friday's) sitting that the question was brought to an issue. The Speaker at the outset said he had not the slightest objection to the minutes complained of being laid on the table. Mr. Parnell, not to be deterred by this concession, forthwith moved a formal resolution, the gist of which was that the taking of notes in a side gallery by a non-member was a breach of the privileges of the House. The discussion was even lifted to the rank of a full-dress debate by the participation in it of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Marquis of Hartington, and Mr. Gladstone; and the inevitable result was realised, the Speaker being deservedly praised with genuine warmth for his unfailing courtesy and impartiality in the chair, and the motion being negatived by the considerable majority of 392—421 against 29. Nevertheless, in the evening sitting Mr. Gray once more raised the same issue, but was also placed in a minority—292 to 24; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer's amendment justifying and supporting the Speaker in his action was at length carried amid loud cheers. The effect of this protracted debate was to delay, singularly enough, an Irish motion—The O'Connor Don's motion calling on the Government to increase the facilities for training teachers in Ireland. This was eventually rejected by 64 to 48 votes; but Mr. Lowther promised a Ministerial plan for bringing about the desired object.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer on Monday announced that time would not admit of the Government proceeding with the Criminal Code Bill, the Patents for Inventions Bill, the County Boards Bill and the Irish Grand Jury Bill, and the Rivers Conservancy Bill; and, to facilitate the transaction of the important business that was left, the Leader of the House moved that Government orders should have priority on Tuesdays and Wednesdays for the rest of the Session. Sir Robert Peel seized the opportunity of pouring a heavy flank fire into the Ministry, and, pungently animadverting on the incompetency with which the campaign in Zululand had been conducted, emphatically claimed a night for a fresh debate on the South African difficulty. This unexpected attack was warmly deprecated both by Colonel Stanley and the Marquis of Hartington, the latter of whom elicited a protest from Sir Robert Peel by remarking that "the right hon. Baronet is about the most irregular member of this House." Ultimately the Chancellor of the Exchequer's motion was agreed to. The Earl of Yarmouth, Comptroller of the Queen's Household, having brought up her Majesty's gracious compliance with the request that a Royal Commission should be appointed to consider, with the view of remedying, the depression in Agriculture, the House spent the remainder of the evening in Committee on the Army Bill.

Tuesday saw two noteworthy events—Lord Hartington's reconciliation with Mr. Chamberlain by taking up a strong stand against the continuance of Flogging in the Army; and the virtual passage of the Army Bill through Committee. Sir George Campbell had moved the adoption of a clause directing that a soldier found guilty of insubordination should be entered on a "bad list," and that only men whose names appeared on this list should be liable to corporal punishment. But the Marquis of Hartington, considering this compromise would be unsatisfactory, and seeing it was clear the Government had no clear conviction of the imperative necessity of retaining the punishment, at last brought himself to speak out decidedly against the custom of flogging. The solution of the difficulty recommended by the Leader of the Opposition was the adoption of a preamble to this effect:—"Whereas it is expedient that corporal punishment should no longer be in use except in cases where the punishment of death would be actually inflicted unless corporal punishment is inflicted in lieu thereof." But Colonel Stanley and the Chancellor of the Exchequer would not countenance this concession; and, at the suggestion of Mr. Gladstone, the long-debated question was postponed until the report, in order that the matter might be "fought out" for the last time this Session. Thereafter, Sir G. Campbell's amendment having been negatived, the remaining clauses were carried, and hon. members who tarried until the small hours doubtlessly experienced a feeling of relief when the measure, as amended, was ordered to be reported.

In the House of Lords, "least said soonest mended" seems to have been the order of the day. There was a sitting of less than two hours' duration on the 10th inst., and the formidable assemblage of spiritual Lords, and goodly gathering of peers generally, were regaled with the breezy eloquence of Lord Kimberley and Lord Aberdare in opposition to, and of Lord Cranbrook in defence of, the Public Health Act Amendment Bill, which aims by a side-wind to settle one part of the Burials Question. The Bishop of Peterborough likewise aired his oratory on this measure, which was forced into Committee by 117 to 69 votes, and the clauses of which were agreed to. The next evening the House sat for an hour longer, and the Premier declined to accede to the Archbishop of York's application that the "visitors" of cathedrals should be added to the Royal Commission on Cathedrals. The Marquis of Huntly raised a question relating to the Mar Peerage, which both the Lord Chancellor and Lord Selborne affirmed belonged to the Earl of Mar and Kellie; and the Irish University Bill passed through Committee, in spite of the adverse motion of Lord Oranmore and Browne. On Monday the Marquis of Salisbury shone in a new light by paying Earl Granville a compliment on his successful persuasion of the Sultan of Zanzibar to suppress slavery; but had recourse to his ironical vein again when he endeavoured to calm the fears of Lord Stratheden and Campbell as to the obstacles which stood in the way of carrying out the Berlin Treaty. The Report of the Irish University Bill was then agreed to, after a few noble Lords had pointed out the inadequateness of the measure, in their opinion. On Tuesday Lord Truro's Cruelty to Animals Bill was negatived; and the Public Health Act Amendment Bill and the Irish University Bill were read the third time and passed, the Earl of Beaconsfield, with regard to the latter measure, assuring the House that he was in ignorance of any negotiations with Roman Catholic dignitaries respecting the measure.

On Wednesday the Attorney-General moved the second reading of the Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer received with favour a suggestion that the measure should be referred to a Select Committee, but in the end the Bill was "talked out," Mr. Parnell being the last speaker in possession of the House.

On Thursday noble Lords found so little to interest them in the Upper Chamber that a fair representative body of them fully occupied the Peers' Gallery of the House of Commons to hear the opening of the debate on Flogging. Numerous were the questions which had to be answered, but few were of Imperial moment. The Chancellor of the Exchequer hoped to be able to present the Zulu War Estimate before the end of the month, promised a vote of thanks to the troops engaged in the Afghan War, informed Mr. Grant Duff that it would be optional to anyone to raise a debate on the latter war, but could not hold forth to the Marquis of Hartington the hope that the Government would volunteer any statement in relation to it. Opposition cheers greeted Mr. Charles Tennant when he approached the table and took the oaths as the new Liberal member for Glasgow. Soon after, the noble Lord the Leader of the Opposition, before the Army Discipline Bill could be considered as amended, rose to move—

That no bill for the discipline and regulation of the Army will be satisfactory to the House which provides for the permanent retention of corpora punishment for military offences.

The protracted and hearty nature of the cheering with which Lord Hartington was received by the Opposition may be said to have testified to the thorough reunion of Liberal members on this subject. The noble Lord spoke with marked energy, and retorted heavily on Lord Cranbrook for declaring at an after-dinner speech the previous night that this was a Party move. Suggesting by implication that the noble Lord who had spoken in that largest of glass houses, the Crystal Palace, should have been the last to throw stones, the Leader of the Opposition gave point to his criticism by asking—what was the recent Conservative meeting at the Foreign Office on this question but a Party move? He based his motion for the surrender of the "cat" on the lukewarm advocacy of the lash by the military authorities of the House, and by distinguished officers; and it was to be noted that during the noble Lord's earnest argument against corporal punishment, Mr. Hopwood (who initiated the discussion weeks ago as a kind of forlorn hope) complacently stroked his luxuriant beard, as who should say, "I knew my time would come at last!" Though pitched in too high a key at starting, the speech of Colonel Stanley was an able and firm argument in favour of the retention of the punishment of the lash in its considerably modified form as a necessary means of ensuring discipline in time of war. If the amendment were carried, it would be fatal to the bill. If punishment by "the cat" were abolished, punishment by the bullet would be more frequent. Mr. Gladstone followed the Secretary for War in an eloquent denunciation of the continued use of "the cat;" and when Lord Sandon rose the House speedily dispersed to dinner.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Sir Walter Riddell has retired from the judgeship of the Whitechapel County Court.

Mr. F. Goulburn Walpole has been appointed assistant-secretary of H.M. Customs.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress will entertain her Majesty's Ministers at dinner at the Mansion House on Aug. 6.

The Lords Justices in the Court of Appeal on Tuesday decided that the Princess Alice was alone to blame for the collision with the Bywell Castle in September, which resulted in so lamentable a loss of life.

Another drinking-fountain was erected at the East-End on Monday. The site is the triangular space forming the junction of the Minories, Little Tower-hill, and Postern-row; and the structure, which is of Aberdeen granite, was erected by the Metropolitan Drinking Fountains Association.

A numerously-attended meeting was held last Sunday in Hyde Park, at which resolutions were passed strongly condemning the use of the lash as an instrument of punishment and adopting a petition to Parliament praying for its abolition. A gathering for a like purpose took place on Clerkenwell-green.

A noticeable feature—and, we believe, a novel one as regards hospital construction—in the new extension building of Brompton Hospital, of which the Prince of Wales laid the foundation-stone on Thursday, is the location of the kitchen at the top of the building. The object is, of course, to avoid the cooking smells which at times pervade all houses.

Dr. Samuel Kinns, Principal of the College, Highbury New Park, gave on Wednesday afternoon a lecture in the Assyrian Galleries of the British Museum, explanatory of the manners, customs, warfare, architecture, religion, &c., of that ancient people, illustrating his observations by a reference to the various slabs and sculpture.

Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, M.P., has been elected a trustee of the funds and property of the Royal Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, City-road, in the room of the late Baron L. N. de Rothschild, who was one of the trustees from 1842 to the time of his death. Colonel Makins, M.P., has also been elected a trustee, vice the late Mr. Seymour Teulon.

At the annual general meeting of the Law Incorporated Society, held yesterday week, the society elected Mr. Nathaniel Tertius Lawrence, of No. 6, New-square, Lincoln's Inn, president; Mr. John Moxon Clabon, of No. 21, Great George-street, Westminster, vice-president; and Mr. Richard Mills, of No. 1, Gray's Inn-square, and Mr. Richard Pennington, of No. 6, New-square, Lincoln's Inn, as members of the council.

Mrs. Gladstone yesterday week opened a home for young women engaged in business. The lease of a house, 11, Red Lion-square, Holborn, has been obtained by "The Girls' Friendly Society," and it is intended to fit up the rooms for the accommodation of twenty-five young women, at prices varying according to the comforts offered to the inmates; the object of the society, as the Rev. W. T. Thornhill Webber, Rector of St. John's, Holborn, explained in opening the proceedings, being to provide comfortable, healthy lodgings at a rate which should make the home self-supporting.

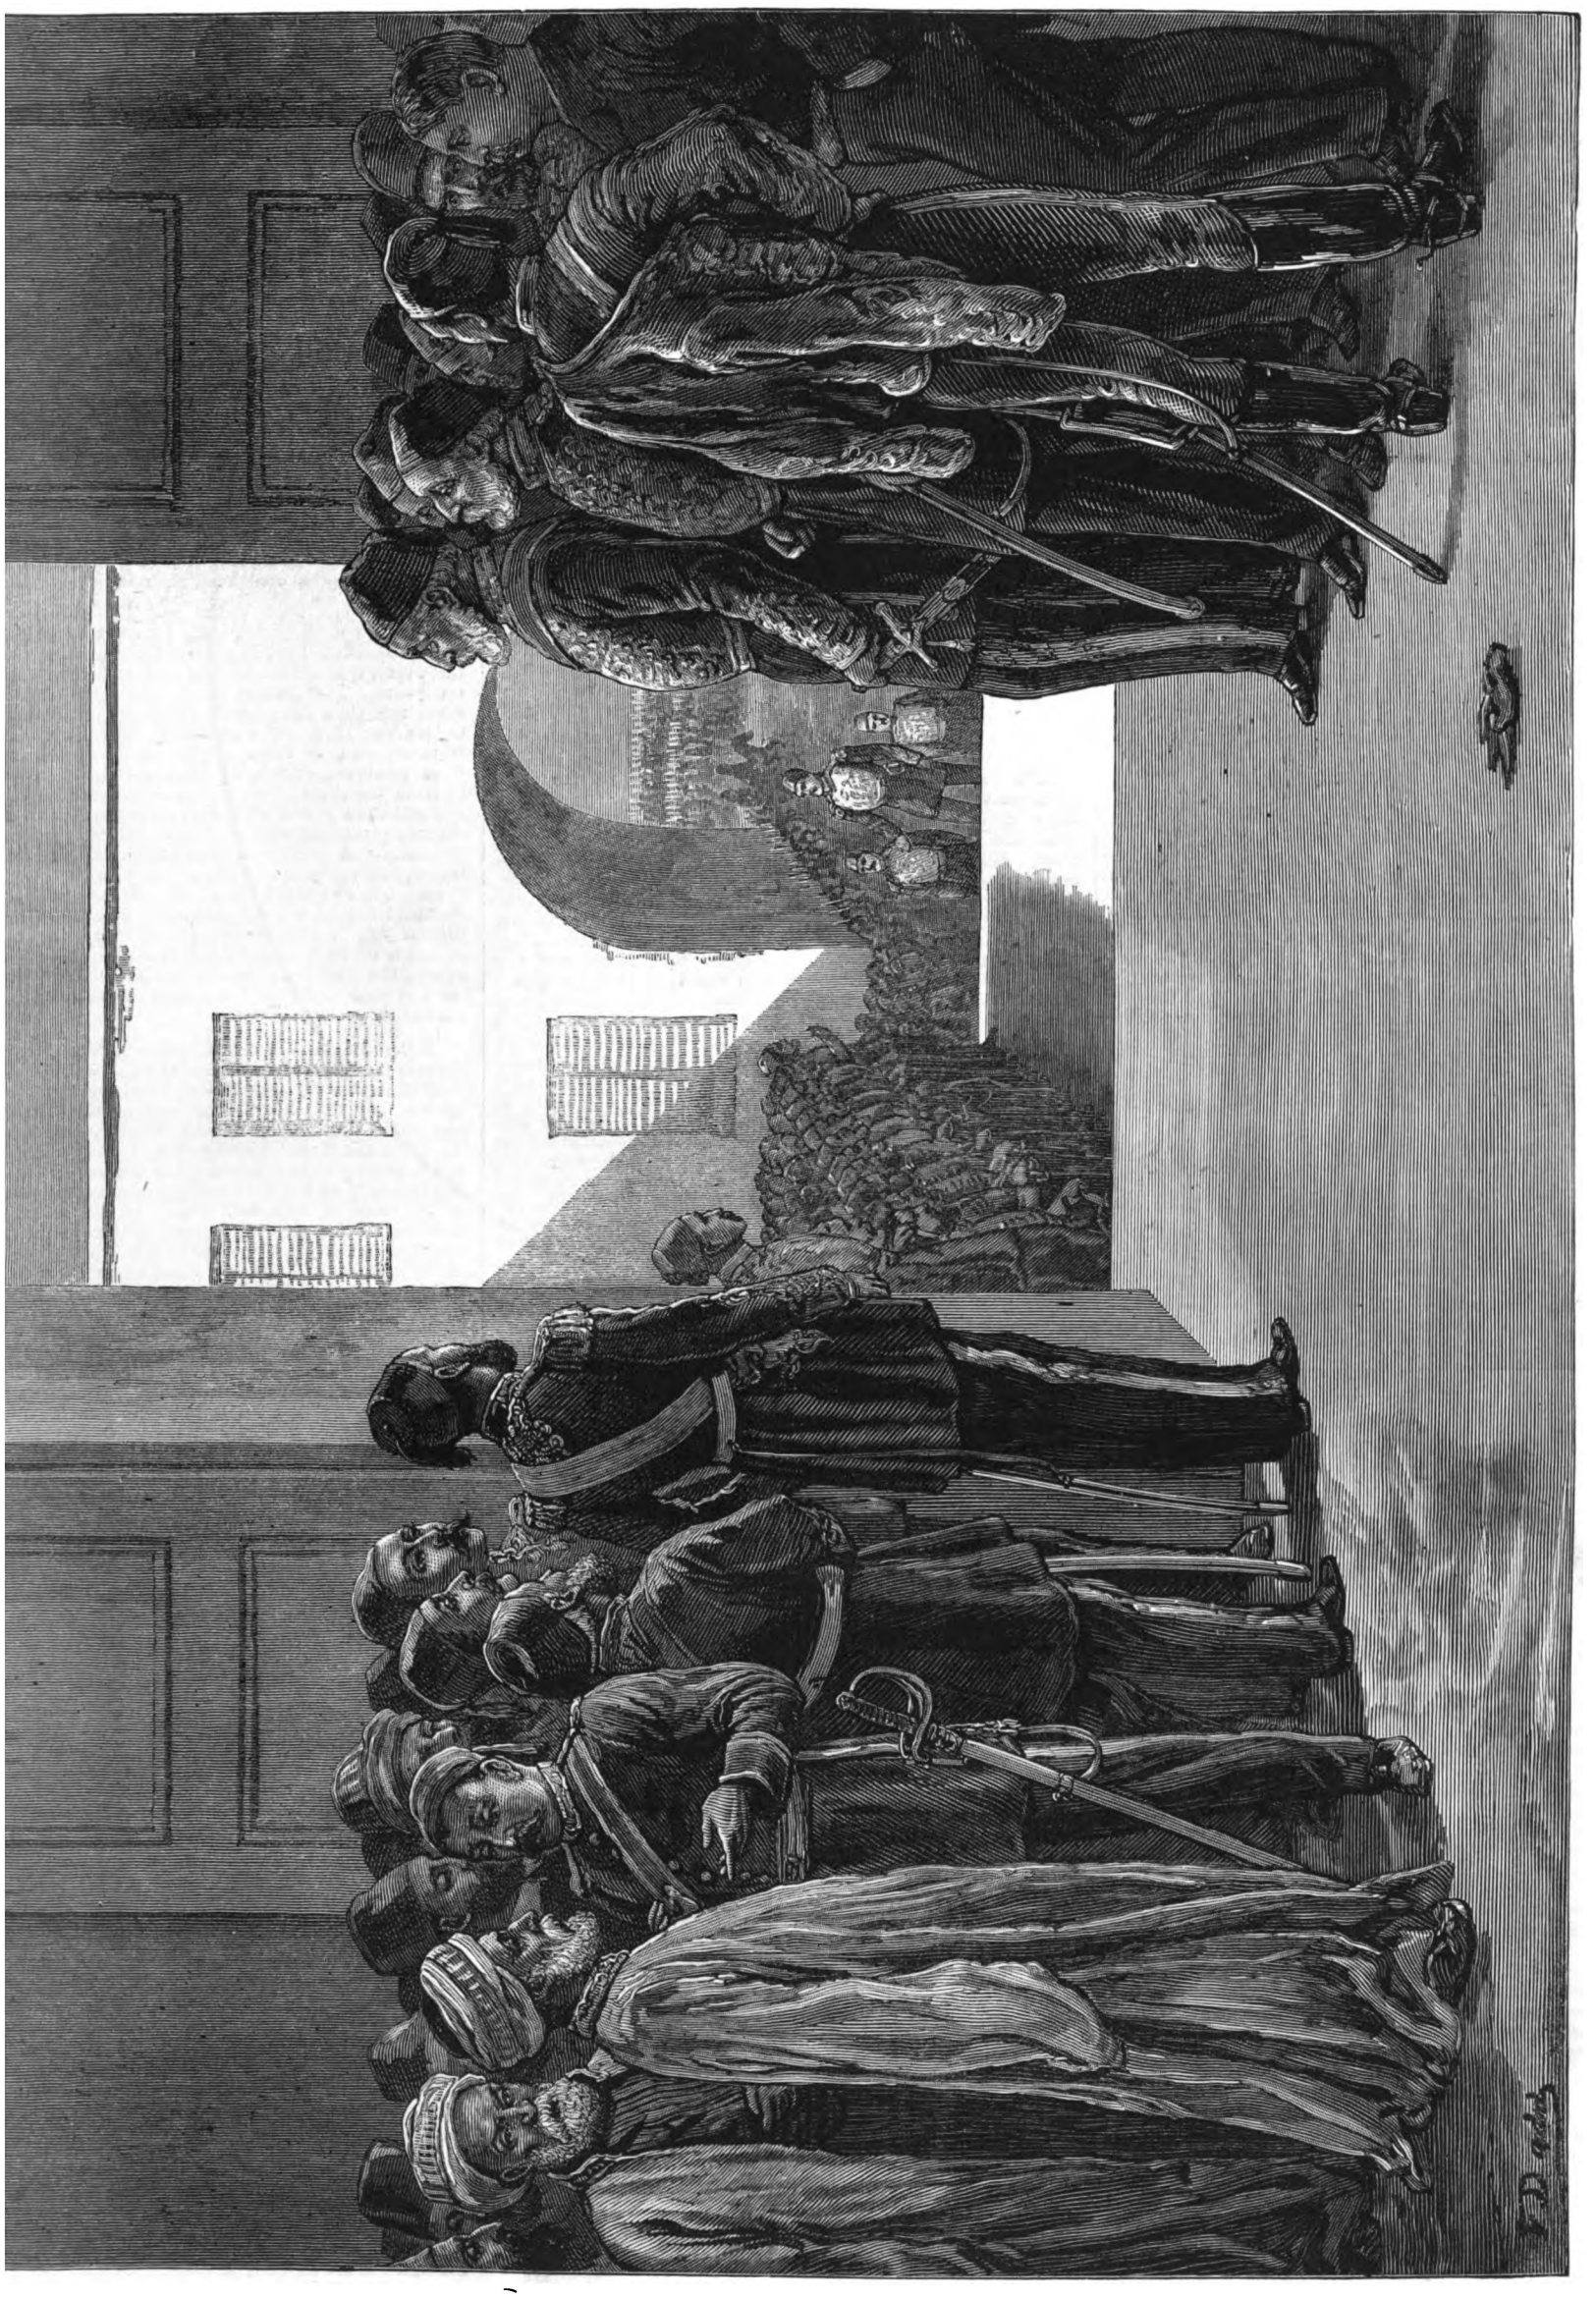
On Tuesday the Chancellor of the Exchequer received a deputation, which presented a resolution, passed at a meeting held at St Bartholomew's Hospital, protesting against the proposal in a bill now before Parliament to charge a duty of 1 per cent on the gross income of charities, as a contribution towards the expenses of the Charity Commissioners. In replying, Sir Stafford Northcote pointed out that the proposal was a much fairer one than any that had yet been made to meet the cost of the Charity Commission.

The 46th Middlesex was inspected last Saturday in Regent's Park by Colonel Logan, C.B. Lieutenant-Colonel Routledge was in command, and 718 of all ranks were present, only six men being absent without leave. The Inspecting Officer was very much pleased with the appearance and efficiency of the corps, and complimented the Commanding Officer on the state of the regiment. The Honorary Colonel, Sir Charles Russell, V.C., addressed the battalion on the conclusion of the inspection. Major-General Cameron, C.B., to whose brigade the regiment was attached when at Aldershott a fortnight ago, was on the ground as a spectator.

Lord Beaconsfield distributed last Saturday the gold and silver medals awarded to the exhibitors at the Westminster Industrial Exhibition. In an address upon the uses and advantages of such exhibitions, his Lordship expressed his pleasure at being called upon to distribute the prizes, and said he regretted that there were so few schools of design in this country, and no institutions for giving education in useful arts. His Lordship was obliged to leave on account of a pressing appointment before the conclusion of the ceremony, and Lord Hatherley gave away the bronze medals. The Dean of Westminster, Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Sir C. Forster, M.P., and Canon Farrar were also present. A letter was read from the Speaker, who is a vice-president, regretting that he was unable to be present owing to the pressure of public affairs and expressing his continued interest in the exhibition.

There were 2604 births and 1179 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 248, whereas the deaths were 326 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes fell to a lower rate than has prevailed in any week since the middle of September, 1876. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 67 from measles, 38 from scarlet fever, 11 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 12 from different forms of fever, and 29 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 197 deaths were referred, against 225 and 198 in the two preceding weeks. These 197 deaths were 176 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years, and were equal to an annual rate of 2·8 per 1000. In Greater London 3146 births and 1417 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 56 deg., and 6·4 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 16·9 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 114 hours; the recorded duration of sunshine was therefore equal to 15 per cent of its possible duration.

A Board School fête took place at the Crystal Palace last Saturday. The chief event of the day was the distribution by Earl Granville of 4000 Bibles, Testaments, concordances, and atlases, bought with the interest of the fund placed at the disposal of the London School Board by Mr. Francis Peek and the Religious Tract Society—this society contributing £5000, and engaging in addition to allow interest on the whole amount in perpetuity at five per cent per annum, thus securing prizes to the value of £500 each year. In the afternoon a trained children's choir gave a concert in the centre transept. Earl Granville presided, supported by Mr. Francis Peek, the founder of the scheme, and the Rev. John Rogers, vice-chairman of the London School Board, Mr. Stevenson, M.P., the Hon. Lyulph Stanley, Mr. Robert Browning, and others. Lord Granville, during an interval of the performances, addressed the assembly, after which Dr. Manning, on behalf of the Religious Tract Society, presented his Lordship with a copy of the Bible. Mr. Francis Peek stepped forward on the dais and said he was extremely sorry that on this anniversary of the prize-giving they were deprived of the presence of the esteemed chairman of the Board, who was absent in Ireland on the terrible and afflicting errand of searching for his youngest son, who it was feared had been drowned on one of the lakes.



MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Novello's Collection of Trios, Quartets, &c., for Female Voices." (Novello, Ewer, and Co., Berners-street.) We have previously referred to this work in notices of detached numbers, and have now to record the publication of three complete volumes, the contents of which offer a rich store of part-music of various styles and schools, "from gay to grave, from lively to severe." The first volume contains eighteen pieces by Franz Schubert, H. Smart, E. H. Thorne, and J. L. Hatton. The second volume comprises twenty-four compositions, to which are appended the names of Mendelssohn, Spohr, Hiller, Gounod, Wagner, Sterndale Bennett, Sir H. R. Bishop, H. Smart, and J. L. Hatton; the contents of volume three numbering twenty-three pieces, by Cherubini, Mendelssohn, Sir M. Costa, Franz Abt, C. Reinthaler, Dr. Walmisley, H. Leslie, G. Roberti, O. Werman, and B. L. Selby. The work will be especially welcome in the domestic circle, being calculated to suit all tastes, and offering an ample choice of pieces both in the sacred and the secular styles, the price being so moderate as to place it within the reach of all purchasers.

"Henselt Album," Vol. 1 (Enoch and Sons), is a selection of pieces (edited by Mr. Berthold Tours) by one of the best of living composers, for the pianoforte. Belonging to the romantic school of Chopin, Henselt's music has also an individuality of style which removes it from all charge of imitation. Full of beautiful melody and refined thought, it is calculated to improve the executive powers as well as the taste of the player. The collection here offered contains twelve of the most striking of Henselt's productions, in various forms, and is wondrously cheap at the price of eighteenpence. The same publishers have also brought out a cheap edition of the characteristic "Albumblätter" of Theodor Kirchner, a living composer who has caught much of the spirit of Robert Schumann's music. "Happier days in Store," by Ciro Pinsuti, has a well-defined melody, of pleasing and expressive character, and lying within a moderate compass of voice. "Parted hearts," by C. A. Ranken, is also a pleasing song in a melodious and sentimental style. These are likewise issued by Messrs. Enoch.

Messrs. Metzler and Co. have brought out a neat and inexpensive edition of M. Bizet's "Carmen," the great success of which has been recorded by us in noticing its performances both in the Italian and the English versions, given at Her Majesty's Theatre. The new edition now referred to is, with the English text, skilfully adapted by Mr. Henry Hersee for the production of the opera by the Carl Rosa Company in February last.

THE REVOLUTION IN EGYPT: RECEPTION OF TEWFIK PASHA AT THE CITADEL OF CAIRO.

Digitized by Google

THE LATE COUNTESS WALDEGRAVE.

THE REVOLUTION IN EGYPT.

The enforced abdication of Ismail Pasha, Khedive of Egypt, by order of the Sultan at the urgent demand of several European Powers, is now an affair of the past; and he has been quietly superseded by his son, Tewfik Pasha, who was hailed as the new Khedive by the Government officials, the Mohammedan ecclesiastics, and representatives of foreign nations at Cairo, on Thursday, the 26th ult. Our Correspondent, Mr. George, of Cairo, furnishes a sketch of the scene at the Citadel, between five and six of the afternoon that day, when the formal reception was held by Tewfik Pasha.

The fact of this change of Government being definitely accomplished, though various rumours had prevailed for many days, was not generally known for certain at Cairo till after mid-day of the 26th. It was signified to all ears in that city by the sound of a grand salute of 101 guns from the Citadel batteries, after which official invitations to appear at the ceremony, at five o'clock, which is ten o'clock for the Moslems, were sent out to all persons of sufficient rank and importance. But the great news very soon became public throughout the whole population, some of whom, indeed, were scarcely able to believe or understand the fact, since the late Khedive had not yet personally taken his departure. To the Oriental mind, it is difficult to conceive the deposition of a ruler, whom the people are accustomed to imagine omnipotent until the "Effendina" or "Lordship" ceases to be present in his known bodily form amongst them.

The circumstances which brought about this revolution in Egypt are sufficiently notorious. It is only needful to say that when Prince Tewfik received his instructions from the Porte to assume the conduct of affairs here, he presented himself to his father, and, after a very affecting interview, proceeded to take up his position in a becoming manner. A considerable number of officials and others representing the native and European communities, presented themselves at the Abdine Palace to express sympathy with the late Khedive, who was visibly much affected. He spoke with much candour on the state of affairs, and the causes that had led to a resistance on his part that would never have obtained such a character but for certain of his advisers. The late Khedive transferred at once all the machinery of his office to his son, with such advice as at the time seemed suitable.

His Highness Prince Tewfik Pasha proceeded to the Citadel about 5.30 p.m., where he was received by the Ministers of State, the Sheik ul Islam, and the Ulemas; the heads of the Coptic, Armenian, Greek, and other Churches; the heads of all the public administrations, and a large assemblage of natives and Europeans. The Diplomatic Body had a separate reception. The customary Viceregal honours were paid to Prince Tewfik, and he read to the Diplomatic and Ecclesiastical bodies the telegraphic despatch he had received from the Porte, in anticipation of the firman of the Sultan.

The late Khedive, Ismail Pasha, left Cairo on the 30th ult. by special train for Alexandria to embark on board his yacht, the Mahroussa, for Naples. His Highness was treated with as much respect as if he had been still the ruler. Every mark of distinction and sympathy was shown him; the streets leading to the railway were lined with troops, and their bands played the National Air as the cortége passed. The railway station was crowded with people representing largely the native as well as the European elements. The departing Khedive on entering his old saloon carriage turned and addressed the crowds around him in a few words broken by intense emotion, which was fully participated in by thousands. Besides the members of his family and some of the principal grandees, he was accompanied by General Marriott, the President of the Railway Administration.

Our correspondent's sketch represents the assemblage of grandees, ecclesiastics, officials, and members of the various nationalities at the reception on the 26th, waiting in the ante-room of the palace, at the citadel of Cairo, for the arrival of his Highness Prince Tewfik Pasha, who can be seen ascending the stairs in the main court.

FACSIMILE OF A SKETCH BY THE LATE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

THE LATE COUNTESS WALDEGRAVE.

The Obituary in this Journal last week recorded the death of a lady whose social accomplishments, and the wide circle of her personal acquaintance in the upper ranks of society, have made her almost a public character. The Right Hon. Frances, Dowager Countess Waldegrave, Baroness Carlingford, was the wife successively of Mr. John James Waldegrave, a large landed proprietor at Navestock, in Essex; of his relative, the seventh Earl Waldegrave; of Mr. George Granville Harcourt, M.P., of Nuneham Courtenay; and of the Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue, created Baron Carlingford in 1874, some time Chief Secretary for Ireland. She therefore occupied, at various periods, in different social spheres, a position of great influence, which she had the talent and spirit to improve for the benefit of her contemporaries; and not only the Liberal party, but to a certain degree the general interest, felt the advantage of her presence, whether in town or country. Her residence at Strawberry Hill, Twickenham, was the seat of a graceful and genial hospitality, which she was admirably qualified to administer for the pleasure of frequent and numerous guests. She was born Frances Elizabeth Anne Braham, a daughter of one of the most famous English vocalists under the Georgian reigns.

NEW BOOKS.

Entertainment, and plenty of it, is to be found in the two large volumes entitled Sport in British Burmah, etc., by Lieutenant-Colonel Pollok (Chapman and Hall), but it is not entertainment made easy; it must be sought for diligently and patiently, even as the author pursued his game, but not with the painful accompaniments of his more dangerous researches. The fact is that the author, as he himself frankly confesses, has little or no literary skill, and has laid himself out to present a heap of interesting, amusing, important, and truthful facts, somewhat carelessly pitchforked together, rather than to witch his readers with fascinating penmanship, employed to dress up a meagre skeleton of truth in a voluminous and imposing integument of mostly fanciful, fictitious narrative. In his work, rough and ready as his mode of action, fiction has absolutely no part, imagination has no roosting-place. The helpful map is not forgotten, and there are coloured illustrations of a highly sensational and thrilling description. Index there is none, nor was it to be expected after what the author says by way of warning as to the crudeness of his work; and yet it is just the sort of publication which would be immensely improved by an index, so much more easily could the task of winnowing be performed. As regards the illustrations, they are calculated to create an impression of the author's jocularity, when he remarks, with respect to his own narrative: "If thrilling adventure or hairbreadth escapes are scarce, believe me it is because they are the exceptions and not the rule in Indian sport, when it is followed, as it ought to be, with due care." At any rate, one would conclude that he and his readers are likely to differ as to the definition of scarcity. His readers will probably think that he had what they would call a narrow escape when he "came right upon the bull," as in the adventure described at page 185 of the first volume; another, when a tigress fastened upon his elephant's trunk, as described at page 191 of the same volume; another, when a tiger once or twice "very nearly made good his charge," as described at page 120 of the second volume; and that these three cases, even if there were no others, would be regarded by ordinary people as plenty. But there are many more equally exciting incidents recorded as having occurred either to the author or to his friends, comrades, or attendants. It may be well to mention just two of his anecdotes by way of showing "the sort of man he is" and the caution with which his modest assertions must be received, when he tells us that there is "nothing in it," and that nobody must expect anything of a sensational character in the story he has to tell. "One night," he says, in his matter-of-fact way, "I was sleeping out in the open, and was awakened by feeling some brute gnawing away at my shoulder. This proved to be a mad jackal. Fortunately, my night-shirt intervened between his teeth and my flesh, and thus my escape from the terrible consequences." He does not say how he knew that the jackal was mad, but he appears to have no doubt about it; and the bare idea of the situation is enough to give imaginative readers the nightmare for the rest of their natural lives. To awake and find even a sane jackal, if there be such a creature, gnawing away at one's shoulder might be sufficient to temporarily unseat one's reason. Let us now present a short story about a leopard, premising that, if the author's deprecatory expressions were to be taken without any modification, the scene ought to be regarded as "nothing particular." We read that "a Sepoy in passing a bush, in the very midst of which the elephants had been beating, trod on the leopard's tail, so snugly was it hidden, and in one second it sprang on the man's shoulders, biting his arm, and clawing him about the head. The Ghoorkas dropped their rifles, and with their kookries or knives, without which no Ghoorka ever moves, they hacked the leopard almost to pieces on the man." Surely the spectacle suggested is as sensational and thrilling as anything represented, in a different phase of life and death, by M. Zola, the fashionable naturalist. The author takes the opportunity of remarking, and it may not be out of place just now to publish abroad his remark, that "these Ghoorkas are certainly a fine race; there are no better soldiers in the world—and when properly led they are fully equal to Europeans." It is not only as a sportsman, in pursuit of more or less dangerous game, but also as a soldier, in the discharge of onerous duty, that the author has a tale to tell of adventure and peril. He must have had a pleasant time of it, for instance, when he was sent at his own request to the Cocos Lighthouse works, his "sole companions being twenty-four murderers." This was in 1864, and it is no wonder that he says, "I shall never forget my first night here." For "as soon as the sun had gone down and the moon risen, thousands upon thousands of rats, in size equal to a bandicoot, appeared. They did not seem to fear anything, and I did not like their appearance at all, and did all I could to frighten away; but they speedily reappeared, and kept me awake all night rattling my tins about and devouring the rice and grain I had brought with me. Thinking to outwit them, I hung these bags well off the ground, on to branches of trees; but these rats ran up the trunks of the trees, and down the ropes, and devoured everything in the shape of grain or biscuits they could get at, and we were in fear of starving through their depredations." But Nemesis overtook those rats; for the four-and-twenty murderers fell upon them and devoured them, "saying they were very sweet." Surely the whole picture resembles a vision conjured up by the ghastly fancy of Edgar Poe; a solitary officer in charge of twenty-four murderers, a host of rats eating up their provisions, and the murderers eating up the rats. The author, in connection with this period, makes the following charge of heartlessness: "Vessels passed us daily, most of them American ones under German flags, for it was the days of the Civil War, when the one Southern vessel swept the commerce and the fleet of the boasting North off the face of the ocean. They were almost within hailing distance, and though I fired guns, rockets, blue-lights, and hung up signals 'that we were starving,' in accordance with Marryatt's code, not one of them took the least notice of us. We could see them watching us with their telescopes, and though our distress must have been known to them, not only did they take no heed themselves, but did not report it at Rangoon, as they were obliged to do by the universal law of nations." Of course, the author's bias is very evident; we are to infer that the chivalrous, slave-driving Southerners would have behaved very differently. To give a fair notion of the wonderful variety and interest of the subjects handled in these really valuable volumes, which contain the results of twenty years' experience, and which are most graphically illustrated, one can hardly do better than borrow from the titlepage, setting forth that the author deals with "sport in British Burmah, Assam, and the Cassyah and Jyntiah hills," and furnishes "notes of sport in the hilly districts of the northern division, Madras Presidency, indicating the best localities in those countries for sport, with natural history, notes, illustrations of the people, scenery, and game, together with maps to guide the traveller or sportsman, and hints on weapons, fishing-tackle, &c., best suited for killing game met with in those provinces." Lapse of time may have to some extent diminished the value of the information, but a great deal of it will be as acceptable as ever it would have been; and from the point of view of mere entertainment the book is as fresh as a new-laid egg.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson will probably shake his head over Facts about Champagne and other Sparkling Wines, by Henry Vizetelly (Ward, Lock, and Co.), for not only is the title sufficient of itself to create a thirst after vinous liquors and to banish any passing tendency towards taking the pledge, but the volume, with its hundred or more engravings, illustrative and ornamental, is so written, with its mixture of interesting information and pleasant anecdote, as to arouse in its readers a love rather than a horror of the subject, and to set them pondering upon the propriety and the possibility of straightway tasting every known variety of the sparkling cup which cheers, and, sad to say, inebriates. Seldom is it that the ridiculously small sum of eighteenpence, as Mr. Montague Tigg would have said, can purchase so much enlightenment combined with so much entertainment, resulting from effective co-operation between nimble pen and graphic pencil. The author, who writes with all the weight, experience, and trustworthiness of an accredited "wine juror," appears to have gone to the very best sources of knowledge, to have studied the grape upon its native soil, to have been admitted to the privacy of both the greater and the lesser lights among vine-growers and wine merchants, and to have spared neither his palate nor his stomach in the prosecution of his personal investigations. He has collected, with an appearance of extraordinary care and diligence, an astounding amount of instructive as well as amusing details; and so very large are the figures with which he sometimes deals that his readers are not unlikely to do him the gross injustice, undoubtedly, of thinking that his assiduous exertions in pursuit of vinous matters may have resulted now and then in producing that well known transitory faculty of seeing double. However that may be, his book will, no doubt, be generally attractive, to the total abstainer as well as to the wine-bibber, to the trader as well as to the consumer, to the expert as well as to the disciple; and it will be especially acceptable to that large class of persons who, at dinner-parties or at the restaurant, like to dazzle their neighbours and the waiters with a display of connoisseurship in wine and of acquaintance with vintages: them it will enable literally to "speak like a book." And here it may be remarked that some erroneous impressions are likely to be removed by the author, particularly as regards the wine now boldly proclaimed as "sparkling Saumur." Of course we have most of us known for a long time past that it was palmed off during many years upon the English public, "under the auspices of mythical Dukes and Counts," as coming from Ay, Bouzy, Châlons, Epernay, Reims, and so on, instead of from the province of Anjou and the banks of the Loire, but the general impression has surely been that it does possess rather too much of that "excessive lightness" which the author denies to it, and that it will not "keep." The author, on the contrary, says that "it has only to be kept for a few years, instead of being drunk shortly after its arrival from the wine-merchant, for its quality to become greatly improved and its intrinsic value to be considerably enhanced," and that he has "drunk sparkling saumur that had been in bottle for nearly twenty years, and found the wine not only remarkably delicate, but, singular to say, with plenty of effervescence." How, then, does it happen almost invariably to be "drunk shortly after its arrival?" Most probably from a misapprehension which saumur-drinkers have to thank the author for removing. The most interesting portions of the book, so far as the ordinary reader is concerned, are those, of course, which relate to the accidental discovery of sparkling champagne, to the history of the great firms, such as that of the late widow Cliequot-Ponsardin and that of Moët and Chandon—who to meet the exigencies of the times, have lately introduced a high class dry wine, under the title of Brut Impérial—to changes of taste among champagne-drinkers, to the properties upon which the effervescence of wines depends, to the great personages who have been addicted to champagne and its like in ebullience, to the why and how the Germans "transformed the acidulous wines of the Rhine into what we term sparkling hocks," and to similar questions. On all such points, as well as on many others, the author is liberally and most pleasantly communicative. Not much is said about the sparkling wines of Italy, but with what is said everybody is pretty sure to agree who is tolerably familiar with the taste of "Asti spumante" and other "sparkling hair-oil," and is in a position to endorse the author's statement that "numerous attempts have been made, although on the whole with but indifferent success, to produce a good sparkling wine" in Italy. As for the magic which the author ascribes to champagne, the enthusiasm with which he sings its praises, and the number of times he apparently expects it to go round, after a preparatory glass or two of other wines, he must be left to be dealt with by Sir W. Lawson, who may be expected to include the little work in his own private "Index Expurgatorius."

A labourer ploughing in a field at Southwick, on Lord Westmoreland's estate, turned up an earthen jar, which broke in pieces, disclosing ninety-one silver Roman coins, including some of Vespasian, Hadrian, Nerva, and Antoninus.

OUT WITH THE OTTER-HOUNDS.

If there is one thing pleasanter than another to those who delight in the joys of the hunting-field, it is when accident, or residence, places them, in the blank season, within easy reach of the haunts of the otter, as there is then a chance that "the dreary time," as it is called from its freedom from sport, from April till September, will be occasionally enlivened by the musical bell-notes of the bow-legged hounds.

Many who have followed the fox for years, have never raced after the otter, as, unlike the fox, always to be met with where woods abound, he but frequents certain streams; therefore, unless a man is within reach of those rivers, he may hunt all his life, yet not know otter; and this was my own case until twelve months ago, when, as I was staying for a while in the charming neighbourhood of the Upper Teme, I had the good fortune, at last, to get out with the otter-hounds; and I need not say I enjoyed it, as the newness of the scene and the freshness of the country added materially to the excitement of the chase. This, of course, from the nature of it, takes place on foot, and in the water; the few who are mounted being those only who prefer a horse to a pole for the jumping, in their efforts to keep with hounds. They are the lookers-on, but the pole-men are the workers.

The meet was fixed for nine, as the hounds had to come some distance, and a good morning was expected, as two pairs of otters had been seen there, and half-eaten fish had been found upon the banks. Time was when, meeting at three, before sunrise, the pack would have their first kill as the lark soared; but nowadays eight is the earliest for otter-hounds, so the freshest of the morning is thus missed. But the alteration of the hour, and the abandonment of the otter-spear, as being a cruel and unfair practice, gives the ladies a chance now to turn out in the meadows, and to brush the hawthorn blossoms from the boughs; as in boots and gaiters, and looped-up skirts, they try to emulate the gentlemen in negotiating the fences; or at least in scrambling over them, should no stile or gate be handy by the river.

Duly dressed for the occasion—that is, with flannel under and outer garments, and strong nailed boots—we set out for the meet; my friend and I, and the rest of our party, being each provided with a leaping-pole, a good stout ash one, twelve feet long, that would suffice to bear our weight; and after an enjoyable walk—for it was the end of May, and a time of bloom—we reached the fixture, three miles up the river, and found a goodly company assembled, on horseback and on foot. It was a pretty scene; for the fields sloped down to the river, and woods rose from it to some steep green hills, which cut the blue sky with their close turf tops. The woodcutters were at work, too, with their teams and their timber-waggons, and we could see the breaks where the trees had fallen, and the smoke curling up from the fires, as we caught the cry of the jays and the doves and the pheasants, and the clank and the creak and the strain, and the noise of the men and the horses, as they tore away at the sticks to get them up out of the hollows. And as we stood there watching those sturdy teams, we could smell distinctly the sweet fresh odour of crushed leaves and hyacinths, which rose up where the trees had fallen, and which seemed to blend with the scent of the hawthorn hedges and the orchards that were budding into bloom, and with the orchis and the meadow-sweet and the cowslips that the ladies were gathering while waiting by the river for the hounds.

At length, as led horses are being walked about, and the gentlemen are amusing themselves with pole-work at the ditches, caw-caw goes a rook, and a woodpecker answers; and, looking beyond us where the river bends, we see a glimpse of colour through the osiers, and in a few minutes the huntsman and his two whips approach in their blue and scarlet, with fifteen couples of hounds and half a dozen terriers, the condition of the rough-haired grippers—some two-and-twenty-pound tough old dogs—doing credit to their gallant master, Major Mortimer, for—as is pointed out to me by my friend—they are strong-boned and even ones, long-backed, bow-legged, and deep-chested, with bell-like note, and many of them scarred, that told of old dog otters dying gamely.

All now is bustle, the ladies gathering up their skirts, and some of them being assisted into the saddle; while those of the gentlemen who have not to mount shoulder their poles and come up to the hounds. Then the pack spreads out; and, casting along by the willows, Coroner whimpers and stops, and Councillor and Commodore try to work it out with him. But the spraint is faint, and they make but little of it; till, getting forward into a rushy meadow, Stormer, who is a noted finder, scents the water; and as he and Prattler, Lucifer, and Labourer, dash away by the side of it, the seal is hit and the spraint is struck, and they then all take it up so lustily that the foot-people are distanced.

Amongst the mounted ones are the Squire's daughters, two rosy country girls; and as all is now excitement, they give the cobs their heads and join the great rush onwards. Ditches are jumped, fences flown, and stiles popped over, and whip-hand before the eyes is the order of the day, as ash and osier-beds are struggled through; the pole-people and the rest of the leapers taking the rails pluckily, and getting through a vast amount of work in a very little time in their strenuous endeavours to keep a good place down the meadows.

"Yelp, yelp, yelp," come the bell-notes as the bow-legs race on, full cry, by the water; Stormer leading. "Hark to Stormer," says the Major, "Stormer marks him! Good hound, Towler! Pilot, Coroner, Druid, good hounds! Hark to him, hark!" and as Stormer and Towler dash into the stream, Norval and Toiler follow them, when taking up the scent on the other side, "Yelp, yelp, yelp," come the notes again, as the rest of the hounds join them, and they carry it on splendidly as they race by the river, the gamest of the pole-people splashing through it after them—the water to their waists—with those on horseback; and as the two girls hit the ford with their cobs, and get over, too, they are in the seventh heaven of delight, as their respective steeds shake the drops off them, and bound up the bank, while the rest, racing and running down the meadows, shout with the joy of it.

But hounds soon turn and come back up stream, merrily and rapidly, for the otter has dived and distanced them. "Ho gaze, ho gaze!" cries the huntsman, as the otter vents and he spies him, and the noise increases; and as the hounds dip into the hollow where some old stubs lie, they set, bay deeply, and dash into the water—his holt is there. The proddlers with their poles now go to work, and the hounds tear away at the roots, and soon a splash is heard, and "Ho gaze!" is the cry again, for the otter has found another outlet, and is off down stream. But a holt is there, and he takes it.

"The rascal!" cries the Major. "We'll have the varmints, and we'll dig him out." So, spades and mattocks are brought and men rush into the water, and a vigorous stocking commences. But it is not until half an hour has elapsed, and three or four of the terriers have felt his teeth, that the otter consents to bolt. Then, as the hounds are held in hand to give him law, a long swim follows, and the bell-notes of the little pack again come cheerily. He turns, however, and dives under them, and they hunt his wash, and check till the bells on the water track him. A shout is heard, and up stream they come once more quickly and lustily; when, as the vents get more frequent, and the black nose shows oftener, they stop him each time he turns, and drive him to the shallows, where he stands and snarls, and then takes up a backwater.

The crowd pursue him with shouts, and he heads for the river again, grips a hound that pins him, and dives as the water colours; dives again, takes a long swim, and shows on the surface at his holt once more. Foiled, however, in his attempt by the men there—who have remained up to their hips in the water—he shows his teeth as they stop him, and dives under the stubs, and, passing under the hounds as they come up, gets the lead and keeps it; and on we race until we reach the mill, when we see he has slipped down the weir, for the pack, lengthening in their swim, are tumbling over it, hidden by foam and froth. Then, settling to it with a will when they get out of the rush of the river, they hunt him steadily until they drive him to the shingle, where he stands at bay.

They now surround him; but as he makes his teeth meet in each one that tackles him, they at last are glad to loose him, when another swim follows, and he gets under the bank, and then dodges into a drain, and there he sticks till he is bolted out, when, as the rest has given him breath, he soon makes headway; and again the folk go racing to where they think he'll come, while we in the water spread across, and keep a look out as we wade, as there are osier-beds there, and the river is bushed. Twice he tries the sides to find a holt, but fails, and the pack gains on him; and, after much diving and dodging, they once more tackle him, but as there is fight still in him he gets away up stream, and the racing and roaring become greater than ever, as the excitement is intense, for the finish is at hand, and all there hope to see it.

"Worry, worry!" cries the huntsman as he cheers on the hounds, for he is on the alert to tail the otter; and as they get alongside their prey they grab at him, but again and again does he shake them off each time he comes to the surface. But this constant tussle tells, and he is at last seized by Druid and held by Stormer, and he strives in vain to dive; and as there is a fierce struggle with the lot of them for precedence, Lucifer and Labourer dash at him, and they give him the grip. The rest come up, and they surround the huntsman; but he catches the otter by the tail and rescues him from the hounds, and as he flings him across a bough, and gives the "Death halloo!" the bow-legs bay in chorus. It was a dog-otter, and a fine one—just three-and-twenty pounds.

ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (trade-mark "Anti-Fa" registered) is the celebrated American Remedy for Corpulency.

Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave a me of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a ver corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is not a secret nostrum, but a compound, concentrated, and very superior fluid extract of Fucus Vesiculosus, a species of sea lichen, so much extolled by the French and other medical journals as the newly-discovered remedy for corpulency. There are several species of the Fucus generally found growing together upon the rocks, but the Vesiculosus is the only variety that has been found to possess the desired qualities. That used in the manufacture of Allan's Anti-Fat is selected and gathered at the proper seasons by an experienced botanist, and the extract made from it is carefully prepared by a skilful chemist, in a manner best calculated to retain the peculiar active properties of the plant. M. Dufrere, the celebrated French physician, says that most of the failures to obtain good results from the fluid extract of Fucus arise from the use of the wrong species of the plant, from which much of the extracts found with the apothecaries and chemists are made, or from improper treatment in manufacturing these extracts.

The Botanic Medicine Company of Buffalo and London were among the very first to engage in manufacturing extracts from Fucus, and they have spared no pains or expense to obtain the true Fucus Vesiculosus, and their long experience in preparing extracts has enabled them to make an article that fully represents the medicinal properties which are easily destroyed by the unskilful treatment of the chemists.

The Anti-Fat can therefore be relied upon to produce the most efficacious results.

In placing this remedy before the public as a positive cure for obesity, we do so knowing its ability to cure, as attested by hundreds of testimonials, of which the following are samples:

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9 lbs. in four weeks.

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ANDLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W.
June 2, 18.9.

To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.

"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine (Anti-Fat) both in America and this country. Through its use I can train down at command, losing on an average 5 pounds per week.

"Yours respectfully, HARRY BRAHAM."

A Lancashire Lady writes, under date of May 5, 1879:—"Having been told by a very stout lady that your medicine (Anti-Fat) has done her a great deal of good, I should be obliged by your sending me a bottle."

"Porchester-terrace, Lancaster-gate, Hyde Park, W.

"Mrs. —— presents her compliments to the Manager of the Botanic Medicine Company, and begs to say that the six bottles of Anti-Fat, had on May 6, have produced a satisfactory result, and will be glad to have one dozen bottles sent by Parcel Delivery at once, for which she inclosed cheque for three pounds six shillings (6s.).—May 30, 1879."

Since writing our first little circular treatise upon the subject of Corpulency, many hundreds of cases have come under our personal observation, and in all good results have followed the use of the Anti-Fat. In no case has any unpleasant or injurious effect been produced. Instead of regarding obesity as an abnormal condition, many people have erroneously considered it as an evidence of health, and any agent that reduces fat is therefore at once suspected of being injurious. Starting to reason from the false position that fat is an evidence of health, it is not surprising that they should, very naturally, fall into the error of supposing that an agent possessing properties capable of reducing corpulency would prove injurious to the health. Reasoning, however, from the rational basis, that an undue deposition of fat, constituting obesity, is not a healthy but a morbid condition, it is quite as natural for us to arrive at the opposite conclusion, which is sustained by experience and observation—i.e., that the reduction of fat in cases of corpulency is invariably followed by an improvement of strength, spirits, and physical comforts. Allan's Anti-Fat sold by Chemists everywhere. Price 6s. 6d. per Bottle. Send stamp for Pamphlet entitled "How to get Lean without Starvation."

CHAPMAN'S, NOTTING-HILL, W.

SILKS.
Every week the market value of Silk becomes higher, with prospects of it shortly becoming decidedly dear. Yet I feel I cannot have my Summer Sale without including my Silk Stock, notwithstanding the rise; and, as the Department is extremely heavy, I shall quote a few prices of special numbers, made expressly for this sale, that from their extreme cheapness will ensure many purchasers.

A Bankrupt's Stock of Dresses, patterns of which I will forward free. These will astonish the most sceptical.
Lot 1 I have marked 6½d. and 7½d. per yard; regular price and value, 11½d.
Lots 6, 18, and 98 contain goods varying in value from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 9d. per yard: these are rich fancies (some passe). I have fixed the price at 1s. per yard.

SPECIAL BARGAIN.
A quantity of fine English Tweeds in nice warm, dark tints, will make very capital Seashore and useful Dresses. The price will probably convey the idea of something common-looking and thin; but it must not be tested by that: it is genuinely worth double what I shall charge for it—viz., 6½d. per yard.

SERGES.
There are so many varieties in Serges—coarse makes and fine makes, rough and smooth Serges, Serges at a low price, all-wool Serges, Welsh Homespuns, North Country Tweeds, which rank as Serges, Fancy Serges, Serges for Yachting purposes, an exclusive make; fine Estamene, than which nothing is more durable; Keresmene, which claims to be a novelty, and is remarkably nice wear, and very many others too numerous to speak of, all of which claim a seperate virtue, either for cheapness, utility, appearance or value. Every description can be chosen from my patterns, which well represent the different classes and makes. The quality in each case will be found excellent for the price charged. These varieties range from 6½d. to 1s. 6d. per yard.

EMBROIDERED OATMEAL CLOTH ROBES.
A few of these very pretty and effective Dresses left over, in Pompadour Colours, reduced from 42s. to 35s. Patterns of Material and Embroidery free.

WASHING MATERIALS.
GREAT CLEARANCE OF A FRENCH MANUFACTURER'S STOCK OF SATEENS.
Exquisite is the only term applicable to such goods as these. The colours are perfect, and the method of weaving employed is quite unique. The manufacturer of whom I bought them said, "I have never made such a sacrifice since I have been in business, during thirty years. They cost more to make than what I sell them at, but I must clear." I feel in quoting his remarks I shall convey all I wish, and in better language than if I praised the goods, which must be seen to be admired. A large variety of designs in fancy and ribbed Sateens, and in many colours, chiefly light. 7½d. per yard. 7½d. per yard.

HEMP TWIST.
This Cloth is composed from the coarse threads or knots thrown out when weaving fine shirtings. The roughness thus obtained is wonderfully effective, and the wear almost endless. I can vouch that a dress made of the material will last for years, the grasses from which the fabric is woven being the strongest and purest ever used for the purpose. Fully one yard wide, and 1s. 9d. per yard.

BARGAINS IN KID GLOVES.
Several hundred dozen of the noted Florence make, one of the best-fitting Gloves ever sold. 1s. 11d. per pair, single buttons; original price, 2s. 9d.

BUNDLES OF REMNANTS, 25 yards—WASHING, 7s. 6d.; 50 yards DRESS MATERIALS, 25s. Patterns of the above sent free. Ladies are respectfully requested to make a second choice, to save delay.

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

In 1827 another exciting murder was committed, and the Observer, undeterred by former censures, published a portrait of the criminal and a view of the scene of his crime, but did not on this occasion deal with the case in the elaborate way in which the murder of Mr. Weare was treated. The story of the Red Barn is well-known to provincial playgoers in the Eastern Counties, where it still sometimes figures in theatrical programmes on Saturday nights. William Corder was a farmer's son residing not far from Ipswich. He had for some time carried on an intrigue with a country girl named Maria Marten, whom he at last enticed into a barn not far from her father's cottage, and there murdered her, and buried her body under the floor of the barn. After this he continued to visit her father's cottage, and by various falsehoods accounted for the girl's continued absence. Months went by, and Corder wrote several letters to the girl's parents, in which he told plausible stories about her being at the seaside with relatives of his own. The girl's mother, however, had had her suspicions aroused by several circumstances, and at length she dreamed three times that her daughter had been murdered and her body hid under the floor in the Red Barn. The woman's mind was so worked upon by the recurrence of this dream that she induced her husband to search under the floor of the barn, and there, sure enough, the murdered body of the girl was found. In the meantime Corder had advertised for a wife in the Morning Herald in the following terms:—"A private gentleman, aged twenty-four, entirely independent, whose disposition is not to be exceeded, has lately lost chief of his family by the hand of Providence, which has occasioned discord among the remainder, under circumstances the most disagreeable to relate. To any female of respectability, who would study for domestic comfort, and is willing to confide her future happiness to one in every way qualified to render the marriage state desirable, as the advertiser is in affluence. Many happy marriages have taken place through means similar to this now resorted to. It is hoped no one will answer this through impertinent curiosity; but should this meet the eye of any agreeable lady, who feels desirous of meeting with a sociable, tender, kind, and sympathising companion, they will find this advertisement worthy of notice. Honour and secrecy may be relied on. As some little security against idle application, it is requisite that letters may be addressed, post-paid, A. Z., care of Mr. Foster, stationer, 68, Leadenhall Street, with real name and address, which will meet with most respectful attention."

Through this advertisement Corder became acquainted with a lady who kept the Grove House Academy at Ealing near London. They were married, and he went to reside with his wife at Grove House, where he was arrested one morning in the spring of 1828. Various circumstances pointed to him as the murderer of Maria Marten, and he was tried for the crime at Bury St. Edmunds on Aug. 6, 1828. The crowd was so great that the counsel and officers of the court had to fight their way to their places. Corder appeared at the bar dressed in a new suit of black, and with his hair combed over his forehead. He wore a pair of blue French spectacles, through which he eyed the witnesses smilingly. Being called on for his defence, he read a statement which amounted to charging Maria Marten with having committed suicide. He said that in consequence of a quarrel they had in the Red Barn she shot herself with one of two pistols which he had with him:—"The instant the mischief happened, I thought to have made it public; but this would have added to the suspicion, and I then resolved to conceal her death. I then buried her in the best way I could. I tried to conceal the fact as well as I could, giving sometimes one reason for her absence, and sometimes another." He was found guilty and sentenced to death, and the night before his execution he made the following confession:—"I acknowledge being guilty of the death of poor Maria Marten, by shooting her with a pistol. The particulars are as follows: When we left her father's house, we began quarrelling about the burial of the child, she apprehending that the place wherein it was deposited would be found out. The quarrel continued for about three quarters of an hour upon this and about other subjects. A scuffle ensued, and during the scuffle, and at the time I think that she had hold of me, I took the pistol from the side pocket of my shooting-coat . . . . I have been guilty of great idleness, and at times led a dissolute life, but I hope through the mercy of God to be forgiven. W. Corder."

This murder excited great and marked interest, not only in Suffolk but through the whole country. On Aug. 10, 1828, the day before the execution, the Observer published a portrait of Corder and a view of the Red Barn, which are copied below. The excitement showed itself in the streets, where Puppet shows represented the scene of the crime, and Methodist preachers held forth in the fields near the barn to thousands of attentive listeners. The Red Barn itself was nearly pulled to pieces by curiosity-seekers.

On the Monday of the execution all the workmen in Bury struck work in order to see the murderer hanged, and persons came from long distances for the same purpose. One man was pestered by everyone he met on his return by inquiries whether Corder had really been hung that morning. This was repeated so often that he became quite weary of the constantly recurring question, "Is Corder executed?" In the evening, in order to get rid of the gloomy feelings created by what he had witnessed, he went to the theatre, where he arrived somewhat late. The play ("Macbeth") had advanced to the fourth scene of the first act as he seated himself in the pit. The newcomer, who was better acquainted with the details of the murder in the Red Barn than with the plays of Shakspeare, was not a little astonished when King Duncan entered, and, fixing his eye upon him, repeated what he thought was the same question that had been so often addressed to him that day, "Is execution done on Cawdor?"

The Observer continued its illustrations of events as they occurred, sharing the engravings with Bell's Life and the Englishman. St. Katherine's Docks were opened on Oct. 25, 1828, and on the following day the Observer published a bird's-eye view of the Docks, showing the ceremonies attending the opening. In January, 1829, appeared two views of Buckingham Palace, then building for George IV.; and in August a cut of the "Post-Office Accelerator," a carriage for conveying London postmen to their several districts. A portrait of Rowton, the winner of the Great St. Leger for 1829, was given in September. This year the lovers of wonderful shows were attracted to an exhibition in London of two Siamese youths who were united together by a short cartilaginous band at the pit of the stomach, but with no other connection existing between them. They were perfectly straight and well made, and walked with a gait like other people; being perfect in all their parts, and having all their functions distinct. Their names were Chang and Eng; and they were first discovered on the banks of the Siam river, fishing, by Mr. Hunter, an American, by whom they were taken to New York, were they were exhibited, and were afterwards brought to England. They were supposed to be about eighteen years old when they were exhibited in London in 1829. The Observer of Nov. 22, 1829, published a long account of the Siamese Twins, with a woodcut representing them as they were exhibited to the public.

After having been exhibited for several years in London and the provinces, the Siamese twins went to America, where they settled on a farm and married sisters. In the year 1869 they returned to London, and were as elderly men again exhibited; but they soon went back to America, where in a few years they died, both together. A similar exhibition was made in London about 1868 of twin girls, named Millie-Christine, or the "Two-headed Nightingale," and it was probably the appearance of these two "black birds" that suggested the idea of the Siamese twins appearing again in public.

In June, 1830, George the Fourth died, and the Observer published several engravings connected with the event. On June 24 appeared a portrait of "His Majesty George the Fourth As he last appeared in his Pony Phaeton in Windsor Park;" and on July 18 three illustrations of the lying in state and the funeral were published.

"The King is dead! Long live the King!" So said the citizens of London when they invited William IV. and Queen Adelaide to a banquet at Guildhall on the following Nov. 9; and on the 1st, eight days before the entertainment came off, the Observer duly supplied the public with "A correct view of the grand civic entertainment," as it was to be. On Aug. 1, 1831, new London Bridge was opened by the King and Queen, and two engravings illustrative of the event were published in the Observer, the Morning Chronicle, Bell's Life, and the Englishman. One of them is interesting, as it shows the relative positions of the old and the new bridge. The view was taken from the tower of St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, looking towards Fish-street-hill.

The Observer of Sept. 11, 1831, contained four illustrations of the coronation of King William the Fourth and Queen Adelaide, together with long and elaborate descriptions. There was another paper in existence at this time, called the United Kingdom, which also illustrated the coronation. This was the period of the great Reform agitation, when the newspapers were absorbed in political excitement; and after this the Observer for a time ceased to give any illustrations.

On July 28, 1835, a diabolical attempt was made in Paris to shoot Louis Phillipe, King of the French. The assassin, whose name was Fieschi, constructed an infernal machine consisting of twenty-five barrels, charged with various kinds of missiles, and lighted simultaneously by a train of gunpowder. The machine was fired from a window as the King rode along the lines of the National Guard, on the Boulevard du Temple, accompanied by his three sons, and suite. The King and his sons escaped; but Marshal Mortier was shot dead, and many officers were dangerously wounded. Amongst the spectators upwards of forty persons were killed or injured. In its number for Aug 9, 1835, the Observer gave a sketch of the attempted assassination, a portrait of the criminal, and a representation of the infernal machine.

The actual infernal machine, with a waxen effigy of Fieschi, formed for many years a prominent attraction at Madame Tussaud's Exhibition.

The reign of William IV. was a short one, and soon the Observer had to illustrate his funeral, as it had done that of his predecessor. The number for July 3, 1837, contained three engravings of the Royal obsequies, and ere long the brief rule of the sailor King was forgotten in the dawning glories of the Victorian era. The epoch of railways was opening. The North-Western, or the London and Birmingham, as it was then called, was the first railway out of London, and the next was the Greenwich Railway. On July 24, 1837, the Observer published a large woodcut of the "Grand entrance to the London and Birmingham Railway at Euston-square." Mr. Hardwick's massive structure was then in progress, and formed the entrance to the first of the great London railway stations—vast buildings, some of which have swallowed up whole streets, and contributed greatly to alter the appearance of London in their vicinity.

THE RED BARN.
From the "Observer," Aug. 10, 1828.

On July 24, 1837, a balloon ascended from Vauxhall with a parachute attached, in which was Mr. Cocking, who in descending was killed. The Observer published illustrations of this event, which excited great interest at the time. Other papers illustrated Mr. Cocking's death, which I will recount more at length when I come to treat of the Weekly Chronicle, which contained more illustrations of the event than any other paper. A large engraving appeared in the Observer for Aug. 20, 1837, representing the Waterloo shield, given by Lord George Bentinck, and run for at Goodwood Races, 1837.

(To be continued.) M. J.

Lord Elcho, M.P., presided last Saturday afternoon at the luncheon of the East Lothian Agricultural Society at Dunbar.—The annual show of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society will take place at Leeds on Aug. 5, 6, and 7 next. In every section of the show the entries are large, and the list of exhibitors of live stock comprises breeders from every part of the kingdom, including the Prince of Wales, who is represented in three classes. The exhibition of implements will be larger and more important than ever held at any former meeting of the society. A splendid site for the show has been secured in Cardigan-fields, on the Kirkstall-road, and the ground occupied by the Royal Agricultural Society in 1861.

HIS MAJESTY GEORGE IV., AS HE LAST APPEARED IN HIS PONY PHAETON IN WINDSOR PARK.

FRENCH FÊTE AT THE ALBERT HALL.

Our Metropolitan News of last week gave some account of the Monday's festive mimicry of a market, or Fancy Fair, held at the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington, to benefit the funds of certain charitable institutions for the French in London. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince Leopold were among the visitors that day, and the fair was continued next day. The centre of attraction, as shown in the centre of our page of Illustrative Sketches, was the famous leading lady of tragedy at the Comédie Française, Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt, who wore a cream-colour dress, adorned with yellow roses, fine old lace about her neck, and a chip straw hat with a great feather. She was assisted in her shop-keeping by Mdlle. Baretta and Mdlle. Martin, and her success, in disposing at high prices of a variety of fancy wares, must have been very profitable to the good cause. Mdlle. Sophie Croizette and Mdlle. Jeanne Samary, also members of the celebrated company which has lately performed at the Gaiety Theatre, had each her circle of admiring purchasers; and many other ladies, English as well as French, did service in the same manner with very satisfactory results.

SKETCHES IN AFGHANISTAN.

Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, late at the head-quarters of the British Army on the road towards Cabul, furnishes the Sketches of two scenes in that country, which are given among this week's Illustrations. The road from Jellalabad, about ten miles beyond Gundamuk, and near the Jugdulluk Pass, crosses a river which is called the Surkh-Ab, or "Red Water," from its peculiar colour, probably the effect of clay in its muddy admixture. The bridge is also painted of a reddish colour; hence the name of the "Surkh-Pool." On the Cabul side, a portion of its parapet has fallen, which can easily be repaired, and the main fabric is substantial enough. The other Illustration was taken at the village of Hazarnow, on the Cabul River, and represents a party of young girls and others enjoying a swing, precisely as they do in England.

"AVE MARIA!"

This picture, by Mr. H. R. Robertson, has been noticed with deserved commendation by visitors and critical inspectors of the Royal Academy Exhibition. It is a scene on the Lagune of Venice, where the sunset light is shed with surpassing loveliness on the broad expanse of placid water. The boatman and his young wife have stopped before a shrine of the Blessed Virgin, which rises, with a flight of stairs, upon a timber platform erected in the midst of the water. And here they pause, at the sound of a distant church bell, to offer their humble adoration; and to realise in heart, as we may admit without professing their creed, that "ever-womanly" and truly motherly aspect of tenderness, which is surely comprehended, with all else, in the infinite perfections of Divine Love.

Gadshill Place, Higham, the residence of the late Charles Dickens, has found a purchaser in Captain Austin Budden, of the 12th Kent Artillery.

The attendance of the battalions and detachments of volunteers authorised to drill with the regular troops at Aldershott since the 14th ult. closed last Saturday, when the last four battalions left the camp. Altogether, eight battalions, exhibiting a total strength in camp of a little over 3700 officers and men, have been under canvas for eight days.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

M. Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" was given on Saturday, for the first and only time this season. Mdlle. Heilbron sustained the character of Ophelia with much success; the cast having included Mdlle. Mantilla as the Queen, and Signori Cotogni, Sabater, Scolara, Capponi, Raguer, and Manfredi, respectively, as Hamlet, Laertes, the King, the Ghost, Horatio, and Marcellus. The other announcements of the week were repetitions of familiar operas. With next week the season will terminate.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season took place on Saturday afternoon, when the brilliant singing of Madame Adelina Patti was a special feature among many successful performances by eminent artists of the Royal Italian Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The regular season closed on Saturday last, when "Don Giovanni" was given in the morning and "Dinorah" in the evening. The cast of each was an efficient and familiar one, having included, in the first instance, Madame Pappenheim, (Donna Anna), Madame Marie Roze (Donna Elvira), Madame Trebelli (Zerlina), Signor Brignoli (Don Ottavio), Signor Del Puente (Don Giovanni), Signor Susini (Leporello), Signor Franceschi (Masetto), &c. In "Dinorah" the brilliant singing of Madame Gerster was a special feature, as in a previous performance of the opera recently noticed; other characters having also been sustained, as then, by Mdlles. Tremelli and Lido, Signori Roudil, Frapolli, and Tecchi.

The season just closed began on April 26 with a repetition of the late M. Bizet's "Carmen," which proved so attractive last year and again this season, Mdlle. Minnie Hauk's fine performance as the heroine having been again a conspicuous feature. The specialties in production have been Verdi's "Aïda" and M. Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon," neither being absolute novelties, but both having been heard for the first time in this theatre. Of the splendour with which the first-named work was brought out, and the general excellence of its performance — the principal characters sustained by Mdlle. Kellogg, Madame Trebelli, Signori Campanini, Galassi, and Foli—we have recently spoken. In the reproduction of "Mignon" at Her Majesty's Theatre, the characters of Mignon and Federico were (as in its previous performances at Drury-Lane Theatre) sustained, respectively, by Madame Christine Nilsson and Madame Trebelli. Of the exquisite charm, vocal and dramatic, of Madame Nilsson's performance, and of the general efficiency of the representation, we spoke last week. Besides the artists already named, Mesdames Sinico, Hélène Crosmond, and Lablache, Mdlles. Ambre, Robiati, and Filomena, Signori Runcio, Leli, Rinaldini, Grazzi, MM. Candidus, Thomas, and Pyatt, and Herr Behrens have reappeared; and first appearances have been made, with more or less success, by Mdlles. Vanzandt, Libia Drog, and Lido; Signori Pantaleoni, Roudil, Vazelli, and Susini.

The continuance of Sir Michael Costa in the office of conductor has been a valuable aid to the general efficiency of the performances, his place when absent (a rare occurrence) having been ably supplied by M. Sainton, the excellent chef d'orchestre. The Saturday afternoon performances have proved attractive. These have been skilfully directed by Signor Arditi.

The season is followed by a series of twelve extra performances, beginning last Monday evening with "Mignon."

On Wednesday afternoon another concert was given at the Royal Albert Hall, the programme having included performances by the principal artists of Her Majesty's Theatre.

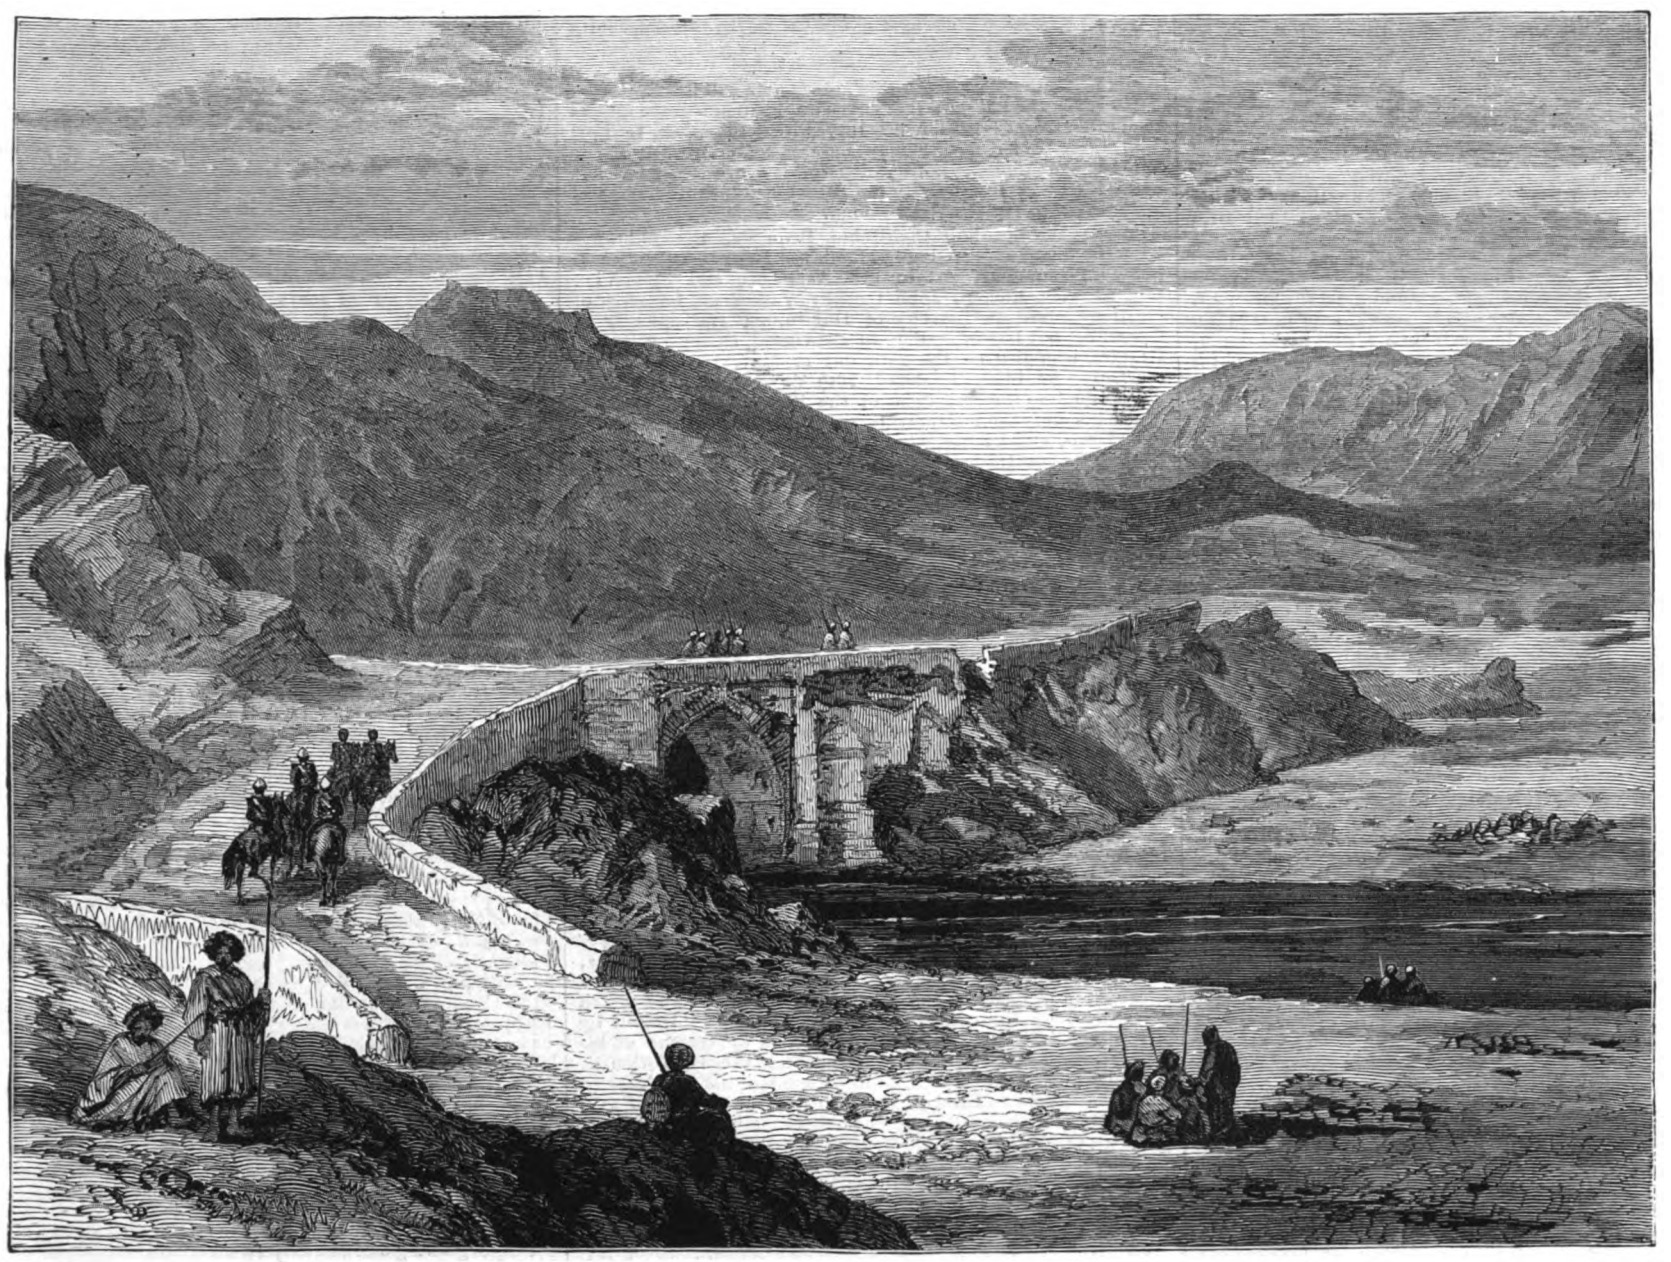
Miss Florence Coplestone's Matinée Musicale, which took place last Saturday at Steinway Hall, deserves special mention. The young lady, who is from America, has been studying at Leipsic and Weimar, and bids fair to take a high position as a pianist. Her excellent mechanism and style were displayed in her execution of a series of solo pieces by Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Liszt, Chopin, and Heller, and in Rubinstein's sonata for piano and violin in association with Herr Feininger. Vocal pieces were contributed by Mdlle. Vanzandt, Madame Feininger, Signor Tecchi, and Mr. Carleton. Miss Coplestone is, we believe, about to return to New York, where she can scarcely fail to meet with the success that she deserves.

Among the concerts of last week was that of Mr. Ferdinand Praeger, a musician of high attainments, practical and theoretical. The programme consisted entirely of his own compositions, vocal and instrumental. The most important of the latter were two pianoforte trios, a pianoforte sonata, and a string quartet. The pianist was a pupil of Mr. Praeger, Miss Maude Grace, who earned well-merited applause by her playing in the trios and the sonata, and in several short solo pieces. The quartet was led by that skilful violinist, Herr Pollitzer, who also played an expressive solo. His coadjutors in the quartet were MM. N. Mori, Heimendahl, and Van Biene, the two latter having rendered the string parts of the trios. Vocal pieces were contributed by Misses Arnim, R. Levinson, and Mr. A. Lortzing.

At the competition for the Parepa-Rosa gold medal for singing, recently held at the Royal Academy of Music, there were ten candidates—the successful one having been John H. d'Egville. The examiners were Messrs. Henschel, Lewis Thomas, and Li Calsi (chairman).—The competition for the Lucas gold medal for composition, at the same institution, was decided on Monday, when the award was given to Arthur G. Thomas, out of nine candidates. The examiners were Messrs. G. A. Osborne, C. Pinsuti, and C. E. Stephens (chairman).

Sir William Jenner has accepted very cordially the invitation of the Midland Medical Society committee to deliver the address at the opening of the ensuing winter session.

The Earl of Ducie has returned 12 per cent to his tenants on their arable land, and Mr. Severne, M.P., has returned 10 per cent to his tenants on Thenford Estate.



Yesterday week the 3rd Administrative Battalion of the Lancashire Rifle Volunteers were reviewed in Colonel Clifton's park, Lytham, where they had been encamped for a week, by Colonel Thompson, 15th Brigade Dépôt, Burnley. The men of all ranks numbered 1051, the largest number the battalion has made for many years. Colonel Thompson warmly complimented Colonel Dugdale on the efficiency of the battalion.

A beautiful black ebony box, containing a powerful binocular marine glass, from the Emperor of Germany, was on Tuesday handed by the directors of the Great Eastern Railway Company to Mr. Robert Wilson Massingham, their harbour master at Lowestoft, as a token of his Majesty's appreciation of the successful efforts made by Mr. Massingham, on the night of Sept. 29 last, in rescuing the passengers and crew of the German steam-ship Castor, which had come into collision with another vessel and grounded near the Nore Sands. This is the second testimonial he has received for saving life; the first, which consisted of a gold chronometer and chain, having been presented to him by the inhabitants of Lowestoft for rescuing the crew of a Norwegian vessel in November, 1874.

FUNERAL OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

A portion of the impression of last week's Number of this Journal, made up on Thursday afternoon, contained the announcement of the arrival of H.M.S. Orontes in the British Channel, bringing from the Cape of Good Hope the lamented Prince Imperial's body, in charge of Colonel Pemberton, of the 60th Rifles. The Orontes, which is one of the finest troop-ships belonging to the military transport service, under the command of Captain Kinahan, received the body on the 15th ult., in Simon's Bay, the eastward harbour of the Cape, from H.M.S. Boadicea, which had brought it from Port Natal. Her approach to England was known by the telegraph from Madeira, and she lay to off Plymouth, on Wednesday of last week, to receive orders from shore, which directed her to go to Spithead, the anchorage off Portsmouth, and there to meet the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, commanded by Captain Hills. This smaller and lighter vessel, which had been fitted up for the occasion, was to convey the Prince's body from Portsmouth to Woolwich.

The Orontes accordingly reached Spithead early next morning (Thursday), and was there met by the Admiralty yacht, to which the coffin was transferred with the least possible delay. It was still in charge of Colonel Pemberton, and was received by several friends of the Empress and connections of the House of Bonaparte on board the Enchantress. That vessel arrived at Woolwich on Friday afternoon about two o'clock, and lay at the T Pier of the Royal Arsenal. A distinguished company, both French and English, was there assembled to receive the Prince's body, for which elaborate preparations had been made. On the part of the members and friends of the Bonaparte family and of the late French Imperial Government, there were Prince Lucien Bonaparte, Prince Charles Bonaparte, the Duc de Bassano, General Count Fleury, M. Rouher, formerly Minister of State, M. Paul de Cassagnac, and many others. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Connaught were present to show their kindly regard for the late Prince Imperial and for the Empress, but did not mix with the phalanx of Bonapartist courtiers and partisans. The Duke of Cambridge arrived soon afterwards. A number of British officers of rank, including General Sir John Adye, General Sir Lintorn Simmons, Major-General Turner, holding special authority at Woolwich, were there in full uniform. The coffin was borne ashore by sailors of the Admiralty yacht, while M. Rouher, General Fleury, and another French General, with Major-General Turner, walked beside it, and the Roman Catholic clergy intoned their Latin prayers. It was followed by several hundred persons to a small domed building in the Arsenal, which had been fitted up as a temporary mortuary. Here the bier was visited by the principal personages of the company; after which the medical men, Baron Clary, Baron Corvisart, and Mr. T. Evans, dentist, had the coffin opened and inspected the body, for the purpose of identification. The corpse was then placed in a new shell, a leaden, and an oaken coffin, which was put on one of the guns of the Royal Horse Artillery, covered with the British flag. It was escorted from Woolwich to Chiselhurst, by way of the Common, Shooter's-hill, and Eltham, by a troop of the Royal Artillery and Horse Artillery, and by a procession on foot, which reached Camden Place, the residence of the Empress, about nine o'clock in the evening.

The final ceremony at Chiselhurst on Saturday was quite a soldier's funeral, as befitted one who, in the words of the Princess of Wales, written by her own hand on the card which accompanied her wreath of violets, "died a soldier's death, fighting for our cause." The whole of the inscription on this wreath is well worth quotation, since it indicates the spirit in which the Royal House of England did such ungrudging honour to the memory of a cherished and lamented guest of this country. But first the words of the Queen, thoughtfully written in French by her Majesty and attached to the wreath of golden laurel-leaves which she laid upon the coffin, should be given. Written in the Queen's own hand, the words are:—

The Princess of Wales wrote:—

A token of affection and regard for him who lived the most spotless of lives, and died a soldier's death fighting for our cause in Zululand.
From Albert Edward and Alexandra, July 12, 1879.

When the coffin containing the remains of her son, with which was placed a crucifix blessed by Pius IX. and brought from Rome two years ago by her Chaplain, Monsignor Goddard, was brought to Camden Place on Friday night, the Empress was anxiously awaiting it. We dare not attempt to inquire how it was received by the widowed mother. All that night, with but slight intermission, the Empress passed beside the body of her son. Very early in the morning, at about four or five, when the tall candles burning beneath a silver cross in the little white chapel had not long paled in the light of the dawn, the Empress heard mass. It was said before her there, and before the dead, by Monsignor Goddard, who had kept the vigil with Monsignor Las Casas, Bishop of Constantine, and two of the aides-de-camp of the Prince. Afterwards the Empress retired to her room, which she did not leave during the day. At nine the white hangings with the letter "N." were affixed by the Pompes Funèbres to the outer gate, and many mourners were then arriving.

By the Queen's repeatedly expressed desire, great care had been taken in preparing the mind of the Empress for the funeral ceremony, of which she could not but be conscious, although she took no part in it. The Queen left Windsor South-Western Station at nine o'clock, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, and attended by the Hon. Horatia Stopford and the Hon. Frances Drummond, and by Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ponsonby, K.C.B., and Colonel Du Plat, her Majesty's Equerry, of the Royal Artillery, the arm of the service with which the young Prince, following in the footsteps of the founder of his family, had associated himself. The military pageant of Saturday had strictly the character of an Artillery, or rather of a Woolwich celebration. All the troops engaged came from the Woolwich garrison, of which the Prince had been a member, and many of the Princes wore Artillery uniforms.

The Queen arrived at Chiselhurst Station and immediately drove to Camden Place. Lord Sydney, Lord Lieutenant of the county, and Lady Sydney were present at the station on the Queen's arrival. The Queen was conducted by the Duc de Bassano, Grand Chamberlain of the exiled Court, to the chapelle ardente, where her Majesty knelt for a little while near the kneeling priests, and then placed upon the coffin her wreath of laurels in gold. Princess Beatrice placed a cross of violet porcelain flowers upon the coffin. Many flowers and wreaths had already been deposited in that sacred place. The Queen gathered two or three flowers in her hand. In the reception-hall Prince Napoleon with his two sons, Prince Victor and Prince Louis Bonaparte, advanced to do her Majesty homage. The Queen was received also by Princess Mathilde, Prince Napoleon Charles Bonaparte, Prince Murat, Princess Eugénie Murat, the Duchesse de Mouchy (Princess Anne Murat), the Duc de Bassano, and M. Pietri.

The Prince of Wales's special train left Charing-cross soon after ten, and arrived at Chiselhurst at 10.30, five minutes after the Queen's train. It carried the Prince and Princess of Wales and a very brilliant company of Royal personages, members of the Diplomatic Body, and officers. On the previous day, at Woolwich, the Prince of Wales and his illustrious relatives had been dressed as civilians, but now the Prince of Wales wore an Artillery uniform with spiked busby (the uniform of the Prince of Wales's Own Norfolk Artillery, of which his Royal Highness is hon. Colonel) and the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, with the French military order founded by the late Emperor, and other orders on his breast. Similar uniforms and decorations were worn by the other Princes, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Teck. Prince Leopold wore the Windsor dress. The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar were in scarlet, against which the bars of crape on the arm which, like all the officers, they wore, showed more distinctly. The Crown Prince of Sweden was conspicuous in his handsome light buff cavalry dress; Prince Leiningen was in naval uniform. There were also in the train Prince Christian, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden, Prince Louis of Battenberg, and Count Gleichen.

Among the officers who came were:—Colonel F. A. Stanley (Secretary of State for War), Field-Marshal Lord Strathnairn, General Lord Napier of Magdala, Lieutenant-General Sir Dighton Probyn, General Sir Charles Ellice, General Stephenson (commanding the Home District), and, in short, almost every general officer of distinction who is in England at this time, and was able to attend. We believe that every regiment at Aldershott, and all arms of the service, were represented by Colonels or some of their officers.

The cadets of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, commanded by Major Van Straubenzee, about 200 in number, were stationed under the tall trees at the end of the avenue nearest Camden House, and presented arms as the Queen and the Princes arrived. Beyond them, on the left of the principal entrance, the officers and the other mourners massed themselves. The gun-carriage on which the coffin was to be placed was drawn up before the door. The Queen took up a position on the gravel walk at the side of the House nearest the lodge till the ten young Captains and Lieutenants of the Royal Artillery, to whom the like duty had been confided on the previous day, had borne the coffin from the chapel to the bier. The drums beat with a muffled sound, the first minute gun was heard, and the bearers carried their burden to the gun. It was now ten minutes past eleven. The Queen, followed by the Princess and the ladies in waiting, was conducted by the Marquis de Castelbajac, in attendance upon her Majesty, along a path marked out by black cloth to the raised black-draped pavilion from which she saw the passage of the funeral procession across the common to the church. The Princess of Wales had already driven to the church with the Comtesse d'Otrante and Lord Suffield, way being made for this improvised movement by the personal exertions of Captain Baynes. A battery of artillery just without the lower gates fired the first of a series of mourning guns, and the gentlemen cadets stepped slowly off with arms reversed, while the Royal Artillery band played the Dead March in "Saul," which is always heard at a soldier's funeral. The drummers beat a monotonous funereal roll upon drums bound with black crape. The cross was borne before the gun by an Alsatian Curé. The Abbé Kœnig, Vicar of St. Eustache, followed, with the Abbé Laine, almoner to the Emperor; the Abbé Métairie, Canon of St. Denis; the learned Bishop of Constantine, Monsignor Las Casas, wearing his golden mitre. The gun was drawn by six dark-brown horses, beside each pair of which rode a mounted artilleryman, one on the right, one on the left. The coffin above the gun was rolled in the English Union Jack and the French Tricolour. The sword of the Prince, his belt, and his sabretache were placed above. On a cushion were the great cross, the plaque, and ribbon of the Legion of Honour, founded by the Emperor. The dismounted men carried the largest of the wreaths. By the side of the coffin walked the pall-bearers, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, the Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway, with M. Rouher, on the left; the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Leopold, and the Prince of Wales, with the Duc de Bassano, on the right. The Princes and Princesses came to lay their wreaths upon the coffin in the chapel, and as they passed into the saloon reserved for the Queen and the Princes of the various Royal Houses, they had each received a few violets or other flowers from the chapel. The Princes who walked as pall-bearers still carried in their hands the flowers they had received. At the side of the pall-bearers walked the Ambassadors. Behind the coffin came the Prince's brown horse Stag, caparisoned in white and silver starred trappings of Imperial state, led by Mr. Gamble, the faithful retainer who attended the baptism of the Prince and now followed his funeral. This also was the place reserved for the English soldiers, Lomas and Brown, who served as groom and valet to the Prince, and Uhlmann, his own body servant. Next came the chief mourners, Prince Napoleon and his sons Prince Victor and Prince Louis, Prince Lucien Bonaparte, Prince Joachim Murat, Prince Napoleon Charles Bonaparte, and Prince Louis Murat. These Princes of the Imperial house were followed by other personages of princely rank, but not all related by kindred—the Duke of Teck, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden, the Duc de Rivas (representing personally the King of Spain), the Prince of Monaco, the Duc d'Albe, the Duc d'Huescar, the Marquis de Roccagiovine, Comte Primoli, Duc de Tamames, Duc de Mouchy, Duc d'Albufera, Duc de Feltre, and Duc de Marino. Next came the great officers of the Imperial Crown, many of them bearing wreaths. Here were General Comte Fleury, the Prince de la Moscova, General de Béville, General Favé, General Castelnau, General Canu, Comte Davillier, Baron Bourgoing, M. Raimbaud, and the three aides-de-camp of the Prince, General Despeuilles, Admiral Duperré, and Colonel de Ligneville. Here also were the Marquis de Bassano, the Comte Louis de Turenne, M. Bachon; M. Franceschini Pietri, executor of the Prince; General Sir Lintorn Simmons, formerly Governor of the Royal Military Academy, with the sons of the chiefs; MM. Conneau, Espinasse, and Bizot, the legatees; Adrien Fleury, Pierre de Bourgoing, and Scipion Corvisart, and M. Filou, tutor of the Prince. Dr. le Baron Corvisart remained near the Empress, but Dr. le Baron Larry followed in the cortége. A place was here reserved for Mr. Strode, the owner of Camden House. There followed also Colonel Brady, Prince Poniatowski, the Comte du Bourg, the Marquis de Massa, M. Cyprian Corvisart, Comte de Labedoyère, M. Busso-Billaut, Duc de Cornegliano, Baron T. Lambert, Duc de Trévise, Baron Tascher de la Pagerie, Baron de Montbrun, Baron d'Azugon, Baron Corberon, Comte Galloni d'Istria, Dr. Evans, Comte et Vicomte Aguado, and Comte de la Poèze. The gentlemen nearest after the chief mourners bore wreaths in their hands, the violet wreath with the Princess of Wales's card, which she had placed with her own hands on the coffin; a wreath of white roses from "Albert Edward, Prince of Wales;" a white wreath from "Louisa, Victoria, and Maud of Wales;" and one from "Edward and George of Wales," sent by the young Princes to the friend whose daring and skill in manly exercises were specially calculated to attract boyish admiration. Prince Leopold's offering was an immortelle with the words written by him on the card—

"Hommage d'affection et d'estime de la part de Léopold."

The congregation of French mourners included many active political partisans, members of the present or former Legislative bodies. Delegations came from the manufacturing towns of Roubaix, Cambrai, and Tourcoing; from the students of Paris, the workmen of Paris (among whom marched Didion and Bradier); from old soldiers living in Paris, the Society La Jeunesse. Other deputations came from the departments of Giers, La Creuse, Tarn-et-Garonne, Allier, Seine Inférieure (Rouen). Draped eagles, wreaths, and tricolours set with golden bees were borne aloft by the deputations; an immense and confused concourse of French mourners followed. All, even the Princes of the Imperial house, were in ordinary French mourning (evening dress), not in uniform, as so many of the English mourners were. As the several portions of the procession reached the park gates a change was made in its composition. A troop of the Royal Irish Lancers from Woolwich, with pennons flying on their lances bound with crape, and with green plumes nodding as they rode, placed themselves at the head, coming out from their station under the trees by the side of the common. Captain Paley was here in command. When the mourners had passed on, the dull rattle of the guns of the Royal Horse Artillery, wheeling into the line of the cortége, was also heard behind. The whole of the military display was under the command of General Turner, commanding at Woolwich, with his Staff, Colonel Markham, Colonel Wrottesley, and Captain Loraine. The riding establishment of the Royal Horse Artillery, under Major Ward-Ashton, who had formed the escort the previous day, placed themselves again in the rear of the procession. There were two batteries of the Royal Horse Artillery, under Colonel Andrews, and three of Field Artillery, under Colonel Rowley. The whole of the 5th Lancers were on the ground, under Colonel Browne. The battery on the north-east of the common, which fired minute guns, was commanded by Major Blackwell. This battery remained at its post, but the other troops joined in the procession, and so prolonged it that it formed a line stretching all the way from the park to the church. So mournful a ceremony was not looked at from the point of view of a spectacle, and the dull sky was rather unfavourable to military display. There was no sun to flash back from the helmets of the Lancers or linger on the gold of the splendidly mounted Horse Artillery. But it was a most unusual and impressive sight to see that strangely and variously composed line of soldiers on horseback, and priests and mourners on foot, moving slowly along the serpentine road across the great uneven plain of the common, with thousands of spectators stationary on each hand. To those who thought of the childless Empress in her lonely house, and knew that the chief mourners were Princes, and that the Queen was watching the procession from her black tribune, unless she had left it to console the sorrowing mother, the sight was much more than impressive.

The head of the procession moved slowly on to the mournfully swelling and diminishing cadences of the Funeral March in A flat from the 11th sonata of Beethoven. The common was thickly lined with silent rows of spectators standing on the grass or in carriages. Many stands had been erected and were partially occupied. At the old church the 1st Kent Administrative Battalion Rifle Volunteers, 380 strong, under Major Bristowe, were formed up and presented arms. Most of the ladies who attended the service had gone beforehand to the church; but half-way across the common M. Henri Chevreau brought Madame Ferdinand de Lesseps, who is nearly related to the Empress, to join the mourners and enter with them. Abreast of the Catholic schools a lady tottered forward with a wreath, which she handed to the nearest person in the procession, begging him to lay it on the coffin. It was twelve o'clock, nearly an hour after leaving the house, when St. Mary's Church was reached and the gun wheeled round to allow the officers to raise its load. The cadets formed in rows each side of the way to permit the coffin to pass between them. The little bell of St. Mary's Church tolling for the soul of the departed was answered by the deeper note of the bell from the steeple of the Anglican church. The priests came out to meet the dead. The Bishop of Southwark, in full pontificals, was preceded by Monsignor Goddard, in violet robes, and the rest of the clergy. The officers placed the coffin on their shoulders. The Bishop sprinkled the coffin with holy water and recited the De Profundis, and then, preceded by the cross-bearer, who had come from Camden Place, and by the whole of the clergy, he led the way for the bearers into the church. The officers placed the body on the catafalque before the sanctuary. The mourners passed in. The high mass proceeded. When the eyes grew accustomed to the gloom of the darkened little church, hung throughout with sable cloth, on which the Imperial "N." in gold glistened, while the cross and the figures of the Virgin stood out in bold relief, it became possible to see how it was tenanted. The English Princes who had borne the pall sat to right and left of the coffin; the Imperial Princes on the left. The Princess of Wales was in the gloom on the right, Princess Mathilde sat beside her brother and nephews on the left. The only daylight came through the Napoleon Chapel.

The Ambassadors of Germany, Italy, Austria, Turkey, Denmark, Sweden, Belgium, Holland, Spain, and other foreign States, accompanied by ladies of their respective families, and the wives of several French Marshals or Generals, including those of Marshals Lebœuf and Canrobert and the Duke of Malakoff, were in the seats reserved for distinguished foreigners. This congregation now waited for the commencement of the religious ceremony.

Within the sanctuary stood the mitred Bishop of Southwark, the Right Rev. Dr. Danell, who sang the solemn requiem mass, assisted by Canon Bamber, with Father Reeks as deacon and Father Delaney as sub-deacon. Monsignor Goddard read an English prayer at the end, after the Bishop had finished the one absolution. The Rev. Father Crook was master of the ceremonial, with Mr. Louis Clovis assisting. "Napoleonis Ludovici Eugenii anima" was the soul prayed for in the Latin of the ritual. The Baronne de Caters-Lablache sang a beautiful "Ave Maria," by M. Saint-Saëns, the French composer, who has written the new cantata for the Birmingham Musical Festival. She also sang "Pie Jesu," by Faure. Other solos were sung by Dr. Crookall, Mr. Doyle, and a young French chorister. The chant was plain Gregorian. M. Serpette accompanied the Baroness Caters-Lablache. Miss Danvers, the usual organist, accompanied most efficiently the remaining part of the service. Monsignor de Las Casas, the former Bishop of Constantine, was present, together with Canons Crookall, Bamber, Doyle, O'Halloran, Wenham, and North. The last words of the English prayer, said by Monsignor Goddard, were:—"To Thee, O Lord, we commend the soul of Thy servant Napoleon, that, being dead to this world, he may live to Thee; and whatever sins he has committed in this life through human frailty do Thou in Thy merciful goodness forgive, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The beautiful words of the introit, "Requiem æternam

dona ei Domine," were many times repeated. The triple peal of the bell above the church told the great crowd of mourners, who were perforce excluded from the little building and stood in the churchyard, of the elevation of the Host and chalice, and the worshippers within heard, with a sudden shock, the cadets fire their three volleys to the memory of their comrade.

After the mass, which lasted till one, the procession did not return to the house. Many remained at the church, and the public flocked in to walk round the corpse, to sprinkle it with holy water, and to add wreaths to the many upon it. It was visited by several thousands in the course of the day, and so great was the pressure that at one time the palings and the police were nearly swept away together by those anxious to enter. The coffin, meanwhile, was vigilently guarded by a watch of four gentlemen at a time, who relieved each other from hour to hour. From twelve to one the aides-de-camp to the Prince and M. Bachon were appointed to be on guard. At one the duty began of the Marquis de Bassano, Comte Louis de Turenne, Marquis de Castelbajac, and Colonel Brady. From two to three Capitaine Bizet, Lieutenant l'Espinasse, Sous-Lieutenant Conneau, and Sous-Lieutenant Fleury held their watch; and next came the turn of the Marquis de Massa, the Baron de Bourgoing, Pierre de Bourgoing, and Cyprian Corvisart. They were succeeded by the Comte de Labédoyère, M. Busso Billaut, Duc de Conegliano, Baron Tristan Laubert. The last and longest duty fell at five to the Duc de Trévise, the Comte du Bourg, the Baron Tascher de la Pagerie, and the Comte de la Poèze At seven the Princes of the Imperial house arrived again with M. Pietri. A brief service was held by the clergy, headed by Monsignor Goddard, and the coffin was removed from the catafalque to the ante-sacristy in which the Emperor's body lay for a year, till the side chapel was built for his remains. In the ante-sacristy it now lies, with the Queen's wreath and those from the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Leopold and Princess Beatrice's cross upon it.

The Queen returned at twelve, and the Prince of Wales at 11.5. About 1400 police were in attendance, under the direction of the Chief Commissioner, Sir Edmund Henderson, who was assisted by Colonel Labalmondière, and by Captain Baynes, District Superintendent. Mr. Gernon, Mr. Butt, and other experienced officers were also on duty. The South-Eastern Railway ran thirty-two speçial trains to Chiselhurst, and nearly as many back. It conveyed by these and the ordinary trains 11,000 passengers to Chiselhurst and carried from Chiselhurst 12,500.

It was variously estimated by some of the police authorities that between 35,000 and 40,000 persons were present. Photographs were given away to those who entered Camden Park early, chiefly French visitors who had obtained cards at Willis's Rooms or the station. Two thousand photographs were speedily exhausted. Rain falling in the afternoon greatly reduced the crowd at Chiselhurst. In the afternoon the mortuary built at Camden Place, in which the coffin had been deposited for a night, was visited by very many people, and large quantities of flowers were presented to the visitors as souvenirs by the graceful act of the Imperial family.

This little chapel in the vestibule was filled with beautiful wreaths. They came from Corsica and Chambéry, from the Lycée Bonaparte, from Princess Metternich, and a little one from the child whom the Prince last kissed before he left England. Some 500 or 600 wreaths were sent, and many hours were devoted on Friday night to unpacking them. Father Rooney, the priest who accompanied the remains of the Prince to England, performed the proper religious rites so far as was possible in the circumstances on shipboard. As a proof of this confidence, Father Rooney was desired on Sunday to celebrate mass in the presence of the Empress at Camden House, in the bed-room of the Prince, where there now lie on the bed the faded violets which Lady Frere put on the coffin of the Prince, the bouquets, cross, and inscription in everlasting flowers, and all that came in the little chapel of the Orontes from Simon's Bay. The mass was said at half-past ten, and was heard throughout by the Empress, though she was at the beginning much affected.

Mass was said at Chiselhurst Catholic Church on Sunday at eleven by the Bishop of Southwark in the presence of the Imperial family and a numerous congregation, and the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, who has just been deprived by death of his own favourite nephew, Monsignor Manning, preached from the top of the steps of the sanctuary a most pathetic sermon. As his text the Cardinal took the verse from the Gospel of St. John—"What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

After the service the congregation came forward to see the coffin through the iron bars of the temporary sepulchre, where it lies surrounded by wreaths of white eucharis, roses, stephanotis, violets, and lilies. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, arrived in the afternoon, with the Duke of Teck, visited Camden House, and placed a wreath within the ante-sacristy of St. Mary's Church. The Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and the Princess Frederica of Hanover paid similar tribute to the family and the dead.

Our Illustrations presented in this Number of the Illustrated London News comprise those of the procession from the landing-pier at Woolwich Arsenal to the temporary mortuary, in which the body of the Prince Imperial was first placed for surgical inspection and personal identification; the funeral procession next day, at Chiselhurst, from Camden Place to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church; and the soldiers paying their final tribute, in military fashion, of homage to the gallant young soldier then laid in the tomb. A View of the Church, with the appropriate motto "Requiescat in Pace," is given as our Extra Supplement.

The Lord Chancellor having considered a petition of the Earl of Westmeath praying that his right to vote at the elections of representative peers of Ireland to sit in the Parliament of the United Kingdom might be admitted by their Lordships, and having called for evidence in support of the claim, has reported to the House of Lords that the right has been established to his satisfaction.

An attempt to commit a burglary in the house of Mr. Rolleston, J.P., who resides near Parsonstown, was frustrated by the bravery and self-possession of Mr. Rolleston's niece, who was in the house. Hearing a noise in one of the corridors at about one a.m., the young lady got up, and was astonished at seeing a light in an unoccupied room. Looking in she observed a man in a stooping posture. Going quickly and noiselessly to where a double-barrelled fowling-piece was hung up, she loaded it with cartridge, and then called her uncle, a gentleman nearly eighty years of age. He at once accompanied her to the room, and, pushing open the door, saw the burglar engaged in rifling a box. Pointing the gun at him, Mr. Rolleston ordered him to drop on his knees, or he would receive the contents of the gun. The man was so startled that he obeyed, and remained in that position until assistance was obtained. Miss Rolleston raised an alarm in some adjoining cottages, and the burglar was taken into custody. He turns out to be a convict at large on a ticket-of-leave.

2. Mates accordingly.

By J. W. ABBOTT.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game, played at the Divan, between the Rev. Professor WAYTE and the Rev. G. A. MACDONNELL.

(King's Knight's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Prof. W.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. B to B 4th	B to Kt 2nd
5. P to B 3rd	P to K R 3rd
6. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3rd
7. Kt to R 3rd

We are inclined to think that 7. Castles is better, but the move in the text is favoured by Mr. Macdonnell with the view of reserving the option of castling on the Queen's side, if desirable or necessary.

7.	Kt to K 2nd

7. Q to K 2nd would have compelled White to castle forthwith, and is therefore preferable.

8. Q to Kt 3rd	Castles
9. P to K R 4th	P to Kt 5th
10. Q B takes P	P takes Kt
11. P takes P	Q Kt to B 3rd
12. R to K Kt sq

Although White obtains a strong attack, the sacrifice of the piece was unsound, and he should, at all events, have prevented the exchange of his K B for the adverse Knight in this position.

12.	Kt to R 4th
13. Q to B 2nd	Kt takes B
14. Kt takes Kt	Kt to Kt 3rd
15. B to Kt 3rd	P to Q 4th
16. Kt to K 3rd	P takes P
17. P takes P	Kt takes P

This capture is evidently made to prevent the Pawn being advanced to R 7th—a move that might have been very troublesome at a later stage of the game.

18. Castles	Kt to B 6th
19. R to R sq	Q to Kt 4th
20. Q to K B 2nd	B to Kt 5th
21. K to Kt sq	P to K B 4th

Black has now repelled the attack, and with a piece in hand has a good defence.

22. Kt takes B	P takes Kt
23. Q to K 2nd	P to B 3rd
24. P to Q 5th	P takes P
25. Q R takes P	Q to Kt 3rd
26. Q to B 4th	Q R to K sq

All this is very interesting. Black sees that the discovered check is harmless, while he threatens Kt to Q 7th (ch), if the adverse Rook is moved from the Queen's file.

27. K to R sq	K to R 2nd
28. R to Q 7th	R takes P
29. Q to Q B 7th	K R to K sq
30. P to R 3rd	Kt to K 4th
31. R to Q 6th	Q to B 2nd
32. Q to B 5th	B to B sq
33. B to B 2nd	Kt to Q 6th

It would perhaps have been a shorter road to victory to play 33. B takes R, followed by 34. R to K 3rd: but the line of play adopted leads to a better finish.

34. Q to K Kt 5th	R to K 8th (ch)
35. B takes R	R takes B (ch)
36. R takes R	P takes Q
37. R takes Kt	B to B 4th
38. P to Q Kt 4th	B to B 7th
39. K R to Q sq	P to Kt 6th

Of course! White may capture the Queen if he likes to do so.

40. R to Q 7th	K to Kt 3rd
41. K R to Q 6th (ch)	Q to B 3rd
42. R to Q 8th	Q takes R
43. R takes Q (ch)	K to R 4th.

White resigned.

The eighth game in the match between Messrs. Mason and Potter, begun and adjourned on the 7th inst., was abandoned as drawn on the 9th, and the ninth game stands adjourned as we go to press, the score being—Potter, 2; Mason, 1; drawn games, 5. The number of adjourned games incidental to this match appears to have excited some surprise among our correspondents, several of whom have addressed us on the subject; it may therefore be explained that the adjournments are found necessary because, both players being engaged in business throughout the day, the games are not commenced until six o'clock in the evening. The match promises to be a remarkable one in respect of drawn games, or, in other words, the singular equality of the opposing forces.

The score in the match by correspondence between a number of amateurs representing England and the United States of America now stands—England, 22; America, 24; drawn games, 7. Mrs. Gilbert, of Hartford, Connecticut, has scored one game in very brilliant style against Mr. Gossip, of Colchester, but there are, we believe, three others pending between the same players, in which "the event has yet to name the winner." In our next issue we shall present our readers with a capital Partie occurring in this match between Mr. Coates, of Cheltenham, and Mr. Delmar, of Brooklyn.

A match is announced to be played by Mr. Delmar and Captain Mackenzie, the latter yielding the odds of pawn and move in four games, and playing on even terms in three, the player scoring the majority of the seven games to be the victor in the match.

Mr. T. Brassey, M.P., on Saturday distributed the prizes in connection with the Cambridge local examination at Eastbourne, and in the afternoon laid the foundation-stone of a new building for the Evangelising Society.

The judges appointed to examine the designs of improved cattle-trucks offered in competition for prizes given by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have awarded £100 to Mr. Gilbert Murray, of Derby, who will be entitled to a second premium of £100 as soon as he shall have induced a railway company to build fifty of his improved trucks and bring them into actual operation.

Mr. Greaves, whose decease we record, formerly a banker at Warwick, represented that town in Parliament from 1852 to 1865 and from 1868 to 1874, when he was defeated by Mr. Arthur Wellesley Peel. He married, in 1828, Anne, daughter and heir of John Hobbins, Esq., and widow of Thomas Ward, Esq., and was left a widower in 1862.

Edward Henry Sladen Banks, J.P., on the 6th inst., at Rye, Sussex, aged sixty-four. He was son of Lawrence Banks, Esq., of Boys Hall, Kent, by Sarah, his third wife, daughter of Joseph Sladen, Esq., of Ripple Court, Kent.

Frances Theodora, Dowager Countess of Morton, died on the 12th inst., at her residence in Brook-street, Grosvenor-square. She was the eldest daughter of the Right Hon. Sir George Henry Rose, of Sandhills, Hants, G.C.H., by his wife, Francis, daughter and co-heir of the late Mr. Thomas Duncombe, of Duncombe Park, Yorkshire, and was sister of Field-Marshal Lord Strathnairn, G.C.B., and of Sir William Rose, K.C.B., Clerk of the Parliaments. Her Ladyship had nearly completed her eighty-first year.

The ten days' grace allowed for payment of the second moiety of the call on the West of England Bank shareholders expired yesterday week. The amount received is nearly £120,000, making, with the first moiety, £300,000, or £100,000 short of the estimated deficiency.

At Chesterfield on Monday the Duke of Devonshire opened a hall, which has been raised in memory of George Stephenson, who spent the later years of his life in that town and was buried there. The hall is a handsome structure, erected at a cost of £13,000, and it is intended to apply it to scientific, literary, and educational purposes. It contains a valuable collection of pictures and other works of art. Subsequently there was a banquet at the Gaiety Theatre, the Duke presiding.

A strange sequel to a trial for attempted murder is reported. William Ballard was tried before Mr. Justice Hawkins, at Worcester Assizes, for attempting the life of his sweetheart, Susan Little, and afterwards his own. The Judge elicited on the trial that the girl was still willing to marry Ballard. Accordingly, next day the Judge released the prisoner, on the understanding that he would at once marry the girl, and last Saturday they were married at St. Mary Magdalene, Worcester, in the presence of a great crowd. The Judge, it is said, provided the ring, and the High Sheriff the special license.

Atcham Church, near Shrewsbury, was struck by lightning on Sunday during Divine service. Five members of the choir were injured. The congregation was greatly alarmed, and many rushed from the building. The roof of the church was damaged, but the square tower and flagstaff appeared to be uninjured.—Liverpool was also visited by the storm. The lightning struck the large cross on the Roman Catholic poor schools of St. Francis Xavier, Salisbury-street, completely shattering it. It fell, but no one was injured, the heavy rains keeping within doors the Sunday school scholars.

The arrivals of live cattle at Liverpool from the United States and Canada last week were slightly in excess of the preceding week, though of live sheep and fresh meat there was a falling off. The conveying steamers were the City of Berlin, with 1260 quarters of beef and 250 carcases of mutton; the Wisconsin, with 660 quarters of beef and 200 carcases of mutton; the Bohemian, with 641 quarters of beef; and the Helvetia, with 549 quarters of beef: being 3110 quarters of beef and 450 carcases of mutton. The steamers bringing live stock were the Pembroke, with 250 head of cattle and 1048 sheep; the Lord Gough, 129 cattle and 700 sheep; the Bohemian, 424 cattle; the Ganos, 988 sheep; the Teutonia, 323 cattle; and the Helvetia, 128 cattle: making the totals 1254 cattle and 2736 sheep.

BILIOUS ATTACKS.—In bilious people, and what are called bilious attacks, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when it is unable to do so sick headache is produced by a retention of bile in the blood. ENO'S FRUIT SALT exercises a simple but special action on the liver, by which the secretion of bile is regulated. In deficiency, therefore, of the excretive powers of the liver into the intestines, biliousness is caused, and, as a natural consequence, great sluggishness of the body and apathy of mind. In any case where the liver is sluggish ENO'S FRUIT SALT will increase its action by natural means, and thus prevent what is termed "the blues."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woe is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the CAPSULE is MARKED "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY AT ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S PATENT.

To use a vulgar expression, it needed to be "licked into shape." There was a sad absence of steadiness in the conduct of the measure, as, indeed, there was of the opposition made to some of its clauses; and there was, on the part of a few obstructionists, a systematic and almost insuperable process of delay which, but for the fore-mentioned causes, might have been easily overcome. Altogether, the passage of the Bill through the Commons gave rise to a series of incidents which were not very creditable to the character of any deliberative body, and which may yet bear fruit of an undesirable kind. No doubt, however, the measure as it went to the Lords was a much better one than as it was introduced to the Commons. It may call for future amendment, and experience in the practical working of it will doubtless suggest what such amendments should be. But, on the whole, as a piece of legislative work, it has not been accomplished before it was required; and it is fairly fitted to effect a considerable reform in the discipline and regulation of her Majesty's Army.

What other Legislative business will be completed during the next three weeks it is almost impossible to state beforehand. Several important measures have already been thrown overboard with a view of lightening the ship. The Bankruptcy Bill, shorn of its consolidating clauses, and consisting exclusively of such as profess to amend the present law, may, perhaps, obtain a place in the Statute Book. The Public Works Loans Bill is to be insisted upon by the Government, and the Indian Loans Bill will probably be pushed through Parliament. Then the Irish University Bill still has to run the gauntlet of discussion in the Commons, and will, perhaps, disclose a discrepancy of opinion such as it may prove impossible to smooth down within the present brief remainder of an almost wasted Session. There are other subjects which, albeit in the hands of private members, will claim and probably obtain discussion, besides a rather formidable remanet of the Estimates which must be got through. The House will therefore be under necessity to "work double tides," and it is to be feared that work done under such conditions is pretty sure to be done negligently.

The news from South Africa indicates the approaching close of the disastrous Zulu War. A great battle was fought on the 4th inst., and the victory was gained by Lord Chelmsford, within a few miles of Ulundi, the principal military kraal of the Sovereign. Things, therefore, are drawing near to a supreme crisis in that part of the world, and it is far from improbable that before Parliament rises tidings will have reached it of the termination of the contest. It is reported, indeed, that an army of 20,000 men was lost to Cetewayo in the neighbourhood of Ulundi. But it remains still uncertain whether the looked-for peace will have been secured by the late engagement. At any rate, there would appear to be strong likelihood that by this time our quarrel with the Zulu nation has been practically settled. Sir Garnet Wolseley, having been prevented by the raging surf from landing on the coast of Zululand, has returned to Natal, intending to join the army, now appointed to be under his command, by a tedious land journey. He will not take long in completing both the military and political task before him. There will remain only to pay the bill; and we fear it is too much to hope that it will not be a grievously heavy one. There is really nothing satisfactory to show for it. Neither the interest nor the honour of England called for the war, and it has been attended by a succession of misfortunes. Good, however, may eventually come out of what we all admit to be an evil. Still, the affair is one which the British public would fain forget, and which it will be glad to see closed. There seems, at last, to be a promising prospect that such may be the case, and we may express our earnest expectation that it will be speedily realised.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, went to Chiselhurst on Thursday week. Her Majesty drove from the railway station direct to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Chapel, where she was received by Earl Sydney and the Duc de Bassano, and was conducted by Monsignor Goddard to the temporary resting-place of the remains of the late lamented Prince Louis Napoleon, and placed flowers near the coffin. On leaving the Chapel the Queen and Princess drove to Camden House and visited the Empress Eugénie, returning after half an hour's stay to Windsor. Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Frederica of Hanover, the Prince of Leiningen, Earl and Countess Sydney, Lord Elphinstone, the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley, and Lieutenant-General Sir H. Ponsonby, were entertained by the Queen before her departure from Windsor for the Isle of Wight. Prince Lucien Bonaparte visited her Majesty, and the Earl of Beaconsfield had an audience of the Queen. Her Majesty also invested Lady Napier of Magdala (wife of General Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B.) with the Imperial order of the Crown of India.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left Windsor Castle for Osborne House on Saturday last. The journey was made over the customary route by the Great Western and the South-Western Railways, special arrangements having been made for the comfort and safety of the Royal travellers. Her Majesty was received at Gosport by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the chief naval and military officials in command. The Queen and the Princess crossed the Solent in her Majesty's yacht Alberta, Captain Thomson, and arrived at Osborne at one o'clock.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service at Osborne on Sunday, performed by the Rev. George Prothero

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1879.

The Proverb tells us that "The darkest hour precedes the dawn." Whether we have passed the darkest hour remains to be proved. We are not altogether without omens that prophesy—somewhat faintly and intermittently, it must be admitted—the near approach of more light. Even as it respects the weather, it is not by any means certain that we have not been carried through the crisis. The Meteorological Office seems puzzled. Science must draw its inferences from a sufficiently extended area of facts, and on this side of the Atlantic Ocean no such area can be obtained. We are constantly liable, therefore, to be baffled in our calculations by phenomena that lie outside of our ken, and our fairest prospects are often enough dashed by unexpected storms. Still, "it is a long lane which has no turning;" and one may hope, though one cannot prove, that we are coming to the end of it. "Oh, for a glimpse of steady sunlight!" is the aspiration that we breathe forth every morning as we rise, and the response which comes to us is in the form of monition, "Patience, courage!" What can one think? A three-days' gale of wind, a continuous fall of rain, rivers overflowing their banks, hay-crops flooded from the meadows, immense breadths of corn laid by blustering winds, and a pervading cold, or shall we call it chill, just when the fruits of the earth require heat to ripen them. How is it possible to stave off moral depression amid such discouraging environments? Well, but depression need not yet deepen into despair. For aught that can be made good to the contrary, we may be upon the very verge of a long period of fine weather. A week or two of "glorious sunshine" will put an entirely different aspect upon harvest prospects, and change the general gloom to equally general cheerfulness.

The Army Discipline and Regulation Bill has at length got beyond reach of the perils of legislation. It is an important measure, and one which, it may be hoped, will prove effective for its purpose. The first portion of it deals with persons subject to military law, and brings under that law, henceforth, camp followers and sutlers. The second relates to the punishment of military offences, reducing corporeal castigation to the lowest practicable point, inflicting the punishment of flogging only for offences committed during active service, and such as rendered the culprit liable to the sentence of death. And the last part of the bill affects the subject of enlistment and the transference of men from the Army to the Reserve. The passage of this measure through Committee in the House of Commons has been unusually slow. Indeed, the Bill may be described as the "pièce de résistance" of the Session. Various reasons have been assigned for this. It was introduced in a crude and ill-digested condition.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales visited the North London Collegiate and Camden Schools for Girls yesterday week, when her Royal Highness distributed the prizes to the pupils of the institution, and afterwards declared the new hall which has been erected there open. The ceremonial is described and illustrated in this week's issue. Their Royal Highness visited Prince Leopold at Buckingham Palace. The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway lunched with the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House. Their Royal Highnesses went to the Earl and Countess of Listowel's ball at Kingston House.

The Prince and Princess left town on Saturday last on a visit to the Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury at Hatfield House. The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and a large circle were present. The Marchioness of Salisbury had an afternoon party, and at dinner covers were laid for upwards of forty guests. The Prince and Princess returned to Marlborough House on Sunday evening.

Their Royal Highnesses left town last Monday on a visit to the Countess of Yarborough at Brocklesby Park, Lincolnshire, for the purpose of opening the Union Dock at Great Grimsby and of unveiling a statue which has been erected in the borough by Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., to the memory of the Prince Consort. The inauguration took place on Tuesday. The Prince and Princess, with their hostess and a distinguished party, left Brocklesby Hall at a quarter before twelve, and proceeded to the Brocklesby station of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, whence they travelled by special train to Great Grimsby. The Prince and Princess were received at the Grimsby town station by Sir Edward Watkin and several of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire directors, the general manager of the system, Mr. R. G. Underdown, and by the Mayor and Corporation of Grimsby. The Royal party, escorted by a troop of the Earl of Yarborough's Light Horse, proceeded in carriages from the railway station to the entrance of the new dock, the youthful Earl of Yarborough accompanying the Prince and Princess. Upon arriving at the new dock the Royal party proceeded on board the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company's steamer Manchester, and passed through the new dock to the Royal Dock, at the commencement of which the Prince Consort "assisted" thirty years since, and which was visited by the Queen and the Prince Consort, with their eldest three children, in October, 1854. The Prince having declared the new dock open, addresses from the Pelham Pillar Lodge and the St. Alban's Lodge of Freemasons, illuminated and bound in a handsome quarto volume, were presented to his Royal Highness by Major Smyth, Provincial Grand Master for Lincolnshire, to which the Prince returned a written reply. The Royal party disembarked from the Manchester on the east side of the Royal Dock, and were conveyed in a special train, which was drawn up alongside the landing-place, to the dock passenger station, whence they walked to the site of the statue of the Prince Consort, and witnessed the ceremony of the unveilment, after which the Prince repeated his thanks to Sir Edward Watkin for his thoughtful and generous gift. The Prince and Princess, with 270 other guests, were entertained at luncheon by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, presided over by Sir Edward Watkin, after which the Prince, in a graceful speech, concluded by saying, "I now call upon you to drink prosperity to our enterprise of Great Grimsby Docks, and I couple with it the name of our chairman, Sir Edward Watkin." The Royal party returned to Brocklesby Hall shortly after four o'clock. The town of Great Grimsby was en fête, and 6000 children were ranged to witness the Royal procession, and sang their welcome to the Prince and Princess. His Royal Highness reviewed the Yarborough Light Horse on Wednesday in Brocklesby Park.

The Prince and Princess have dined with Earl and Countess Spencer, and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Prince Alexander of Hesse (Cassell) have lunched with their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House.

Miss Geöbel has submitted to the Princess specimens of her works in wood carving.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have been to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, and to the Prince of Wales's Theatre. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have also been to the Royal Italian Opera. The Duchess of Connaught has fixed Aug. 2 for the presentation of new colours to the 12th East Suffolk Regiment. The ceremony will take place on Southsea-common.

NORTH LONDON COLLEGIATE GIRLS' SCHOOL.

Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Prince, her husband, went to Camden Town yesterday week (Friday) to open the new building of the North London Collegiate School for Girls, and to distribute the prizes to the scholars of this and of the Camden School. The new building is just behind the Camden-road station of the Midland Railway, which was decked with flags and flanked by riflemen. The guard of honour was of the 29th North Middlesex Volunteers, under Captain Wade.

The North London Collegiate School is an upper school, and the Camden School a lower school, both for girls. The upper school was founded by Miss Buss and her mother in 1849, became a recognised local institution in 1850, and was carried on by Miss Buss upwards of twenty years with a success which has given it a distinguished place in the English higher education of women. In 1870 Lord Lyttelton presided at a meeting in St. Pancras Vestry-Hall, in which the formation of the lower school (the Camden School) was resolved upon, and a trust was created to which the Collegiate School was conveyed and the Camden School was confided. The Endowed Schools Commissioners suggested that a portion of the Platt endowment, derived from property in St. Pancras and administered by the Brewers' Company, should be applied to provide buildings. The Charity Commissioners, with the concurrence of the Company, drew a scheme by which the schools were to receive £20,000 for buildings and a contingent endowment of £600 a year. The Prince of Wales became president and governor of the trust. The Clothworkers' Company gave their benefaction of £2500 mentioned below and one hundred guineas a year for scholarships. The Brewers' Company established, at a cost of £2000, four scholarships, tenable in the Collegiate School by girls from Dame Alice Owen's School, and lent £6000. Miss Ewart and other private subscribers gave large donations. The Charity Commissioners authorised a scheme propounded by the Brewers' Company (who nominate under the scheme half the board of governors) for the erection of buildings for the upper and lower schools to accommodate over 400 pupils each. The lower school was opened twelve months ago. The upper school was opened on Friday week by the Princess. It will cost £15,000, and has been erected, from the designs of Mr. E. C. Robins, by Messrs. Adamson. It is an adaptation of Queen Anne's style. The plan is to have class-rooms for thirty, each opening into the central hall, a spacious and lofty apartment, in which yesterday's ceremonial was held. The Clothworkers' Company have given £2500 towards the erection of this hall, and it is called "Clothworkers' Hall," to commemorate their generosity. It is of red brick and stone with pine deodo, a timber roof, and a handsome gallery supported by a colonnade of Mansfield stone piers and arches. Elsewhere are a cooking-school, kitchen, and science lecture-room, music-room, drawing school, and gymnasium. The pupils have presented an organ for the great hall, which was built, at a cost of £300, by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, of Soho; and on this fine instrument Mr. John Blockley, junior, chief professor of music in the schools, played during the afternoon the music of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Meyerbeer, Handel, Schumann, Rossini, and the Commemoration March, "Alexandra," composed by himself in honour of the visit of the Princess.

Their Royal Highnesses, who were accompanied by the Countess of Macclesfield, Lord Colville of Culross, Mr. Holzmann, in attendance on the Princess, and Lieutenant Clarke, Equerry-in-Waiting on the Prince, arrived punctually at 3.45, and were first conducted to a tent, in which the Princess presented the prizes to the junior pupils, those of the Camden School. Thence they proceeded to the platform in the hall. As the Princess entered the building she graciously accepted a bouquet of blush roses (Souvenir de Malmaison) and carnations from Miss Aitken. The hall was filled with 500 girls of the school and of a preparatory class, in summer toilettes of every tender shade, with nosegays in their hands. Behind sat their friends. The Princess was in black, relieved by a white fichu and red roses. Miss Buss was on the left of the Princess, the Bishop of Rochester on the right of the Prince. There were also present the Rev. William Rogers, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Mr. E. N. Buxton, the Rev. Llewelyn Davies, Canon Spence (Vicar of St. Pancras), and Mr. Kent and Mr. Seaton (churchwardens), Miss Ridley, Miss Chessar (of the London School Board), Rev. A. Buss (honorary clerk), Rev. Septimus Buss, the Master of the Clothworkers' Company (Mr. Edgar Horne), Mr. E. C. Robins, Mr. Charrington, Mr. Neate and Mr. White (Clothworkers' Company), Mr. Perkins and Mr. Worsley (Brewers' Company), Mrs. Burbury, Mrs. Armstead, Mr. W. T. Elliott (Merchant Taylors' Company), Mr. W. Danson, and many more.

After Luther's hymn had been sung, the Rev. Alfred Buss read the report, which gave the history of the schools and referred to the impetus their development received from the Schools Inquiry Commission in 1863. The report referred to distinctions won in the past year. Two of the girls were the successful competitors for two scholarships tenable at Girton College, Cambridge, for three years, one of £100, and one given by the Clothworkers' Company of 80 guineas a year. Two of the girls gained the gold and silver medals of the Apothecaries' Society for knowledge of botany, and a third extra prize was gained by a pupil of Camden School.

The Princess of Wales then distributed the prizes to about 150 young ladies of all ages, from students leaving to become graduates, or quasi-graduates of Cambridge and London, to little children in white with flaxen hair. Among the names most prominent on the list are:—Miss M. T. Meyer (scholar of Girton and Clothworkers' exhibitioner), Miss E. Aitken (Clothworkers' exhibitioner), Miss S. E. Mason (Gilchrist scholar), Miss A. M. C. Crowdy and Miss M. Shirley (third class English and mathematics in Cambridge Higher and Local Examination). Honours had been gained also from the College of Preceptors, the Backchurch examiners, the Christian Evidence Society, and the National Training School of Cookery. A past pupil (Miss J. S. Gill) had won a place at Cambridge equivalent to Senior Optimè in the Mathematical Tripos, another (Miss M. Boyle) had gained at the Sorbonne a diplôme d'équivalence au Bachelier-ès-lettres. Others took honours at London matriculation, (Miss E. A. Joscelyne, first class); at London University General Examination of Women (Miss F. E. Eves, special certificate of higher proficiency for botany; and at Cambridge Higher Local Examinations (Miss D. L. Davis, geology and botany; Miss A. W. Lane, arithmetic and English literature). Lady Hardwicke's prize for diligence was taken by Miss Aitken, Mrs. Newmarch's for English by Miss M. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Laing's for needlework by Miss Dicker, Lady Camden's for German by Miss E. A. Isaacs, Lady Dartmouth's for French by Miss J. M. Bishop. The Misses M. T. Meyer, E. E. Wood, J. Mein, E. Anderson, L. J. Benham, E. M. Childs, E. S. Collet, M. J. Webb, F. Richards, E. A. Jackson, E. A. Green, Webb, Miall, Snoxell, and Cassells also took prizes in the highest division. The prizes given by Miss Byrom for diligence, the Rev. B. G. Johns and Dr. Abbott for English composition, by Lord Dartmouth for domestic economy and the laws of health, certificates for needlework, music, political economy, Scripture, and swimming were also adjudged.

The Bishop of Rochester (Dr. A. W. Thorold, formerly Vicar of St. Pancras) moved the vote of thanks to the Prince and Princess, which was seconded by Mr. E. N. Buxton. His Royal Highness acknowledged this vote, when carried by acclamation, and said it was gratifying to find that a school founded on such good principles was answering so well; it was the mother school of all those high-class girls' schools now cropping up in this country, which were sure to do a great deal of good. He asked Miss Buss, in the name of the Princess, for an extra week's holiday, which was at once granted, to the great delight of all the girls.

The second of the new 100-ton guns was proved at Woolwich on Monday with a satisfactory result.

The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Nineveh, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in April.

Mr. James W. Benson, of Old Bond-street and Ludgate-hill, has been appointed jeweller and watchmaker in ordinary to her Majesty.

The United Presbyterian Synod on Tuesday, by a large majority, suspended the Rev. David Macrae, of Gourock, for unorthodox views with regard to everlasting punishment.

The Rev. Professor Watts, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church, has appointed the 30th inst. as a day of general humiliation and prayer on account of the continued depression of trade and agriculture.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has awarded the Flag Officers' good service pension of £300 a year to Admiral George G. Wellesley, C.B., void by the promotion of Sir Thomas Symonds to the rank of Admiral of the Fleet.

The arrivals of live stock and fresh meat from Canada and the United States during the past week showed an increase over those of the previous week, more particularly with regard to sheep.

The Field-Marshal Commanding on Tuesday witnessed a sham fight at Aldershott, in which about 9000 men took part. The troops were divided into two opposing forces, the southern division being under General Cameron, and the northern under General Pakenham.

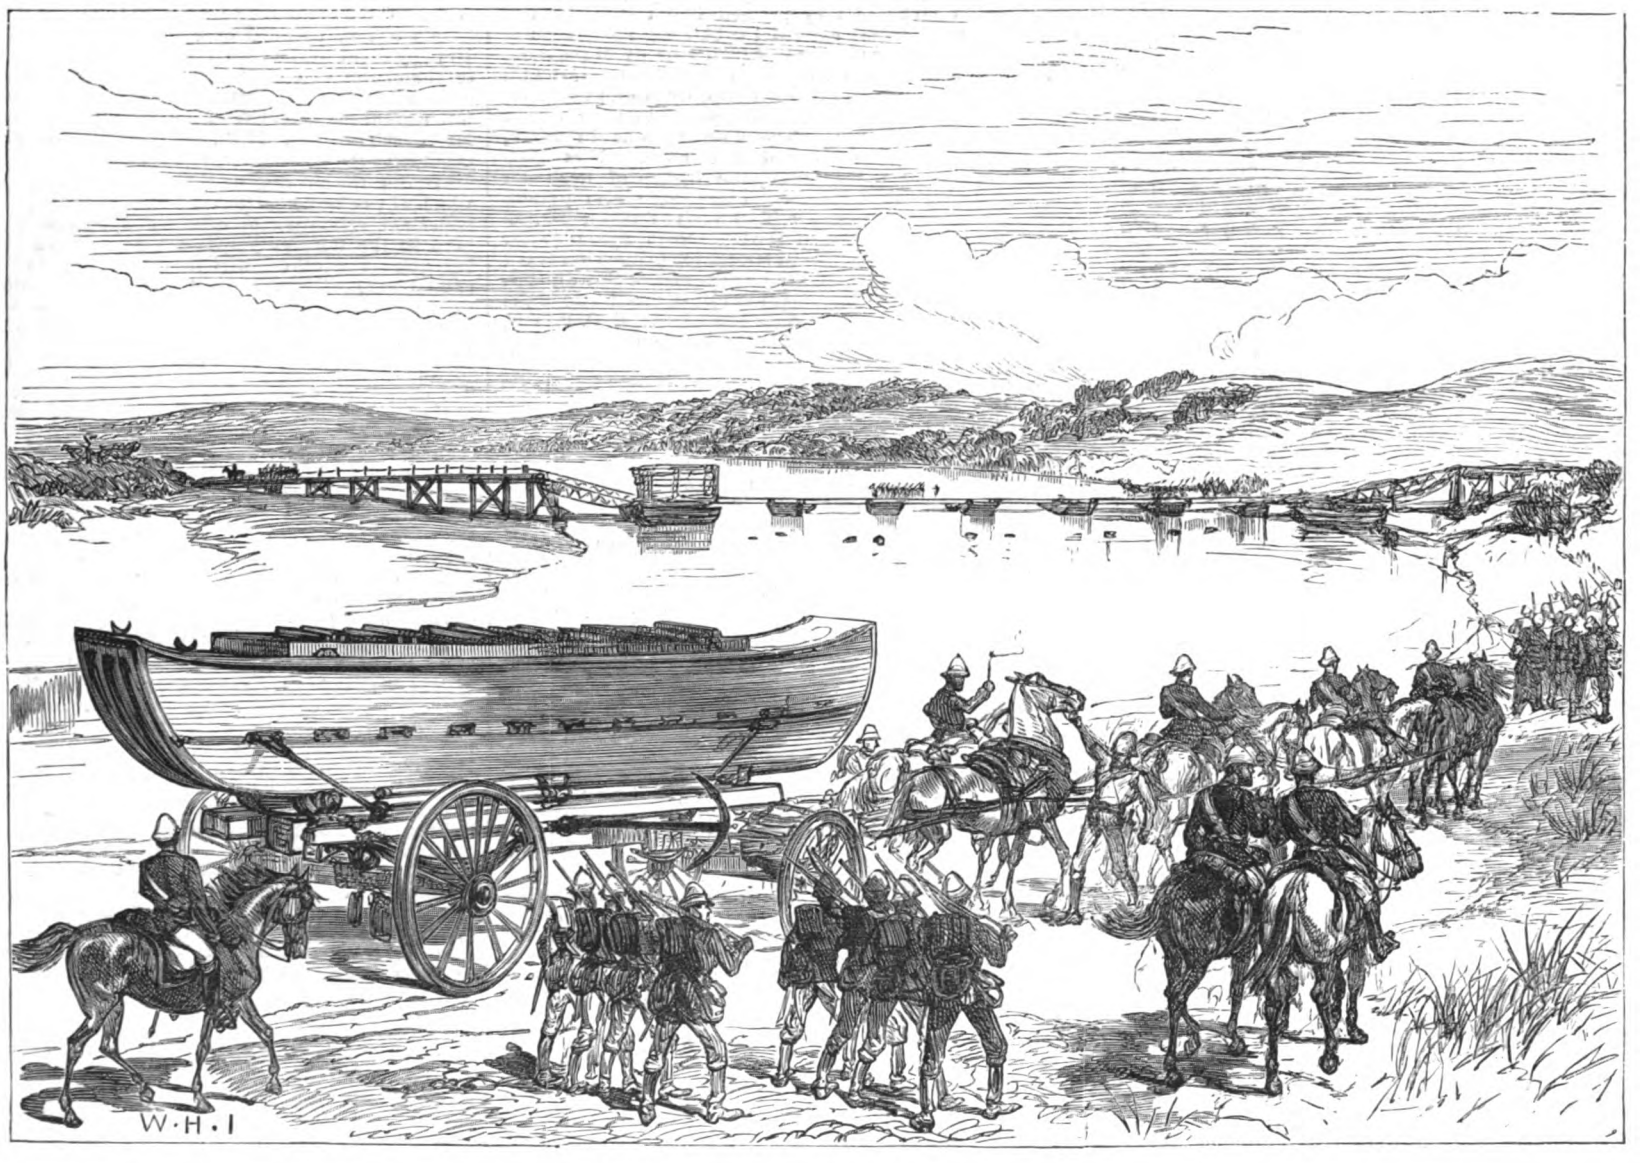
The trial heat for the Wingfield Sculls took place on Wednesday afternoon from Putney to Mortlake, the two competitors being C. G. White, of the Pembroke Rowing Club, Dublin, and J. Lowndes, of Hertford College, Oxford. Mr. Lowndes won by two lengths, and was to row Mr. F. L. Playford, of the London Rowing Club, on Friday.

Kingstown Regatta began on Tuesday morning, and, the weather being favourable, there were large numbers of visitors. The match for her Majesty's Cup presented to the Royal Alfred Club was won by Mr. Stanley's cutter Formosa; the Number One Champion Cup being carried off by Commodore Rowley's yawl Latona.

The Manx Legislature has received a report from a Committee which has arranged with her Majesty's Government some points of difference that have existed for some time between the insular and the Imperial authorities. The result is extremely satisfactory to the island. It includes the grant of a daily mail throughout the year, Sundays excepted.

The new line of railway from Bettws-y-coed to Festiniog, connecting the London and North-Western system with the great slate-producing district of Merionethshire, was opened for passenger traffic on Tuesday morning. Its length is about eleven miles, and it has cost upwards of £500,000, half that amount being expended on a tunnel two miles long.

A meeting, presided over by Mr. R. Leake, was held on Monday night in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, in support of the claims of Greece. Among the speakers were the Earl of Rosebery and Mr. Arthur Arnold (who attended as a deputation from the executive of the Greek Committee in London), Mr. Jacob Bright, M.P., Mr. Slagg, one of the Liberal candidates for Manchester, and others.



During the meeting of the British Association at Sheffield, which will be held near the close of next month, there will be an important exhibition of scientific apparatus and specimens, both in the temporary museum and at one of the soirées. Inventors and others who may have objects of interest to exhibit would, therefore, do well to communicate at once with the local secretaries at Sheffield, as this will be an exceedingly favourable opportunity of calling the attention of the scientific world to their discoveries.

The summer fête of the Earlswood Asylum took place on Tuesday, under the patronage of a large number of the friends of the institution. The report of the Commissioners in Lunacy made with regard to the asylum is everything that could be desired, both as regards the ability of the management and the state of the building and the inmates. Brushmaking has lately been added to the number of the trades, but tailoring and shoemaking are the most successful, all or nearly all of the work required in the asylum in these departments being done in the shops. With regard to Tuesday's proceedings, all that could be done to give pleasure to the inmates of the asylum and their friends had been attended to, and every kind of amusement provided. The whole proceedings were under the superintendence of Mr. William Nicholas, the secretary, and Mr. J. Beveridge Spence, the assistant medical officer.

The Wesleyan Conference was opened on Tuesday morning in the Islington Chapel, Birmingham, under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. Rigg. A most unusual announcement was made by the secretary, that there was no vacancy in the Legal Hundred caused by death. The Rev. Benjamin Gregory was elected President of the Conference; and the Rev. Marmaduke Osborn secretary. It was decided to hold the next Conference in London. At an evening sitting the representatives from other Conferences were introduced; and the Rev. Wesley Gerard delivered an address on the work of Wesleyan Methodism in Ireland, Dr. Punshon on the work in France, and Dr. Campbell (a coloured Bishop from the African Methodist Episcopal Church) advocated the cause of the negro race, and the spread of Methodism among them.—A scheme of retrenchment has been adopted by the committee of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society. There is to be a reduction of the grants made to districts everywhere. Strictly missionary districts are to be subjected to a reduction of 5 per cent, and those districts which are of a more pastoral character to a reduction of 10 per cent. This course has become necessary owing to the enlargement of the mission field, and to the falling off, to the extent of many thousand pounds, in the annual income of the society.

THE ZULU WAR.

A great battle has been fought by Lord Chelmsford at Ulundi, the capital of the Zulu kingdom; and it is to be hoped that the easy victory he has gained, with the small loss of ten killed—one of them an officer—and fifty-three wounded on our side, may put an end to this hitherto disastrous and inglorious, as well as needless and profitless war. The following is Lord Chelmsford's despatch, forwarded by Major-General the Hon. H. Clifford to the Secretary of State for War:—

"July 4.—Cetewayo not having complied with my demands by noon yesterday, July 3, and having fired heavily on the troops at water, I returned the 114 cattle he had sent in, and ordered a reconnaissance to be made by the mounted force under Colonel Baker. This was effectually made, and caused the Zulu army to advance and show itself. This morning a force, under my command, consisting of the 2nd Division, under Major-General Newdigate, numbering 1870 Europeans, 550 natives, and eight guns, and the flying column under Brigadier-General Wood, numbering 2192 Europeans and 573 natives, four guns, and two Gatlings, crossed the Umvolosi river at 6.15, and marching in a hollow square with the ammunition and intrenching tool carts, and bearer company in its centre, reached an excellent position between Enadweng and Ulundi, about half-past eight. This had been observed by Colonel Buller the day before. Our fortified camp on the right bank of the Umvolosi was left with a garrison of about 9000 Europeans, 250 natives, and one Gatling gun, under Colonel Bellairs. Soon after half-past seven the Zulu army was seen leaving its bivouacs and advancing on every side. The engagement was shortly after commenced by the mounted men. By nine o'clock the attack was fully developed; at half-past nine the enemy wavered. The 17th Lancers, followed by the remainder of the mounted men, attacked them, and a general rout ensued. The prisoners state Cetewayo was personally commanding, and had made all the arrangements himself, and that he witnessed the fight from Lickazi Kraal, and that twelve regiments took part in it. If so, 20,000 men attacked us. It is impossible to estimate with any correctness the loss of the enemy, owing to the extent of the country over which they attacked and retreated, but it could not have been less, I consider, than 1000 killed. At noon Ulundi was in flames, and during the day all military kraals of the Zulu army and in the valley of the Umvolusi were destroyed.

"At two p.m. the return march to the camp of the column commenced. The behaviour of the troops under my command was extremely satisfactory. Their steadiness under a complete belt of fire was remarkable. The dash and enterprise of the mounted branches were all that could be wished, and the fire of the artillery very good.

"A portion of the Zulu forces approached our fortified camp, and at one time threatened to attack it."

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES'S REPORT OF THE BATTLE.

Mr. Archibald Forbes (who, as stated in Sir Bartle Frere's despatch, rode with the news in fifteen hours to Landsman's Drift) sent to the Daily News the following graphic telegrams describing the reconnaissance on July 3 and the decisive repulse of the Zulus on the following day:—

CAMP, UMVOLOOSI RIVER, July 3.

The Zulus took no advantage of the grace granted to them until midday to-day. We until then remained supine on the hither bank. Soon after midday Colonel Buller took out his Irregular Horse on a reconnaissance, to support which guns were moved out in front of the camp. All the morning Zulu stragglers from the rocky hillock on the opposite side of the river were firing at us. One man was wounded. This hillock was shelled while Buller's men crossed to its right, lower down the stream, bent to the left, took the hillock in reverse, and chased the Zulus, who ran into a military kraal named Delanyo, shooting several. Sweeping round to the left of this kraal, and leaving a detachment to cover the retreat by holding the hillock in the rear, the horsemen galloped across the open towards a larger kraal named Nondjueno, about 200 Zulus retiring before them. No more were visible, and an easy success seemed awaiting Buller as he galloped by the Nondjueno kraal and headed straight on Ulundi, but a deep hollow intervened. The body he was pursuing was merely a decoy. Suddenly from a hollow sprang up a long line of Zulus, 2000 strong, confronting him in front and flank. He held back, but frequently turned at bay. Meanwhile the whole plain had suddenly sprung into life. Quite 10,000 Zulus closed on his lines of retreat, intent upon cutting him off. He made good his retreat, fighting all but hand to hand, with a loss of three wounded. Lord William Beresford greatly distinguished himself, killing the Zulus with his sabre in single combat, and rescuing a wounded sergeant from under a heavy fire. I understand that Lord William Beresford will be recommended for the Victoria Cross. The Zulus were much elated by Buller's retreat. The whole force crosses the river to-morrow, intent upon penetrating to Ulundi. The 24th Regiment remains to garrison the laager. We shall probably fight our way in and out of Ulundi.

July 4.

At daybreak this morning the whole force was waiting for the order to advance again. Buller's Horse, to the front, crossed above and below the hillock, gained it, and found the country abandoned. The whole force passed the drift and through the bush clear of the Delanyo kraal. The formation consisted of a great square. The 80th formed the front; the 90th and 94th the left face; the 94th the rear; the 58th and 13th the right face. Inside, ready for action, were the Artillery, the Engineers, the Natives, &c. We had passed the Nondjueno kraal, and all was quiet as yet. The enemy was visible in one considerable straggling column moving parallel with us. Another was crowning and descending the eminence on the left rear, towards Nondjueno. Another was visible fitfully in various directions on our left. A fourth great mass was moving down on the right from Ulundi. It was impossible to tell how many lay in the dongas on and about the direct front. Buller was continually stirring them up, and a brisk fire was exchanged. The Zulus began to close on us on all sides. The guns were moved out on their flanks and into action. Buller's Horse resisted as long as possible, and then galloped back into square. In a short space of time the guns alone were in action; but, the Zulus coming on swiftly, the Infantry opened fire first, the closest on our right front. The artillery practice was beautiful, but it failed to daunt the Zulus, who rushed into the Nondjueno kraal, which had not been burnt, utilising the cover. Thence men with white shields streamed with great daring against the right and rear of the square, where were two companies of the 21st, and two nine-pounders. The Zulus dashed with great bravery into close quarters amidst the deadly hail of the Martini bullets and volleys of canister, and stubbornly assailed us on all four faces of our square, which stood like a rock. The whole affair was in a small compass, which made it seem more animated. The Zulus fired half Martini and half round and jagged bullets, which rent the air above our soldiers, who observed a stern purposeful silence. At the first shell fired, at 9.30, there rose a mighty cheer from the right flank and rear, the enemy giving way. A responding cheer came from the left; and then the front square opened to emit the Lancers and Buller's Horsemen, who burst like a torrent upon the broken enemy. The Lancers dashed towards the rear, caught a number of men in the long grass, and cut them down with their sabres and lances. Several officers of the Lancers killed four Zulus each. Two received assegai wounds. Captain Wyatt Edgell was killed, and two officers were slightly wounded. The British cavalry effectually vindicated its reputation. The enemy were driven widely distant. Their dead lay thick all round the square, most of them facing the 21st. I estimate that 400 Zulus lay dead. After a slight halt, the cavalry moved to the front and burnt Ulundi and the neighbouring military kraals. The whole force advanced close to Ulundi, and halted to eat. About two o'clock the force marched back to laager. The success of the day is unquestionable. Its bearing on the conclusion of peace is not clear. It is estimated that about 10,000 Zulus were engaged. Our loss was ten killed and about fifty wounded, exclusive of natives.

THE KILLED.

Lord Chelmsford's telegram concluded with the lists of killed and wounded, the former of which we subjoin:—

Second Division: Captain Wyatt-Edgell; Farrier-Sergeant Taylor, 17th Lancers; Corporal Tompkinson; Private Coates, 58th Regiment; Private Kent, 94th Regiment; Trooper Silona, Shepstone's Horse. Flying Column: Corporal Carter, R.A.; Bugler J. Burnes; Private W. Dirdley, 13th Regiment; Private Floyd, 80th Regiment; Trooper Jones, K.N. (sic) Horse.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE ZULU WAR.

We present several Illustrations—one of which, drawn by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist, represents the funeral parade at the Itelezi Ridge Camp on June 2, with Lieutenant-General Lord Chelmsford and his staff officers walking behind the gun-carriage which served for the bier of the Prince Imperial, whose body had been found that morning. The Roman Catholic priest, the Rev. Father Bellow, follows the bier closely. The body is covered with the tricolour flag. Besides Lord Chelmsford and his staff, as mourners, walks a Frenchman, M. Deléage, correspondent of the Paris Figaro. General Newdigate, commanding the 2nd Division of the Army in South Africa, with the officers of his staff, is seen on horse-back, in the background, saluting the funeral procession. We have been reminded of an accidental mistake in the first hasty account of the Prince Imperial's death. It is to be observed that Lieutenant Carey and Colonel Harrison, respectively the Deputy Assistant and the Assistant-Quartermaster General, belonged to the Head-quarters Staff of the Commander-in-Chief—not to General Newdigate's Divisional Staff.

Our Correspondent on the Lower Tugela, writing on June 3, gives the following account of a ride into the enemy's country, and a visit to the battle-field of Gingihlovo:—"The main road from Fort Pearson to Fort Crealock is perfectly free from the enemy. Fort Crealock lies thirteen miles from the Lower Tugela, and overlooks the banks of the Amatikulu. A short ride from there takes you to the battle-field of Gingihlovo. This lies to the left of the main road going in the direction of Fort Chelmsford. One of Lonsdale's Horse volunteered to accompany me, but was refused permission, as strict orders had been given that nobody was to be allowed to be further than a mile from camp. Luckily, an officer of the 91st Highlanders was going for a ride in the afternoon, and we started on our expedition to the battle-field. Of course we kept our eyes open as we jogged along, especially as only the week before this same officer was stalked by two Zulus, who glided like panthers through the long grass, and came unpleasantly near before they were seen. Some men of the Native Contingent, who were luckily not far off, thoroughly scoured the bush, where they were again sighted, but managed to escape. Just as we came to the road which turns off from the main track we overtook two of the Native Horse, and they volunteered to accompany us.

"A sharp canter of ten minutes brought us to the Laager, which is still covered with débris. A great many Zulu shields are scattered about the field; any heap which gives the slightest covering is a sure find. The tombstones of Lieutenant Johnstone and some men of the 99th, and that of Colonel Northey, which lies close to them, were rapidly sketched. These were in a good state of preservation; the wooden fencing around Colonel Northey's tomb has a rustic aspect, and the gravestone looks solemn and impressive, standing alone in the centre of this dreary plain. No dead bodies were to be seen, but I was told that they were lying in the surrounding bush. Luckily, no Zulus made their appearance; they swarm in the hills opposite, but perhaps our numbers were not sufficient to tempt them from their lurking-place. At any rate, a sharp trot would soon have brought us out of their reach.

"On our return to Fort Crealock we heard the alarm sounded. My friend leaped off his horse and rushed into the fort. In less than five minutes all the four faces of the fort were lined with men, two deep. The Native Contingent seemed perfectly happy, thus protected, squatting in the centre of the fort. A perfect stillness reigned during fifteen minutes. It had a peculiar effect to see so many men, with not a whisper to be heard among them. The setting of the sun heightened the picture still more. When the tattoo was sounded, a sudden transformation took place. What had seemed statues, were now animated with life and motion. The natives, as they marched to their own huts, uttered unearthly sounds.

"A neighbouring hill, a mile and a quarter distant, on which a vidette is stationed, is connected with the fort by a telephone. It is the first time that instrument has been used in warfare. It is of the greatest service, as voices are easily recognised by the sound. The telegraph has been laid between Fort Pearson and Fort Crealock, and the posts for it have been fixed nearly up to Fort Chelmsford.

"The movement of the 1st Division will be a slow one; the first steps will be to cover the landing-point at Port Durnford, and to build a pontoon bridge across the Umhlatosi river. These will of necessity be slow operations, but it is well to take such steps that another disaster may practically be impossible. This 'haphazard' war is a slow and tedious one, disliked both by officers and men. The general desire is for a successful termination of it this year, as the outcome of our vast preparations.

"There are eight hundred men hors de combat from the 1st Division. This is a big number, out of a total force of less than six thousand. If the present rate of sickness continues there will be no field officers left at the disposal of the General. Brigadier Clark is now laid up with fever. Yellow jaundice has lately appeared among the troops. A great deal of the sickness may be ascribed to the effluvia which arises from the carcases of oxen in different stages of decomposition. These lie on the road where the troopers have to escort the convoys, and at every hundred yards this horrible atmosphere has to be breathed. If detachments of mounted men could have been told off to drag the carcases a reasonable distance from the road, this would have greatly lessened the evil.

"The rain which has been long expected has at last come down. The grass, lately burnt up, will now soon change its arid aspect. Already green shoots are appearing. The three-days' rain did not flood the rivers to any extent; at present they are easily fordable on horseback. The huts at Fort Pearson, for the reception of the sick, are being rapidly run up. Four are already completed; they are built of reeds, and will be whitewashed inside. These huts will be a great boon to the sick; they have the advantage of being more comfortable and healthy than canvas tents. While the Engineers were cutting reeds from a lonely swamp, Mr. Dickens, the proprietor, came up and said that he would send in a claim against the British Government for damage. He has already asked for compensation for loss of personal convenience. But he totally ignores that, if it were not for our troops, the Zulus would cross the river and burn his house, taking with them his cattle and all his moveable property. In pleasant contrast to such behaviour is the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Cooley, in attending to the wants of the patients at Hirwin Hospital. They have devoted themselves entirely to the charitable work, and they deserve the thanks of every British soldier.

"Two months' provisions have now been accumulated at Fort Chelmsford, and a movement in advance will take place at the beginning of next week. The inaction has caused great complaints among the men, but the transport difficulty alone stops the onward march of the British soldier.

"The two Zulu emissaries, who made their appearance at Fort Chelmsford, did not come direct from Cetewayo, but only with his sanction. The chiefs had brought pressure upon the King to allow them to make overtures for peace. Shortly after, Usumquinto joined them, sent from the King himself. He was instructed to tell the white men that the King was willing to accede to any terms, if the white men would only retire across the Tugela, and the agreement should be made on the banks of that river. John Dunn was sent by the Major-General with a message asking, if the King wanted peace, why was he gathering an impi to fight against General Wood? He was told that, in future, he must send his peace messengers to Lord Chelmsford, as the Major-General was there only to fight."

We have engraved one of this correspondent's sketches. It shows a section of the trestle-and-pontoon bridge recently constructed by the Royal Engineers over the Lower Tugela, being conveyed by a team of eight horses, with an escort of soldiers, to the place on the river-banks where it will be launched for an additional component part of the structure across the water. The Lower Tugela, as most of our readers are aware, is the frontier stream dividing the British territory of Natal from Cetewayo's Kingdom of Zululand. The other Illustrations presented in this Number are mostly contributed by Mr. Melton Prior in his sojourn at the different stations and head-quarters of the Army during this campaign. Such incidents as the arrival of news at a camp, or the study of topography in maps spread before the consulting party of officers, must often have come before his observation. The scene on the march to Ulundi, where the General and his staff draw rein and stop for a minute, while some the natives are questioned about the route to be pursued, forms an effective subject for our larger Engraving.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

M. Jules Simon was yesterday week elected, by five votes to four, President of the Committee of the Senate on the Ferry Educational Bill. Both Chambers met on Saturday. The Senate, by 153 votes to 116, adopted the bill relating to the return of the Legislature to Paris, together with the amendment voted by the Chamber conferring upon the presidents of the two Houses the right of requisitioning the assistance of an armed force without the necessity of a previous application to the Minister of War. The Chamber of Deputies, after voting a credit of 35,000f. for the Munich Art-Exhibition, passed, by 363 votes to 166, the Bill of M. Jules Ferry remodelling the Supreme Council of Education. On Monday the Chamber adopted the Navy estimates. The House then began the discussion of the Government Bill authorising the prolongation of the existing treaties of commerce until Jan. 1, 1880. M. Keller moved as an amendment that the treaties should remain in force until March 1, 1880, and, after urgency had been declared for the Bill, the Chamber adjourned the debate. The Chamber agreed on Tuesday, without a regular division, to the bill empowering the Government to prolong commercial treaties till six months after the passing of the new general tariff, and the bill was at once sent up to the Senate, where urgency was voted. M. Keller proposed March 1, 1880, on the ground that a fixed date was preferable, and that otherwise the treaties might go on till the end of next year. M. Keller strongly condemned the policy of prolonging the treaties. M. Tirard, Minister of Commerce, in his reply, said that a country which showed every year a surplus of 100,000,000f. of revenue was not in such a deplorable position as M. Keller had described, and spoke warmly in favour of free trade.

Speaking on Sunday last, on the occasion of the distribution of prizes to the successful scholars of the Association Polytechnique, M. Jules Ferry strongly defended the University of France from the various animadversions which had for so many years been directed against it, and stated that its admirable influence had been annihilated by the union of clericalism and despotism which prevailed in 1850.

Prince Jérôme Napoleon on the 17th received at his residence in Paris a deputation from the Bonapartists of several departments, to whom he stated that, as head of the Bonaparte family and chief of the dynasty, he would not fail to fulfil his duties, but he must be allowed to choose the day and hour. "As to myself," he said, "I shall lend myself to no intrigue which may tend to place this House in contradiction with its revolutionary origin." The Republic was the regular and legal Government of the country, and though they might not sympathise with it, yet it was entitled to their esteem. A meeting of Bonapartists held in Paris last Sunday adopted a resolution declaring that by the death of Prince Louis Napoleon Prince Jérôme Napoleon becomes the head of the Bonaparte family.

ITALY.

The chamber of deputies on the 17th again adopted the bill for the abolition of the grist tax, providing that the tax shall cease altogether in 1884. Signor Sella condemned the resolution as a "leap in the dark." Signor Depretis voted with Signor Cairoli. Signor Cairoli, in presenting the new Italian Cabinet to the Chamber, said that the country needed a long period of peace and industry; that the Ministry would devote themselves exclusively to questions of internal interest, in conformity with which their foreign policy would be framed. On Saturday the Chamber of Deputies unanimously adopted the chief clause of the bill relating to cereals of an inferior description, and then agreed by 138 votes against 67 to the gradual reduction of the tax upon superior cereals. The bill concerning the duty on alcohol was also passed. There was a long discussion on Monday in the Chamber on the estimates of the Minister for Foreign Affairs. In the course of the debate, Signor Depretis said that the Italian Government always acted in a spirit of friendship and sympathy towards Greece, but could not at the present time make a statement on the Greek question, because all foreign Governments had left it in the hands of their representatives, and were bound to secrecy, as upon some points they were not yet unanimous. Signor Cairoli said that in the difference between Greece and Turkey the Government would observe the article of the Treaty of Berlin relating to the Greek question. With regard to the Egyptian question, the Government must be reserved in the matter, but the official documents would prove that the Ministers had protected Italian interests against the preponderance of other Governments in Egypt. An exchange of views was proceeding between Italy and the other Powers, and no steps would be taken for the regulation of the Egyptian finances except by the common action of the Powers. Ultimately the Chamber voted the Foreign Affairs Estimates; and several other bills, including one approving the convention for the purchase of the Roman railways, were adopted.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William arrived at Gastein on Tuesday evening, and met with a hearty reception from the visitors at the baths. His Majesty appeared to be in excellent health.

Prince William of Prussia, the son of the German Crown Prince, will start upon a tour in the East in the long university vacation.

A telegram from Berlin states that the Emperor William has substantially approved the sentence of the second court-martial in the case of the loss of the Grosser Kurfürst. It is reported that the principal persons accused are sentenced to a long term of imprisonment in a fortress.

The election to the German Reichstag for Breslau of Herr Hasenclever, a Social Democratic agitator, is being much discussed by the German press. At the first poll, a fortnight ago, 5682 electors of the industrial quarter of Breslau voted for the Liberal candidate, Dr. Leonhard, a Berlin Bureaucrat; 5415 for the Socialist, Hasenclever; and 2933 for Dr. Hagen, the Clerico-Conservative champion. No absolute majority, however, being thus obtained, a second ballot was necessary between the first two, and the Social Democrat was returned with nearly 1200 votes more than his opponent.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor of Austria left Vienna on Sunday night for Ischl for ten days' chamois shooting. In the course of the day a Cabinet Council was held, in which the Hungarian Minister-President and the Minister of Finance took part. The departure of his Majesty and of Dr. Stremayer, Count Taafe, and Baron Pretis, the three leading men of the Austrian Cabinet, is taken as an indication that the question of the reconstitution of the Ministry has been deferred.

Baron I. de Horst, Minister for the Defence of the Country, has been elected to represent the district of Bukowina in the Reicherath.

RUSSIA.

General Gourko, the temporary Governor of St. Petersburg, has issued an order rendering the proprietors and tenants of houses in which secret printing presses are discovered answerable for the illegality, and stating that their premises will be closed by the authorities.

The St. Petersburg Vedomosti, referring to the Russian official disclaimers of an intention to advance on Merv, says that General Lazareff, though not ordered to attack Merv, may, by the necessities of the campaign, be compelled to take it. Were Merv to remain untouched the Turkomans would hardly fulfil whatever obligations they might be forced to accept.

A destructive fire occurred at Nijni Novgorod last Saturday. Seventeen persons were killed by an explosion of combustible materials in one of the shops burned, and the charred remains of four other persons were found in the ruins.

TURKEY.

Kheredine Pasha on the 17th had an interview of two hours' duration with the Sultan, in the course of which he again tendered his resignation, which the Sultan refused to accept. News was received at Vienna on Monday from Constantinople that the Ministerial crisis was over, the Sultan having accepted the programme of Kheredine Pasha. A Constantinople telegram dated Monday evening, however, says that the Grand Vizier had an audience of the Sultan of three hours' duration on Monday to discuss the difficulties which have given rise to the present crisis; but, notwithstanding the protracted character of the interview, no arrangement was arrived at on the points at issue. On the contrary, fresh differences of opinion arose between his Majesty and Kheredine Pasha.

The Imperial firman formally appointing Tewfik Pasha Khedive of Egypt has been drawn up and submitted to the Sultan. According to a Constantinople telegram, it confirms all the privileges granted to Ismail Pasha, with the exception of the right to conclude treaties. The firman will shortly be communicated, though not in an official manner, to the British and French Ambassadors.

A claim for £2,000,000 (Egyptian) has been presented by the Porte to the Egyptian Government for alleged arrears of the Egyptian tribute; against this the Egyptian Government claims a set-off for arms and ammunition supplied during the late war. An endeavour to arrange the matter is being made by the Consuls-General of the Powers.

The new Khedive arrived on the 17th at Cairo from Alexandria, and received a hearty welcome from the European and Arab population. The town was decorated, and salutes were exchanged between the fort and the English war-vessel in the harbour. At night the ships in the harbour, the public buildings, and the private houses were illuminated. Next day the illuminations and fireworks were repeated; and on Saturday there were a Venetian fête and fireworks in the harbour.

AMERICA.

Mr. Sherman, the Secretary of the Treasury, in a speech delivered at Boston on Tuesday, advocated a sound currency, and declared that an untarnished credit was indispensable to the vast commerce and trade of the country. He urged the cultivation of a broad national feeling, and the protection o the rights of all classes, which he regretted to say were not maintained in all parts of the country.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

The Wimbledon Meeting of 1879 will henceforth be remembered by meteorologists as the wettest of the wet gatherings of the National Rifle Association, while volunteer crack shots will mention 1879 as "Taylor's year," Corporal Taylor, of the 47th Lancashire, having on Tuesday earned the enviable distinction of winning the Queen's Prize with the excellent score of 83 at the last three ranges. High scoring has prevailed throughout in all competitions. In the first stage of the Queen's the silver medal and badge of the Association, with £60 in money, were carried off by Quartermaster Macdonald, of the 10th Forfar, who, having marked 33 at 200 yards and 30 at 500 yards, put on another 33 at 600 yards, making the unprecedented aggregate of 96, one point more than was counted by Private Lowe, of the 22nd Middlesex, who was at the head of the "Sixty" last year. The rainy weather and saturated nature of the ground rendered the shooting in the final stage on Tuesday far from agreeable. This last stage was shot with the Government Martini-Henry rifle, at 800, 900, and 1000 yards, seven shots at each range, the competition being restricted to the sixty making the best scores in the first stage, the prize being £250 in money, the gift of her Majesty the Queen, the winner taking also the gold medal and the gold badge of the National Rifle Association. At the 800 yards' range, Quartermaster-Sergeant Taylor, of the 10th Gloucester, and Corporal Roberts, of the Hon. Artillery Company, made 30 each, Private Kydd, of the 5th Forfar, coming next with 28. Corporal Taylor, of the 47th Lancashire, made 29. Of the three Scotch favourites, Private Rae, of the 1st Stirling, the winner of the Queen's Prize of last year, made 27; Private M'Vittie, of the 7th Dumfries, made 19; and Lieutenant M'Kerrell, of the London Scottish, made the same score. At the 900 yards' range, Corporal Taylor, of the 47th Lancashire, at once came to the front with 27, making his aggregate score at the two ranges 55. At the 1000 yards' range Corporal Taylor made another 28, winning the Queen's Prize with a total score of 83, five points more than it was won by last year, and nine points higher than made by any of the other competitors, Private Kydd, of the 5th Forfar, taking second place with a score of 74. Directly the last shot was fired three cheers were given for the winner, who was seized and hoisted on to the shoulders of some of his brother Volunteers, and congratulated in the usual hospitable manner by the President, and in the camp of the Victorias. Corporal Taylor, in responding, said he was glad that the Queen's Prize had been won this year by England and for the second time by Lancashire.

The Battalion Sweepstakes connected with the Queen's was decided by the aggregate scores of the six highest scorers of the battalion in the first stage in order of merit. The following are the winners:—

The shooting for the Prince of Wales's Prize was brought to a close early on Saturday last at the 500 yards and 600 yards ranges. General satisfaction was expressed when it became known that the £100 and badge had been carried off by one of the Canadian Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Gibson, 13th Canada, with the splendid aggregate of 94 out of a possible 105, none of his competitors being within three marks of him. The Duke of Cambridge and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, M.P., during their visit to the camp the same day, were received by Colonel Gzowski in the prettily laid out quarters of the Canadian Volunteers; and the Colonial Secretary gracefully complimented the Canadians on their success. The match which attracted most attention on Saturday was that between the Lords and Commons for the "Vizianagram Cup," a challenge cup presented by the late Maharajah of Vizianagram. The conditions of the match are that it is to shot for at 200 and 500 yards, with "any rifles," by members of both Houses of Parliament. Last year the Lords carried off the trophy with a score of 443 points as against 435 made by the Commons. This year again they have been successful, scoring 351 against 343 made by the Commons:—

The next match in point of interest was that for the "National Challenge Trophy," which, as originally established, was to be competed for annually by the English, Scotch, and Irish Twenties. In consequence, however, of a dispute which arose in 1877 as to the country in which the annual contest was to be held, Scotland had seceded from the match during the last three years. England, it will be seen, won last Saturday:—

The "China" Challenge Cup presented by the Volunteers in China for annual competition at Wimbledon by the Home Volunteers is shot for by the County Tens, being the best shots selected from among the efficient Volunteers of each county. The competition is shot with the Snider rifle at 500 yards, the number of shots being seven. The cup was won on Saturday by Cheshire with the unprecedentedly high score of 30·8 points per man, not a single shot of the whole squad being outside of the "inner." Devon, winning last year with a score of 26·4 per man, made 29·0 per man on Saturday, Lancashire being third with 28·8, and Surrey fourth with 28·4 per man. The following were the scores made in the Belgian Volley Cup:—

£20, 1st Berks	154	£10, 1st A. B. Derby ...	150

Summarising the remaining principal results, we may add that Private Gentles, 1st Stirling, won the principal prize in the St. George's contest—the vase, dragon cup, gold jewel, and £30—with 33 points. The silver jewel and £25 went to Corporal Millington, 12th Stafford, for a like score. The Martini Cup was won by Sergeant Hooton, 5th Lancashire. In the contest between the Canadians and the Liverpool team, Canada won by 25 points. The Alexandra Prize was decided in favour of Captain Lang, of the Bristol Engineers, who scored 65 points.

In the Albert aggregate, on Monday, Mr. William Rigby came off an easy winner with 100 points out of a possible 105, and thus fully maintained the high position he has taken, of being a competitor among the best shots of Great Britain and America. For the second and third prizes, Colonel Fenton and Mr. Farrow were bracketed equal with 98 points each; the fourth was won by Mr. Milner, another distinguished member of the Irish Rifle Association; the fifth by Mr. Humphry, of Cambridge University; the sixth by Lieutenant Fenton, the seventh by Mr. Frank Hyde, the eighth by Lieutenant Backhouse, the ninth by Mr. Wyatt, of Ellesmere, and the tenth by Corporal Gillham, 39th Middlesex. The principal prize in the Curtis and Harvey series was won by Lieutenant Fenton, 77th Foot; the first of the Henry prizes by Corporal Bates, 1st Warwick; the Secretary of State for War's prize by Major Scriven, and the Robin Hood prize by Sergeant McGibbon, 105th Lanark. Among the prize winners in the latter competition were the members of the Canadian team, and the Dominion was well represented also in the Albert series by Lieutenant Cruit and Lieutenant-Colonel Gibson. Eton won the Public Schools Veterans' Trophy on Tuesday, the scores standing thus:—

The Snider Wimbledon Cup, shot for at 600 yards, ten shots being allowed, was won on Tuesday by Private Goulding, of the Bristol R.V., with a score of 41. Subjoined are a few other results:—

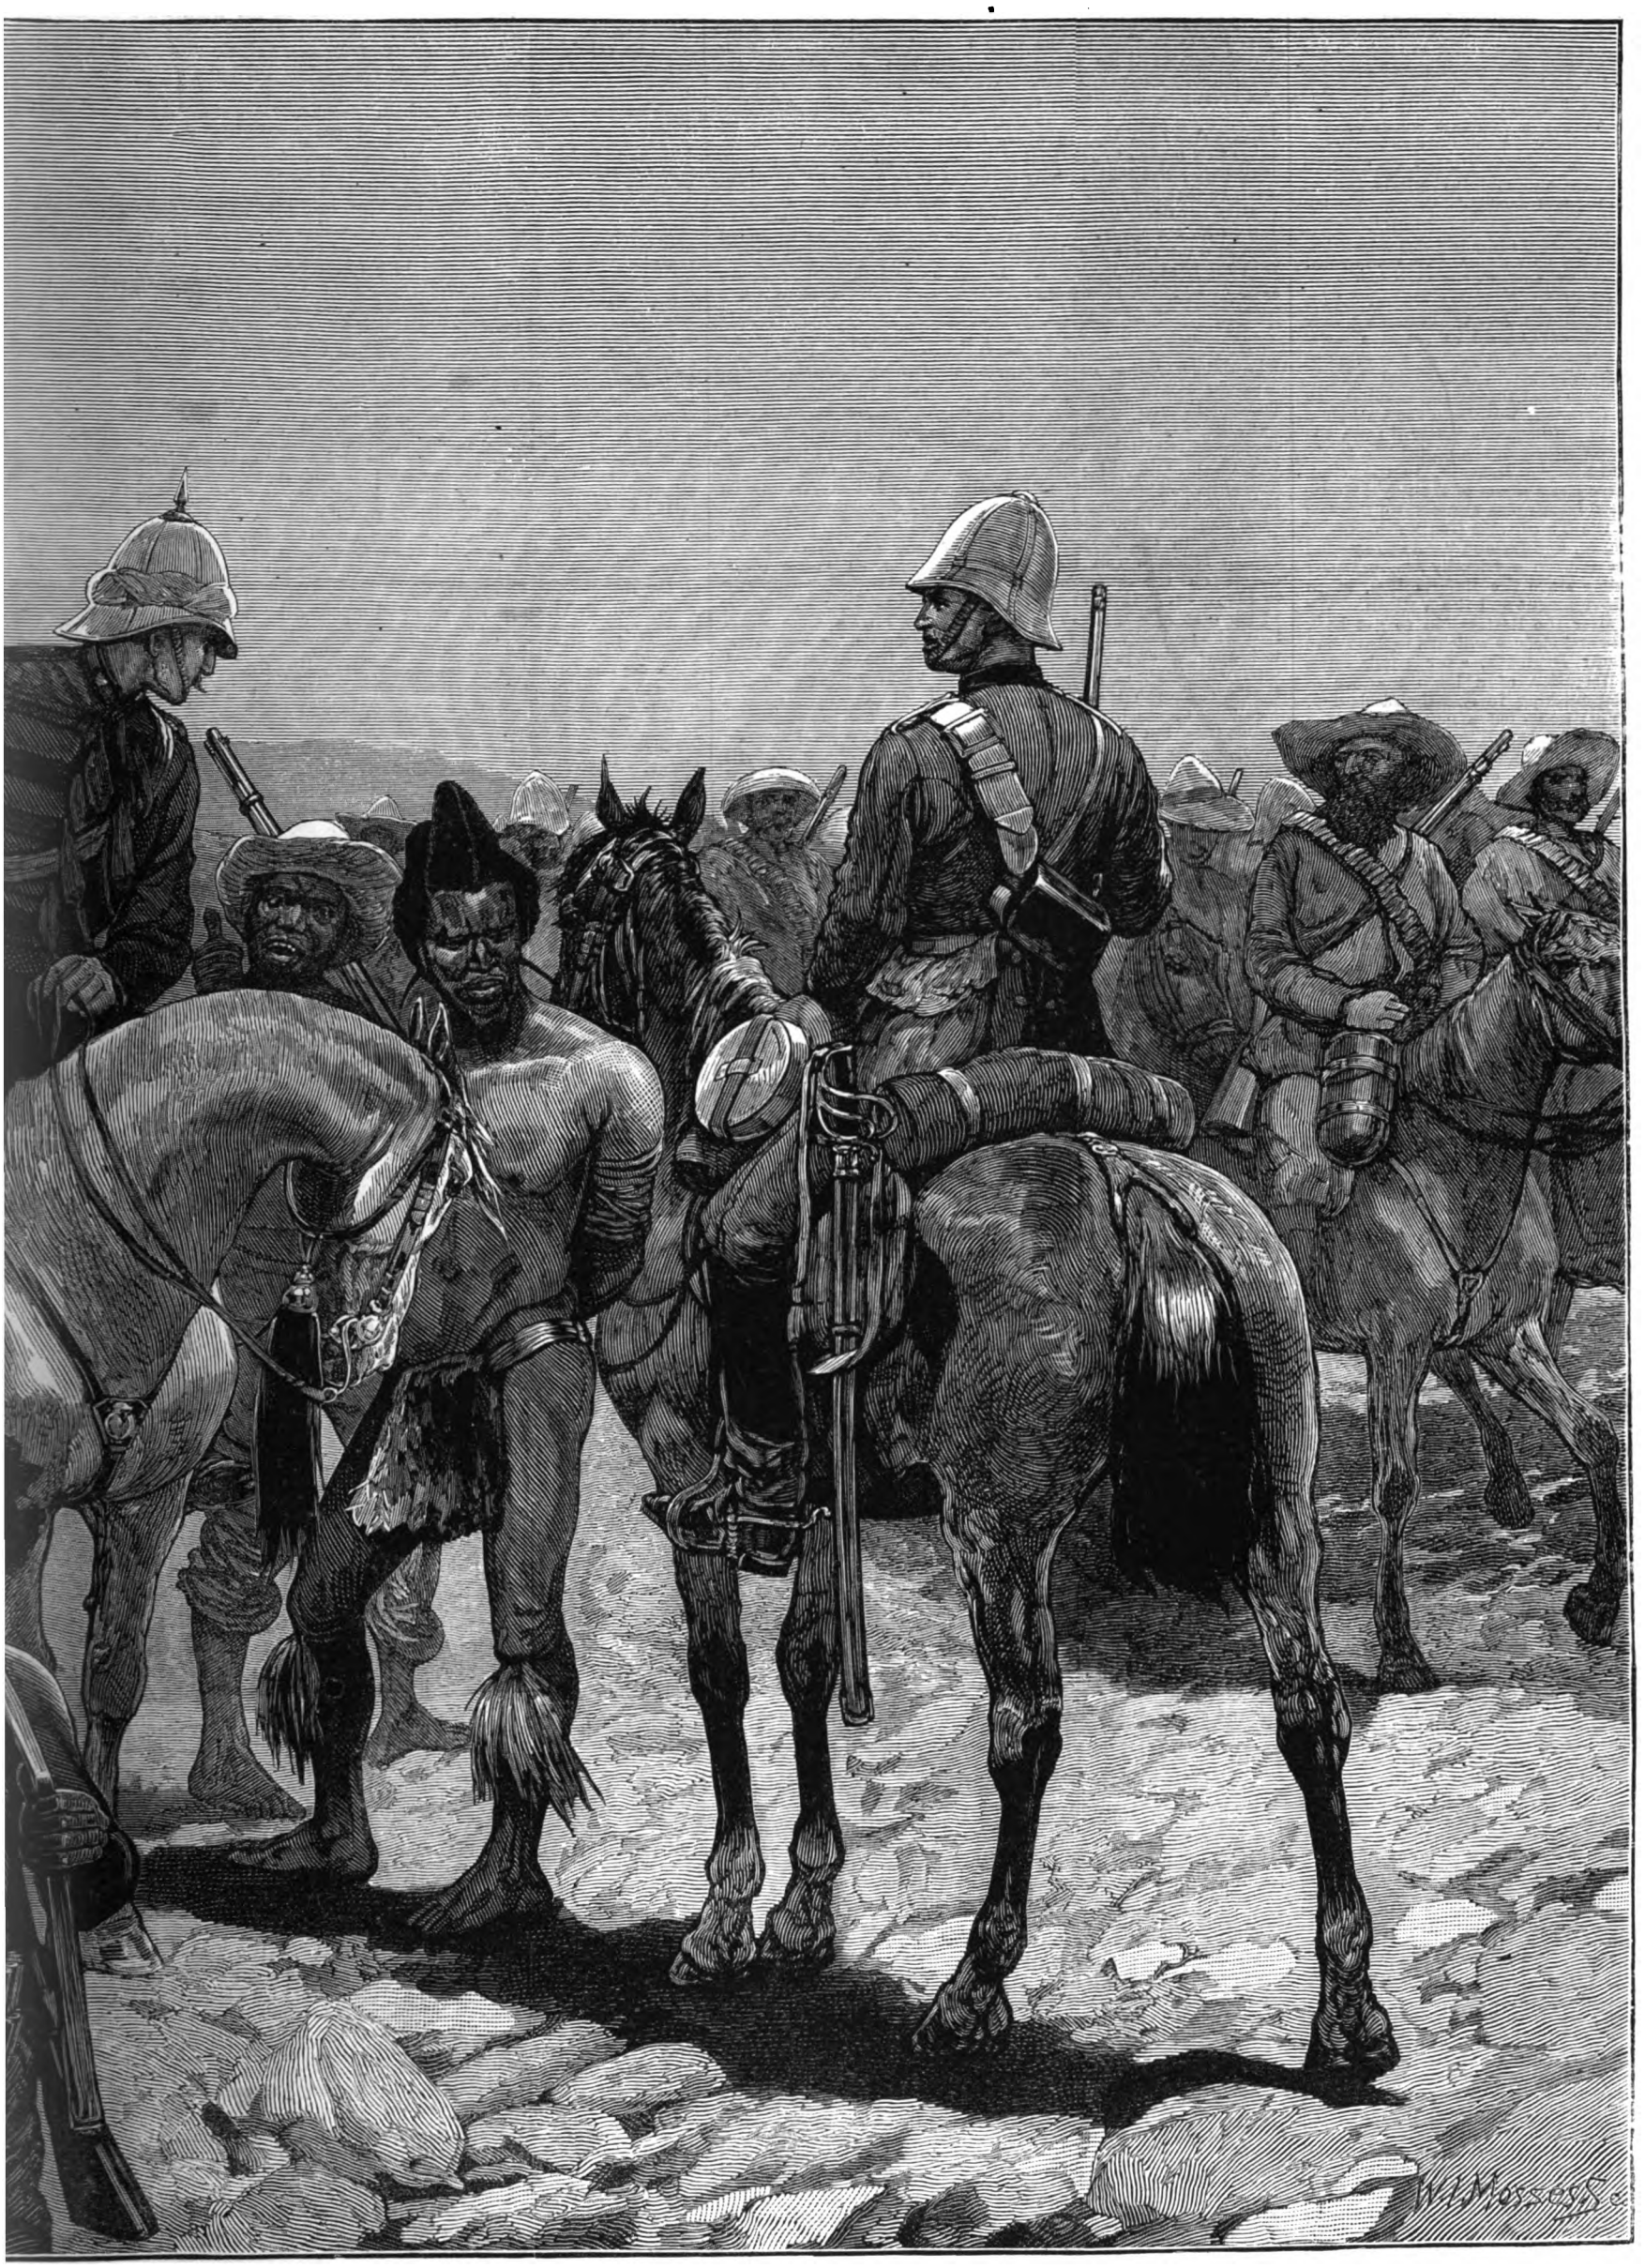
On Wednesday the Army team of twelve won the match against the Volunteers on a tie. The shooting of Corporal Falconer, of the Scots Guards, at the longest range virtually won the match for the Regulars. Cambridge took the Chancellor's Plate in the University teams. Mr. Farrow, from Creedmoor, America, won the Albert Prize, value £100; and Lieutenant Fenton, of the 77th Regiment, secured the Wimbledon Cup, of the same value. The English Twenty have agreed to the proposal of the Scotch and Irish Twenties to hold the match for the International Trophy next year in Dublin.

On Thursday the Public Schools Team competed for the Ashburton Shield and Spencer Cup, the schools represented being—Winchester, Eton, Rugby, Harrow, Charterhouse, Dulwich, Cheltenham, Rossall, Marlborough, Derby, Glenalmond, Clifton, and Whitgift, eight members of each school taking part in the competition. Harrow won with 414 marks; Charterhouse was second with 392 points; Winchester third, with 385; Marlborough fourth, with 381; Eton fifth, with 380. The Oxford and Cambridge match resulted in another victory for Cambridge, with 565 against 555 made by Oxford. The competition for the Kolapore Cup ended in victory for the home team, making the fourth consecutive victory for England. The scores were: Home team, 653 points; Canadians, 630. The competition also took place for the Elcho Shield, between the eights of England, Ireland, and Scotland, the ranges being 800, 900, and 1000 yards, and the weapon any rifle. In the first range, Scotland was 521, Ireland 509, and England 503. At the 900 yards' range both England and Ireland at once began to draw up to the Scottish total, and at the tenth round England was level with Scotland at 825 points, Ireland having got ahead of both to 850 points. At the end of this range Ireland's total at the two ranges was 1018; Scotland, 1008; and England, 999.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will distribute the prizes to-day (Saturday).

At the monthly general meeting of the Zoological Society it was reported that amongst the additions to the society's menagerie during June were a spotted-billed toucanet and two Tuatera lizards, obtained by purchase.



A silver cradle has been recently presented to the Mayor of Norwich. The "cradle" is a costly piece of plate—a massive épergne of artistic design and finished workmanship. Resting upon a base of polished ebony are three modelled figures, in frosted silver, emblematical of Faith, Hope, and Charity, extending aloft a basket, fitted with a glass bowl, and richly chased with a representation of primroses and other spring flowers. Underneath the bowl, which forms to it a kind of canopy, is a cradle, nestling among roses and flowers and foliage. On each of three sides there is a handsome silver shield—one bearing the arms of the city, another to display the Mayor's Arms, and a third containing the following inscription:—"Presented by the Sheriff (Donald Steward, Esq.), the Deputy-Mayor (J. D. Smith, Esq.), the Magistrates, Aldermen, Councillors, and Officers of the Corporation of the City of Norwich, to Harry Bullard, Esq., in commemoration of the birth of his daughter, Hilda May, on May 13, 1879, the year of his Mayoralty." The plate was manufactured by Elkington and Co., and supplied through Mr. Alderman Newman, silversmith, St. Giles-street, Norwich.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Opposition, limited in extent, but intense in its bitterness, has been raised, seemingly by persons who hate the very name of Bonaparte, to the proposed memorial to Prince Louis Napoleon in Westminster Abbey. Those who are favourable to the rendering of such a tribute to the dead Prince are accused of being either flunkeys or enemies of the French Republic. Controversy is a thing which I always carefully strive to avoid in the "Echoes;" but as it happens that the propriety of erecting a monument to Prince Louis Napoleon in the Abbey was first publicly mooted in this Journal and in this column (Sat., June 28), I venture to say a few last words on the subject. It is painful to see a journal habitually so generous, so tolerant, so high-minded as the Daily News opening its columns to a flood of savage and spiteful letters full of rancorous abuse of the Bonaparte family. One gentleman indignantly writes—

> How would the House of Brunswick and the friends of civil and religious liberty have felt if Louis XIV. had put up a statue of the old or young Pretender in Notre Dame?—and that was a century and a half ago.

What was a century and a half ago? Notre Dame? As a matter of fact, both the Old and the Young Pretender were alive at the period of the death of Louis XIV., and Charles Edward survived until the twenty-eighth year of the reign of George the Third. His younger brother, the Cardinal of York, died at Rome in 1817. Please to bear these dates in mind. In the grandest Basilica in the Christian world—in the Cathedral of St. Peter at Rome—there is a famous monument from the chisel of Canova. Angels are weeping at the portal of a tomb. It is that of Charles Edward Stuart. Beneath, in the crypt, moulder the ashes of the three last Princes of the Royal House of Stuart; and the sepulchral inscription enumerates them as "James the Third, Charles the Third, and Henry the Ninth, Kings of Great Britain, France, and Ireland." At the period when these monuments were erected a friendly rapprochement had, almost for the first time since the Reformation, taken place between the British Government and the Vatican. We had used our good offices after the Restoration to get back from the Louvre the pictures and statues which Napoleon had stolen from the Pope. Lord Exmouth, after bombarding Algiers, had obtained the liberation of a large number of Papal subjects who were languishing in chains and slavery. The venerable Cardinal of York had died a pensioner of the Prince Regent. Did the head of the House of Brunswick protest, did the "friends of civil and religious liberty in England" protest against the action of the Holy See in suffering an inscription within the walls of St. Peter's of the phantom titles of the three pretenders to the throne of Great Britain?

Mem.: The assumption that the French Republicans are in a terrible rage because Dean Stanley has condescended to give houseroom to a memorial of the Prince in the Royal Chapel of Henry VII., which structurally is not in the Abbey at all, is effectually disposed of in Tuesday's Times. Writes the well informed correspondent of that journal—

> It should also be stated that the proposed statue in Westminster Abbey does not excite a particle of irritation here. The only moral drawn from all these tributes to the Prince Imperial by the few French Republicans who comment on them is that the English feel themselves a little to blame for the Prince's sad fate, and take this way of evincing their compunction.

I have been reading a very able lecture called "A Bird's-eye View of the Scientific Claims of Vivisection," delivered before the Dialectical Society by Dr. A. P. Childs, F.R.C.S. To my mind, he has treated this terribly vexed question in a very lucid and temperate manner. I can offer no decided opinion on vivisection, for I do not possess any special knowledge on the subject; and it is both unwise and unjust to argue on a scientific subject from a purely sentimental point of view. Dr. Child's lecture put me in mind of a very curious letter from Dr. Edward Jenner to Sir Charles Morgan, which will be found in "Lady Morgan's Memoirs, Diary, and Correspondence," edited by Mr. Hepworth Dixon. The illustrious benefactor of humanity writes (March 14, 1813):—

> My pursuit has lately been, when uninterrupted by vaccination, the morbid changes in the structure of the livers of brutes, which led me to some conclusions respecting the same changes in the human. . . . . There are plants which, somehow or another, are capable of throwing the state of the liver into that sort of confusion which calls hydatids into existence. These do not continue long in their native state, but produce a number of tubera, cartilaginous, bony masses, &c. In other cases the disease originates in the biliary ducts, which become astonishingly enlarged and thickened in every part of the liver, and finally destroys it in various ways. This is the outline of my research. The hydatids I can call into existence in the rabbit in about a fortnight.

Now, I will put it to the casuists (there must be some students of Escobar and Sanchez and Jeremy Taylor's "Ductor Dubitantium" left) whether, in foro conscientiæ, the illustrious Dr. Jenner was justified in artificially producing liver complaint of the most painful kind in the body of a harmless and normally healthy rabbit?

Mem.: The discoverer of vaccination was assuredly a most humane and merciful man, and a warm friend of the brute creation. Indeed, in another part of the letter just cited he remarks that "it is hard that the poor animal that is content with what the meadows afford for his daily bill of fare, and whose cellar is the pond or the brook, should perish from the same diseases as the drunkard. Yet so it is." In American parlance, one might opine that the practical result of the Doctor's gentle sympathy with the lower animals was "rather rough" on the tee-total rabbit.

There seems, anyhow, to be a surprising amount of perfectly gratuitous cruelty in existence. I read in the New York Tribune:—

> The recent delight of Bonanza City, Nevada, was a prize tournament on a washboard between a scorpion and a tarantula spider. This would appear to indicate the lowest water-mark of civilisation.

Not so; I have seen civilisation sink to much lower water-mark, in the way of cruelty to animals, in England.

What do you think, Mesdames, or rather Mesdemoiselles, of an "Old Maids' Association"? There is such an awful organisation, I read, at Cleveland, Ohio, U.S.A. The Association, however, does not appear to be in a very flourishing condition. Although it has enacted laws of frightful severity against the marriage of any member, under which statutes the offender is liable to be branded on the sole of the left foot with the mystic initials "U.D.I."—standing, probably, either for "U've Done It" or for "Unfaithful Daughter of Iniquity"—the celibate ordinances are continually broken. Even the President of the Association has been impeached and censured for "a conspiracy to get married," and there are many other signs and symptoms that the Anti-Matrimonial League is collapsing.

There is a sumptuously illustrated weekly periodical, called L'Art, which is published concurrently in Paris and London, and the stately text of which is adorned by a profusion of etchings, wood engravings, and facsimiles of crayon drawings. One of the most meritorious features in L'Art is that it directs attention, and that conspicuously, to the works of the English school, as well as to those of Continental artists. Looking through the second volume for 1879 I came across a sparkling drawing by M. Du Maurier, entitled "Madame est Servie." The scene represented is that of a party of ladies and gentlemen, duly marshalled in accordance with the laws of precedence, going down stairs to dinner. External evidence shows that the dinner party is a very grand one, and that the ladies and gentlemen are personages moving in the very highest society. The contemplation of these patrician couples fills me, not for the first time, with perplexity. Will any Past Mistress of the Art of Etiquette be kind enough to tell me whether a gentleman taking down a lady to dinner should offer her his right or his left arm? A lady to whom I propounded the question the other day made answer that it depended on the structure of the house; but that in any case the lady must be next the wall, so that her male escort should act as a kind of buffer to protect her dress from contact with the banisters. Is this so? But in M. Du Maurier's drawing the couples are so arranged that in some cases the ladies are next the wall and in others they are next the banisters. Is this an artistic license, or an error? Experts, please say.

FINE ARTS.

The determination of the Government to abolish the Indian Museum, South Kensington, has been received with astonishment and regret by many. It is proposed to remove forthwith portions of the Indian collections to the British Museum, where they must, at least for the present, be consigned to darkness and oblivion in the cellars, in company with other Indian archæological curiosities already there. And it can hardly be hoped that even when the natural history collection shall have been removed from Bloomsbury to the new building at South Kensington, the objects selected for preservation from the Indian Museum can be adequately shown, so many other claims on the forthcoming vacant space being already in abeyance. It is even reported that the jade collection, which cost £5000, is to be hurriedly sold at a time when it will probably not realise anything near what it would fetch in a more favourable season. The reasons alleged for the abolition of the Museum are that it is not popular, and that a saving to the Indian Exchequer of £9000 per annum would be effected. That the Museum does not prove attractive is true, but it is equally certain that it might (as it should) be made so by judicious weeding, and enrichment of its artistic and archæological divisions. The annual cost is but trifling, although it may be distasteful to the people of India to support an Indian Museum in London, and they might be willing to pay a much larger sum for such museum in Calcutta. But surely this is a matter of national, as well as Imperial, concernment. Mr. W. H. Gregory in a letter to the Times very pertinently asks whether anyone can conceive if France or Germany, or, indeed, any one of the European Great Powers, were masters of India, that their Governments would treat the records of the past after our fashion? "Everyone who gives the subject a thought will feel that at the present period, when Oriental literature and research occupy so large a space of modern study, it will be a scandal and a reproach to England utterly to ignore the records of that vast Empire of India which is so identified with our fame. We have made her Majesty Empress of Hindostan, a country fraught with memorials of a remote, continuous, and high civilisation which adds dignity to the title. The Secretary of State in Council, however, virtually pronounces that the study of these memorials and of all that pertains to the works of man in India is unworthy of consideration." In short, the present seems to be a fitting opportunity for establishing an institution which shall not only serve as a museum of the art and archæology of India, but where also its art, archæology, monuments, history, and literature may be studied. Mr. Gregory suggests as an alternative proposal that a portion of the space now occupied by the Indian Museum should remain assigned to the archæological and art-objects contained in it (the natural history specimens being transferred to the new neighbouring museum), and that to these objects should be added those now stowed away in the British Museum, and also the fine collection of photographs illustrating the monuments of India, in the Indian Library at Downing-street, and which are rarely resorted to owing to difficulty of access and want of proper room to study and to copy. To these should be added the coins of India, of which the British Museum authorities might select such specimens as they require, giving electrotypes of those retained. To the authorities of the South Kensington Museum might be intrusted the custody of the new museum, which would only involve the expense of a few attendants and a director. The addition of an honorary consultative body, whether entitled committee or trustees, would strengthen the hands of the director, develop the institution, cause it to become the resort of those who interest themselves in the literature and antiquities of this great portion of the Eastern world, and in time diminish the strange and disgracefully apathetic indifference of the general public to the artistic, ethnical, linguistic, and antiquarian interest of this our greatest and most splendid dependency.

The South Kensington Museum has lately bought one of the most important and varied collections it has had the opportunity of acquiring for many years, and most of the objects are now exhibited in the sections to which they severally belong. Among the multifarious objects included are samples of Spanish ecclesiastical metal-work of the most splendid kinds, lace made for Philip IV. of Spain, a large collection of embroidered vestments, including the rich silk-embroidered banner actually borne on the occasion of the last Auto-da-Fé; a garniture of Sèvres porcelain, very fine lac Japan, and other articles exquisitely mounted in ormolu; decorative furniture, and, perhaps most important of all, several works of mediæval and renaissance sculpture.

Mr. Algernon Graves, a son of the well-known print-publisher of Pall-mall, has been at considerable pains to compile a numerical list of all the pictures exhibited at the Old British Institution. The painters' names are arranged in schools, the number of works exhibited under each name, and the number of those painted by two or three artists in conjunction. The usefulness of such a list in many cases is obvious.

Manchester is about to follow the example of its great rival Liverpool in having an "Arts Club" of its own. The object set forth is "to facilitate the intercourse of members of the various professions, artistic, dramatic, literary, and musical."

M. Vereschagin's immense picture, "The Prince of Wales at Jeypore," has been shown to the Queen at Windsor Castle, and is now returned to the interesting and extensive exhibition of the able artist's works at the French Court, South Kensington.

An exhibition of the works of William Hunt and Samuel Prout will be held in the Fine-Art Society's galleries, New Bond-street, in November and the following months. Collectors possessing fine examples of those painters are invited to contribute. The examples will be selected by Mr. Ruskin or a committee named by him. The number is limited to one hundred by each artist, including those contributed by Mr. Ruskin, who will supply notes on the painters and their works. Mr. Huish, the secretary of this society, has translated a new catalogue of Meryon's etchings by M. Philip Burty, which is about to be published by the society. The new catalogue will incorporate several new facts brought to light since M. Burty's first treatise on Meryon's etchings appeared in the Gazette des Beaux Arts.

The exhibition of the Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, is now open in the evening from seven till ten o'clock, as well as in the daytime.

The preservation of Burnham Beeches from threatened destruction, and the assumption of the ownership by the Corporation of London, is a very appreciable boon to artists and the lovers of our noble and beautiful sylvan scenery. In many landscapes, in many genre pictures—notably, in illustrations of Shakspeare, which has been exhibited at the Royal Academy, these giants have figured conspicuously. It would seem, however, that greater care will be required in future to protect them from the damage by thoughtlessness and neglect which they have suffered according to Mr. Vernon Heath, who, having photographed them repeatedly, should speak advisedly. Another correspondent to a contemporary, signing himself "A Landscape Painter," calls attention to an insidious cause of destruction from the surrounding inhabitants. The poorer classes are not content with carrying away the fallen wood for fuel; but "any constant observer may see parties of boys climbing the trunks and breaking off large masses of the shell, which, being very old, yields readily to their blows; or women with tough sticks beating at the old branches until some portions give way, which are broken up and carried home at leisure." We all know how rapidly injuries to and detachment of the bark of a tree at its maturity will accelerate its decay. There are certain classes of boring insects which sometimes settle in the bark of trees and will quickly reduce the healthiest colossus to a skeleton. Several cases of this kind are to be seen in the Forest of Fontainebleau.

Mr. R. C. Woodville is engaged upon a large equestrian portrait-picture of the late Prince Imperial at his first reconnaissance in Zululand. The Prince is shown at the head of his party, half turning in the saddle, with raised field-glass in the act of scanning the surrounding country. In the middle-distance is seen the escort, composed, in this instance, of men of the 17th Lancers.

Messrs. Downey, the eminent photographers, of 61, Ebury-street, Eaton-square, have issued a picture of her Majesty the Queen seated in the centre of a group consisting of the husband and children of the late Princess Alice. The Queen occupies the place of the lamented Princess, and the picture has a pathetic interest which is very touching. The same artists have also produced capital photographs of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Mrs. Langtry as Marguerite, and several theatrical celebrities, including Sarah Bernhardt and Mdlle. Samary, the former seated under the shade of a Japanese umbrella, and the latter laughing at the spectator. Madame Nilsson and Mdlle. Thalberg are also very good. All these pictures are first-rate examples of photographic art.

Mr. Charles Landseer, R.A., died on Tuesday evening at his residence in St. John's-wood, in his eighty-first year. He was the elder brother of Sir Edwin Landseer, and was, like their father, an artist from his earliest days. For more than half a century his works have been hung on the walls of the Royal Academy, his first picture having been shown there in 1828, and the venerable painter was still able to contribute to the present year's exhibition. He was elected an Associate in 1837, and eight years afterwards he became an Academician. When the Keepership of the Academy became vacant by the resignation of Mr. Jones in 1851, Mr. Charles Landseer obtained the appointment, which he continued to hold till his failing health compelled his resignation, about six years ago. He then retired in the enjoyment of a pension equal to the salary of the office which he quitted, but did not cease to labour in the art which was the solace and pride of his long life.

A Retrospective Art Exhibition is to be held in the Pitti Palace, Florence, in November next, and promises to be of great importance and interest. Everything produced by the artists and art-workmen of Italy from the earliest times to the seventeenth century is, as far as possible, to be illustrated.

A Raphael Exhibition is to be held at Dresden during next month and September. When the originals of paintings, sketches, or other works cannot be obtained, good copies, photographs and engravings, will be exhibited.

A statue of Rabelais is to be erected at Chinon, and it is proposed to erect statues to Béranger and Theophile Gautier.

M. Frédéric Baudry, Administrateur de la Bibliothèque Mazarine, has been elected member of the Académie des Inscriptions, in place of the late M. Ferdinand de Lasteyrie.

The International Art Exhibition at Munich was opened on Saturday last by Prince Luitpold, the uncle of King Louis, who was commissioned by his Majesty to preside at the inauguration. The ceremony was also attended by other members of the Royal family, the members of the Diplomatic Body, the Bavarian deputies, and the chief civil and military authorities.

A statue is to be erected in Moscow to the Russian poet Pushkin.

The Bedford Agricultural Show was held at Bedford on the 17th inst. The entries for horses and stock were numerous, and the depression in agriculture seemed to affect only the class of hunters. For the best two-year-old bull the Marquis of Exeter took the first prize with his Telemachus XVII., the first prize for the best cow with his Seagull, and the prizes for the three best shorthorns. Messrs. J. and F. Howard took all the first prizes for pigs.

Lady Edith Ashley opened a new cottage home last Saturday afternoon in extension of the Home for Little Boys at Farningham. The building is the gift of Miss Mary Ann Leicester, of Bishop's-road, Bayswater, and will accommodate about thirty additional boys, though the fund for their maintenance has not yet been obtained. Lord Shaftesbury presided at a luncheon after the ceremony. Lady Templemore having distributed the prizes to the boys, the company proceeded on to the grounds to witness the sports.

The water of the "Wilhelm's Quelle," a spring of natural mineral water, situated at Kronthal, near Homburg, which has been celebrated in Germany since the year 1600, has lately been introduced into this country, and has attained a marked success. Its purity is guaranteed by the Mayor of Kronthal, and its hygienic and invigorating properties have earned for it the approval of the most eminent men. Dr. Morell Mackenzie writes, that in abundance of natural carbonic acid, with a relative freedom of alkaline carbonates, it is pre-eminent. It is also highly recommended as a most wholesome beverage—either alone or mixed with wine, spirits, or milk—by Sir G. Burrows, Bart., M.D., Dr. John Harley, of St. Thomas's Hospital, Dr. Spencer Wells, Dr. Quain, and many others. The leading medical journals unite in ascribing to the "Wilhelm's Quelle" water properties which no other mineral water possesses.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

An able artist has within the past year or so painted a singularly faithful picture of the Opposition side of the House of Commons; and the same brush might well have been employed to depict a salient feature of the last great debate in the Lower House on the vexed flogging clauses of the Army Discipline Bill. The opening of this final debate on the 17th inst. was touched on in the latest edition of our last issue. Scant justice could be done then, however, to the inimitable air of self-satisfaction which, not without reason, stole over the features of Mr. Hopwood, and found further illustration in the fond stroking of his luxuriant black beard, as the Marquis of Hartington at the eleventh hour so far made amends for his rebuke of the hon. anti-flogging champion that his Lordship rose and moved:—

That no bill for the discipline and regulation of the Army will be satisfactory to this House which provides for the permanent retention of corporal punishment for military offences.

The concessions and vacillations of Ministers on the point were the chief reasons alleged by the noble Lord for bringing his courage up to the striking point; and the suddenness of his conversion did not escape the pungent criticism of Colonel Stanley, who based his opposition to the motion on the grounds that the lash was indispensably necessary for the maintenance of discipline in the Army, and that the abolition of the "cat" would inevitably increase the number of military executions. Mr. Gladstone followed on the humanitarian side, and Lord Sandon on the Ministerial; and Mr. Mundella characterised the latter noble Lord as:—

The mildest-manner'd man
That ever scuttled ship or cut a throat.

Mr. Benett-Stanford, Sir Henry Havelock, Mr. R. Yorke, Mr. Hopwood, Colonel Arbuthnot, Mr. Walter, Mr. Otway, Sir C. Russell, Major Nolan, Mr. Chaplin, Sir W. Harcourt, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer continued the debate, which ended in the defeat of the Marquis of Hartington's motion by a majority of 106—289 against 183 votes. The House on the following evening took the Army Bill, as amended, into consideration; and Mr. Parnell and Mr. O'Donnell distinguished themselves by the number of their amendments. At the suggestion of Sir Charles Dilke, it was agreed that the knots should be removed from "the cat." It was not until long after dawn on Saturday morning that the bill was read the third time and passed. The House of Lords met for a few minutes on Saturday afternoon, especially to push the formidable measure through its first stage. On Monday, Lord Cranbrook secured the second reading after the Duke of Cambridge had expressed his opinion that in the long run the bill would "be more simple than the old Mutiny Act," and that "unless corporal punishment be retained in the service it will be impossible to maintain discipline;" and after the measure had received the approval of Lords Cardwell, Longford, Truro, Denman, and had undergone the mild criticism of Earl Granville, a few not untimely remarks having fallen from Lord Waveney as to the necessity of a thorough reorganisation of the Army, the bill was read the third time and passed on Tuesday; and at a special sitting on Wednesday the Army Discipline and Regulation (Commencement) Bill was expeditiously passed through its remaining stages.

The House of Lords has had no burning question of "Privilege" to interrupt the even tenour of its way, or to impede the rapid passage of the Army Bill. Several bills received the sanction of a Royal Commission on Monday. Earl Cadogan (who was an attentive listener to the flogging debate in the Commons) yesterday week aired his elocutionary powers by the reading of Sir Garnet Wolseley's telegram from the seat of war in South Africa; and on Monday Lord Bury read with equal distinctness General Clifford's later telegram from Pietermaritzburg. Lord Selborne at the latter sitting was successful in his motion for papers anent any anti-slavery communications addressed by the Government to Spain in relation to Cuba, and elicited, moreover, from the Earl of Beaconsfield the statement that "moral influence" was as a rule more effective than direct intervention in suppressing slavery. On Tuesday, among the measures advanced a stage was the Public Loans Remission Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

The Lower House, relieved of the infliction of the lash—we mean its controversial application—has hied to fresh woods and pastures new. On Monday the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a not over-encouraging account of the state of the Military Chest; and the great part of the sitting was taken up with the discussion of the Civil Service Estimates, in the course of which Irish members took great exception to the arming of the Irish constabulary, Major O'Gorman favouring the House with a rich specimen of his anecdotal oratory with the view of showing that there was no foundation for the stories told by "Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Protestant Archbishops, and others to the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary for Ireland." The hon. and gallant member occasioned much laughter by declaring, with some disdain, that these personages knew so little of Ireland really that they "cannot pronounce the word 'Geoghegan.'" Nevertheless, the motion to reduce the vote for the Irish Constabulary was negatived by 127 to 18 votes. On Tuesday the Chancellor of the Exchequer read the Report of the Select Committee on the case of Messrs. Grissell and Ward, alleged to have stated that for £2000 the Committee on the Tower Bridge could be got to dismiss the Bill; and the Leader of the House moved that on the morrow the two gentlemen named should be called to the bar to answer to the charge. To facilitate the progress of the Banking Bill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed that it should only deal with English, not Scotch and Irish, banks; but the debate on the second reading had to be suspended. The evening sitting was occupied with Sir Charles Dilke's motion for an address to her Majesty praying her "to procure the prompt execution of those articles of the Treaty of Berlin which relate to reforms in Turkey" and to the rectification of the frontier of Greece. The hon. Baronet again distinguished himself by his skilful handling of the leading facts of the Eastern Question; and found a seconder in Mr. Shaw Lefevre. Mr. Hanbury, on the other hand, moved an amendment approving the steps taken by the Government; but Sir H. Drummond-Wolff, speaking from the 'vantage ground of High Commissioner for East Roumelia, qualified his support of the Government by frankly declaring it to be necessary for the House of Commons to be outspoken in the matter in order to influence the Turkish Government. The inconsistency of the hon. member for Christchurch speaking one way and voting another was promptly pointed out by Mr. Gladstone, and the discussion was continued by Mr. Bourke on behalf of the Ministry; but, on the motion of Mr. Monk, the debate was adjourned. Thereafter, the Irish National School Teachers' Bill (which proposes to distribute over £1,000,000 of the Irish Church Fund surplus in pensions to Irish schoolmasters) was read the second time, on the motion of Mr. Lowther, despite a motion by Mr. Courtney to adjourn the consideration of the Bill.

The decisive victory of Lord Chelmsford over Cetewayo at Ulundi on July 4 was on Wednesday communicated to the House of Lords by Lord Bury, and to the House of Commons by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, whose reading of the despatch was greeted with loud cheers. The good tidings put the Lower House in so good a humour that some hearty laughter was occasioned when Captain Gossets came to read the telegram anent the peccant Grissell's flight from Boulogne, and his inability, by "Doctor's orders," to answer the summons to appear at the bar. The gallant Serjeant-at-Arms was more fortunate with Mr. John Sandelands Ward, the solicitor. Mr. Ward appeared in person, and pleaded that his connection with Mr. Grissell had been purely professional, and that he had not the remotest idea of infringing the privileges of "this honourable House." But the Chancellor of the Exchequer was obdurate; and Mr. Ward was hurried away, in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms, to repent at leisure ever having done business with the missing Grissell. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then sought to get the altered Public Works Loan Bill read the second time, but, as Mr. Rylands pointed out, there was a technical difficulty in the way of this being done. The Poor Law Amendment Bill was next read the second time; Colonel Stanley gave expression to the satisfaction of the Government that "General Lord Chelmsford has been able to vindicate his character as a military commander, and to achieve a great victory," and the House separated after the transaction of a little more business.

Royal Assent was given by Commission on Thursday in the House of Lords to the Army Bill and other measures. When noble Lords met again at five o'clock, nothing more toothsome than the consideration in Committee of the Summary Jurisdiction Bill was forthcoming; and it was to be observed that the faces of the Prime Minister and Lord Cranbrook were wreathed in smiles—mayhap at the good news of the previous day from Zululand; mayhap at the "coming-events-cast-their-shadows-before" suggestion offered by the fact that meanwhile the Marquis of Salisbury and Earl Cadogan had sought the cold shade of the Opposition to avoid the fierce sunlight which beat upon the front Ministerial Bench on what was almost the first summer afternoon of the season. In the Lower House Major O'Gorman once again elicited loud laughter by gravely putting an extinguisher on Mr. Chaplin's Turveydrop motion in the form of this neat notice of an amendment:—

That the motion in question be postponed till it shall have been presented to the House in grammatical language.

The late Prince Imperial was the theme of fresh questioning, Colonel Stanley informing Mr. Price that the military memorial would be purely private, and Sir Robert Peel that Colonel Harrison had not sat on the Carey Court-Martial; whilst Sir Stafford Northcote, in reply to Mr. E. Jenkins and Mr. Callan, quietly observed that Dean Stanley had the right of placing monuments in Westminster Abbey, and the Government had not deemed it necessary to interfere with the proposed memorial of the Prince, inasmuch as they attached no political importance to the matter. Before five o'clock Mr. Lowther was able to rise, and move, in his habitual toothpick style, that the new University of Ireland Bill be read a second time. There was a vague foreshadowing of a willingness to endow the new University in Committee; and Mr. Shaw, in an admirable speech, cheered on both sides the House, expressed the hope that the Chancellor of the Exchequer might later in the evening feel himself justified in announcing that, acting on the lines of the Intermediate Education Act of last Session, the Government would comply with the desire of the Roman Catholic gentry of Ireland and grant a liberal sum to the new University. Unless they did so, Mr. Shaw could only say he and the Irish members for whom he spoke would be compelled to oppose the measure. Virtually the first long speech he had made since he was chosen to succeed the late Mr. Butt as Leader of the Irish Home-Rule Party, this able address of Mr. Shaw was a true Parliamentary success. But Mr. Courtney (who spoke shortly after Mr. Shaw) was not to be dissuaded by the evident sympathy of the House with the hon. and learned member from declaring that he saw no necessity whatever for the bill, and from assigning reasons from his abundant professorial experience in support of his objections. The manner of Mr. Courtney, however, still smacks too much of dictatorial superiority for his undoubtedly able arguments to be palatable to the House.

Setting forth the more prominent of their grievances, he dwelt especially on the difficulty experienced in obtaining employment in the Civil Service, and upon their being called on to pay the expenditure in connection with the Afghan war. These with other points were taken up by Mr. Bright in a speech fifty minutes in duration, the right hon. gentleman being particularly emphatic on the non-fulfilment by successive Governments of the pledges made to the people of India with respect to the facilities to be afforded for their admission to the Civil Service. Mr. Fawcett, M.P., and Sir David Wedderburn, M.P., were also amongst the speakers.

There were 2488 births and 1190 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 93, whereas the deaths were 490 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. During the three weeks ending last Saturday the rate of mortality in London has averaged 17·2 per 1000; the nearest approach to so low a death-rate during the first three weeks of July was in 1860, when, as now, the summer was marked by an excessive rainfall. The deaths included 6 from smallpox, 73 from measles, 40 from scarlet fever, 10 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 5 from different forms of fever, and 27 from diarrhœa. These deaths were 284 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 197 and 185 in the two preceding weeks, further declined to 169 last week, but exceeded the corrected average by 7. From bronchitis 97 resulted, and 43 from pneumonia. In Greater London 3046 births and 1395 deaths were registered, equal to annual rates of 35·1 and 16·1 per 1000 of the population. In the Outer Ring the death-rate from all causes, and from the seven principal zymotic diseases, was but 11·7 and 1·5 per 1000 respectively, against 17·2 and 2·8 in Inner London. The mean temperature of the air was 58·4 deg., and 5 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 12·5 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 112·5 hours; the recorded duration of sunshine was, therefore, equal to but 11 per cent of its possible duration. The recorded amount of ozone showed a great excess on Sunday.

THE REED-WARBLER.

With birds, as with society,
There 's infinite variety:
Some seem for glare and bustle made,
Others for privacy and shade.
The song-bird as Reed-Warbler known;
So called because he haunts the sedges
And reeds upon our water-ledges.
This term, or Sedge-Bird, as some name him,
Is thought by learned folk to shame him.
And so in lingo scientific
They dub him with a name horrific:
It runs—but I won't shock your ear
With aught so dissonantly drear—
A name too bad to be inflicted
Upon the bird herein depicted.
Skimming the quiet pool he goes,
Quick to and fro, without repose,
Some unconsidered trifles taking
Throughout the day from his first waking.
All insect life is his escheatal,
From dragon-fly to water-beetle;
The daintiest tidbits borne elate
As rightful prizes to his mate.
And now and then the Warbler flits
To where his spouse close-brooding sits,
The sedges and the reeds among,
To solace her with his clear song.
And such a darling nest they 've made!
(Where did birds learn the building trade?
The weaving, joinering, plastering too?—
And all so exquisitely true.)
A cup-shaped structure, where unite
All elements of strong and light,
Supported by the reeds around
To which the nest is deftly bound.
And here, when not in search of prey,
The Sedge-Bird wiles the time away,
Warbling a tender roundelay.—J. L.

PROPOSED MONUMENT TO THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

The proposed erection of a monument to the Prince Imperial in Westminster Abbey has called forth strong expressions of disapproval. The Dean of Westminster has defended the admission of the unfortunate Prince into "the great temple of silence and reconciliation" by the following able statement:—

Some misconceptions having taken place with regard to the proposed erection of a monument to the Prince Imperial in Westminster Abbey, it has been thought right to make the following statement of the facts.

When I received an application to this effect I at once consented, subject to the approval of her Majesty, in whose Royal Chapel of King Henry VII. the statue was intended to be placed. It seemed to me that the manifestation of public sympathy had been of such an unusual and extensive character as to leave no doubt of the propriety, so far as I was concerned, of acceding to the request. The tragic associations connected with the fate of a foreign Prince bearing a great historic name, fighting under the British flag, and giving his life for the country which had received him and his parents as guests, and which had learned to honour him personally for his blameless and engaging character, were such as to give him a claim to be ranked amongst those Princes to whom Westminster Abbey has, at various times, given shelter or admitted memorials under its roof. The spot chosen for the memorial at once indicates the nature of the honour thus to be paid.

It is not in the Abbey Church, properly so called, but in the Royal mausoleum appended to it, and in which, as a general rule, no one is interred or commemorated except members of the Royal family or persons specially connected with them. In this chapel the particular locality chosen was the north-east corner, corresponding to that which on the south-eastern side had received a like monument to another exiled Prince from the same country. There the Duke of Montpensier, brother of King Louis Philippe, who had died in England during the first exile of the Bourbon family, together with the Queen of Louis XVIII., were interred. The Abbey knows no difference of politics, either foreign or domestic. It is, as Lord Macaulay has well described it, "the great Temple of silence and of reconciliation." It seemed that another example of this cherished characteristic of our great national mausoleum, another link in the invisible chain of hospitality and charity which stretches across the widest gulf of race and party and creed, would be added if, over against the memorial of the Bourbon Prince of the House of Orleans, were erected a memorial of the chief of the rival dynasty, who, like him, had been received on our shores and died surrounded by more than like respect. There is no association in Westminster Abbey which attracts greater interest than the analogous correspondence between the tombs of Elizabeth and Mary; and if to these we add the circumstance that not far off is the grave, now, alas! rifled and undistinguished, of the ruler whom history has always compared more or less with the first Emperor of the Napoleon dynasty, it was thought that the circle of historical combinations would at least be not unsuitable.

It has been objected that, the space of the Abbey for the memorials of eminent Englishmen being so limited, no permission should be given to the commemoration of any persons not falling under that designation. No one can feel more strongly the duty of rigidly protecting this space than he, whoever he may be, who is its appointed guardian; but the chapel in which the monument of the Imperial Prince was to be erected is altogether apart from those portions of the building that are appropriated to such interments or commemorations; and it must further be added that there is another stream of interest in the Abbey altogether disconnected from the recollections of great men. The tombs of Princes are not merely the monuments of the members of Royal families, but they are landmarks of English and European history in a sense which has not belonged to the tombs of private individuals, however eminent. There is no comparison between the individual claims of Mary Queen of Scots and Sir Isaac Newton, or between the two Princes murdered in the Tower and those of Pitt and Fox; yet it is not too much to say that the public interest attaching to the former exceeds the interest attaching to the latter, and it was thought that such an extraordinary combination of historical associations as is presented by the death of the young Prince was not unworthy to be thus distinguished.

One word more. I have not the honour of acquaintance with any member of the Imperial family in France or in England. No one rejoiced more than I did in the fall of the Empire at Sedan. Even should the present Government of France fail to establish itself in that country, it is to the hope of a Constitutional Monarchy that I should look, under the guidance of those Orleans Princes whom, if I may be permitted to say so, I regard with so sincere and grateful a respect. But I should have been ashamed of myself if I had allowed these predilections to interfere with the natural response to what I believed, and still believe, to have been the genuine expression of national concern in an event of singularly tragic interest, in which the spontaneous sentiments not of England only, but of Europe are combined.

The Morning Post states that the bereaved Empress will furnish the sarcophagus which will inclose the remains of her lost hope in the chapel of Chiselhurst, while the Queen will also place in the same chapel a beautiful personal memorial. At Woolwich some testimony of the strong feeling of comradeship will be put on record; and the Army Memorial will reach proportions of considerable magnitude.

ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (trade-mark "Anti-Fa" registered) is the celebrated American Remedy for Corpulency.

Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, referrin to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a ver corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is not a secret nostrum, but a compound, concentrated, and very superior fluid extract of Fucus Vesiculosus, a species of sea lichen, so much extolled by the French and other medical journals as the newly-discovered remedy for corpulency. There are several species of the Fucus generally found growing together upon the rocks, but the Vesiculosus is the only variety that has been found to possess the desired qualities. That used in the manufacture of Allan's Anti-Fat is selected and gathered at the proper seasons by an experienced botanist, and the extract made from it is carefully prepared by a skilful chemist, in a manner best calculated to retain the peculiar active properties of the plant. M. Dufrere, the celebrated French physician, says that most of the failures to obtain good results from the fluid extract of Fucus arise from the use of the wrong species of the plant, from which much of the extracts found with the apothecaries and chemists are made, or from improper treatment in manufacturing these extracts.

The Botanic Medicine Company of Buffalo and London were among the very first to engage in manufacturing extracts from Fucus, and they have spared no pains or expense to obtain the true Fucus Vesiculosus, and their long experience in preparing extracts has enabled them to make an article that fully represents the medicinal properties, which are easily destroyed by the unskilful treatment of the chemists.

The Anti-Fat can therefore be relied upon to produce the most efficacious results.

In placing this remedy before the public as a positive cure for obesity, we do so knowing its ability to cure, as attested by hundreds of testimonials, of which the following are samples:

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9 lbs. in four weeks.

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W.
June 2, 1879.

To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.

"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine (Anti-Fat) both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, losing on an average 6 pounds per week.
"Yours respectfully, HARRY BRAHAM."

A Lancashire Lady writes, under date of May 5, 1879:—"Having been told by a very stout lady that your medicine (Anti-Fat) has done her a great deal of good, I should be obliged by your sending me a bottle."

"Porchester-terrace, Lancaster-gate, Hyde Park, W.
"Mrs. —— presents her compliments to the Manager of the Botanic Medicine Company, and begs to say that the six bottles of Anti-Fat, had on May 6, have produced a satisfactory result, and will be glad to have one dozen bottles sent by Parcel Delivery at once, for which she incloses cheque for three pounds six shillings (63s.).—May 30, 1879."

Since writing our first little circular treatise upon the subject of Corpulency, many hundreds of cases have come under our personal observation, and in all good results have followed the use of the Anti-Fat. In no case has any unpleasant or injurious effect been produced. Instead of regarding obesity as an abnormal condition, many people have erroneously considered it as an evidence of health, and any agent that reduces fat is therefore at once suspected of being injurious. Starting to reason from the false position that fat is an evidence of health, it is not surprising that they should, very naturally, fall into the error of supposing that an agent possessing properties capable of reducing corpulency would prove injurious to the health. Reasoning, however, from the rational basis, that an undue deposition of fat, constituting obesity, is not a healthy but a morbid condition, it is quite as natural for us to arrive at the opposite conclusion, which is sustained by experience and observation—i.e., that the reduction of fat in cases of corpulency is invariably followed by an improvement of strength, spirits, and physical comforts. Allan's Anti-Fat sold by Chemists everywhere. Price 6s. 6d. per Bottle. Send stamp for Pamphlet entitled "How to get Lean without Starvation."

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring them again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article..
It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

BRIDAL BOUQUET BLOOM.
Beauty, a brilliant complexion, the fountain of youth. Bridal Bouquet Bloom for Beautifying the Complexion—a most agreeable and refreshing balm to the skin. Ever blooming, ever young. A vegetable liquid extracted from Nature's lovely blooms. This exquisite preparation, by a single application, requiring but a moment of time imparts to the face, neck, arms, and hands a delicate softness and marble purity with the tint and fragrance of the lily and the rose.
It removes tan, freckles, sunburn, and all roughness and blemishes. For creating, restoring, and preserving beauty, Bridal Bouquet Bloom is without a rival in the world. One trial of it will convince any Lady of its great superiority over any other liquid and the numerous powders. By its use all roughness, redness, and chapping are prevented. Patronised by all the European Courts and the élite of America. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers, only Three Shillings and Sixpence, in large Bottles. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row London.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar, hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.
A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

SMYRNA SULTANA, the NEW AMERICAN SKIN STAIN, imparts a delicate natural rosy colour to the cheeks or lips. WILL NOT WASH OR RUB OFF. Can be removed with lemon juice only. It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for "The Mexican Hair Renewer," price 3s. 6d. BILIOUS ATTACKS.—In bilious people, and what are called bilious attacks, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when it is unable to do so sick headache is produced by a retention of bile in the blood. ENO'S FRUIT SALT exercises a simple but special action on the liver, by which the secretion of bile is regulated. In deficiency, therefore, of the excretive powers of the liver into the intestines, biliousness is caused, and, as a natural consequence, great sluggishness of the body and apathy of mind. In any case where the liver is sluggish ENO'S FRUIT SALT will increase its action by natural means, and thus prevent what is termed "the blues."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woe is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the CAPSULE is MARKED "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY AT ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S PATENT.

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

When her Majesty Queen Victoria paid her first visit to the city of London after her accession, the Observer came out with larger engravings than it had ever before produced. Two large views of the interior of Guildhall were given, together with a panoramic sketch of the Royal and civic procession, and a portrait of the youthful Queen, "surrounded by a beautiful Emblematic Design, in which innocence and strength are happily portrayed by the playfulness of the Doves and the fearless defiance of the Lion." Such was the flowery language of the Observer in those days.

THE CORONATION OF QUEEN VICTORIA.
From the "Observer," July 2, 1838.

The Observer of July 2, 1838, was a double number, price tenpence, and contained several illustrations of the coronation of Queen Victoria, which were also printed in Bell's Life. I have copied one of them, not because it is particularly good, but simply to mark an important historical event, which ought to have some record in an account of illustrated journalism.

On the occasion of her Majesty's marriage the Observer published a wedding number, containing several engravings, which were introduced to the reader thus:—"Little in the way of explanation is necessary to render the sketches in the opposite page, with which we have illustrated our account of the splendid ceremonials of Her Majesty's Nuptials on Monday last, intelligible. Our readers will no doubt make due allowance for any imperfections which may be discovered, when they reflect on the fact that the whole of the labours of the artists and the engravers have been accomplished in less than a week, and this under circumstances of difficulty, in obtaining admission to the scenes to be sketched, almost insurmountable. We should not be doing justice to our engraver were we not to state that it is to Mr. Orrin Smith we owe the consummation of our desire to gratify our patrons."

On Oct. 30, 1841, a fire occurred in the Tower of London, when the Armoury and 280,000 stand of arms were destroyed. On Nov. 7 the Observer published three illustrations of this great fire. On Nov. 14 it presented its subscribers with a large emblematic engraving on the occasion of the birth of the Prince of Wales. In the following January, when the Prince of Wales was christened, it published a large page engraving designed by W. B. Scott, and engraved by Smith and Linton, containing the ceremony of christening in St. George's Chapel, the banquet in St. George's Hall, illustrations of the history of the Princes of Wales from the presentation of the first Prince of Wales to the Welsh, to the religious instruction of Edward VI. by Archbishop Cranmer, including the battle of Cressy with its feats of the Black Prince, and the subsequent pageantry attending the introduction of the King of France as a prisoner into London over London Bridge; following this is the dismissal of Falstaff and his profligate companions by Henry V., with views of Windsor, &c. From this time until 1847 the Observer published no more engravings. In the interval the Illustrated London News commenced its career. On July 12, 1847, the Observer published the last of its illustrations. This was on the installation of Prince Albert as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge. The engravings have the name of W. J. Linton attached to them, and are on a larger scale, and are better done than anything hitherto appearing in the same paper.

The Weekly Chronicle, the first number of which was published Sept. 18, 1836, started with the idea of illustrating the news of the day as one of its principal features. The price was threepence, and with it was incorporated the Weekly Times. In the first number the public were "requested to be on their guard against the substitution of any other paper." This probably had reference to some threatened rivalship, for exactly a year later appeared Holt's Weekly Chronicle, a paper which also gave illustrations of current events. It published engravings connected with the rebellion in Canada, and also illustrated the burning of the Royal Exchange in 1838 It appears to have had only a brief existence. The first number of the Weekly Chronicle contained an engraving of "the new grand Balloon which ascended from Vauxhall Gardens with nine persons on Friday, September 9th, engraved by W. C. Walker, from a drawing made by a gentleman who ascended expressly for this paper." Number 2 contained a page of comic sketches, apparently by Seymour, and with the number for Oct. 30, 1836, was presented gratis an almanack containing a view of the new Houses of Parliament, not quite as the design was eventually carried out. Very early in its career the Weekly Chronicle selected the criminal records as favourite subjects for illustration. Perhaps some memory of the profits realised by the Observer on the occasion of the Weare murder induced the conductors to cultivate this class of news. Certainly nothing more repulsive ever figured in the pages of an illustrated newspaper than some of the woodcuts published by the Weekly Chronicle.

Towards the end of 1836 another attempt was made on the life of the King of the French, and on Jan. 8, 1837, the Weekly Chronicle published a portrait of the criminal. A month or two later the public were enlightened as to the personal appearance of another murderer, one Pegsworth, who had his portrait taken in Newgate on the morning of his execution. The annals of crime were varied by the exploits of war and a view of the heights of Amelzagame, illustrated the career of the Spanish Legion under the command of General Evans. In the spring of 1837 occurred the Greenacre murder, and the Weekly Chronicle at once went into the case with an evident determination to do full justice to its sensational merits. From the first examination of the murderer before the magistrates to his final exit in the Old Bailey the artists of the paper were on the alert, pencil in hand. It is a painful fact that the numbers of the Weekly Chronicle containing the illustrations of the Greenacre murder had a very large sale. The details of the crime are too shocking to recapitulate, but I will give a list of the woodcuts published in connection with it.

April 2, 1837.—A sketch of Greenacre taken while under examination at the police office. Head of the murdered woman as preserved in spirits at Paddington Workhouse.

April 9.—Greenacre taking notes at his examination before the magistrates at Marylebone Police Office. Exterior of Greenacre's house in Carpenter's-buildings, Windmill-lane, Camberwell. View of Pineapple-gate, Edgware-road, where the body was found. Matthew Hale, lock-keeper, who found the head. Rear of Greenacre's house. A back room looking into the garden. Portraits of Mrs. Gale and child taken while under examination at Marylebone Police Office. Room where the horrible mutilation was committed. Osier-bed in Cold-harbour-lane, where the legs were found.

April 16.—Trial of Greenacre.

April 23.—Chapel in Newgate, sketched during the preaching of the condemned sermon to Greenacre.

April 30.—Greenacre in condemned cell.

On May 7 the Weekly Chronicle wound up this series of illustrations by publishing a large cut, which it entitled, "A scene in the Old Bailey, immediately before the execution, engraved expressly for the Weekly Chronicle by a distinguished artist." According to an announcement in the paper itself, the sale of the Weekly Chronicle during the publication of these engravings was 130,000.

On May 14, 1837, the Weekly Chronicle published portraits of Sir Francis Burdett and Mr. Leader, the former of a superhuman length, with a shocking bad hat. In the following number, as if the public had not been sufficiently supplied with horrors, there was printed "a sketch of Eliza Davis as she lay on the mattress after the murder." This was known as the Frederick-street murder, and was remarkable from the circumstances, and from the fact that the murderer was never discovered. This paper now commenced "The Pictorial Gallery, illustrating every object of interest and curiosity in Art, Science, Literature, and amusement. (To be continued weekly)." In this series were published a view of the Euston Railway Station, a portrait of Madame Taglioni, a sketch of a novel mode of propelling balloons, representations of the Bedouin Arabs, the City of London School, the Adelaide Gallery, the Hippodrome at Bayswater, proclamation of Queen Victoria at Temple Bar, portraits of the Queen, the late King, the Earl of Durham, and the Duchess of Kent. Then followed a view of the Royal mausoleum at Windsor, and several illustrations of Mr. Cocking's fatal descent in a parachute.

Mr. Cocking was an enthusiast in aerostation—he was, in fact, balloon mad, and had spent years in inventing a parachute which he believed to be perfectly safe, and in which he ascended from Vauxhall Gardens on July 24, 1837, attached to Mr. Green's Royal Nassau balloon. The experiment was widely advertised, and when the day and hour arrived, the poor enthusiast faithfully appeared, and ascended in his fatal machine for more than a mile. He then himself liberated the parachute from the balloon. For a few seconds he descended steadily; the parachute then collapsed, broke, turned over, and shot straight down to the earth a hopeless ruin. Poor Cocking was still in the basket of the parachute when he reached the earth, but was quite insensible, and in ten minutes he was dead. The parachute fell at Lee; and it is recorded that not only was the machine itself carried away piecemeal, but the dead man's purse was stolen from his pocket, his watch, his snuff-box, his eye-glass were taken, even the cap was stolen from his head, the shoes were pulled from his feet, the buttons from his dress. Such statements seem incredible, and for the credit of human nature one could wish they were false; but they have been seriously made, and never contradicted.

The Weekly Chronicle published several illustrations of this event. They represent Mr. Cocking in the car of the parachute at the moment of ascension; the Nassau balloon as it appeared from the Royal Gardens, Vauxhall; the parachute in its various stages in its descent; and Mr. Cocking as he lay for the inspection of the jury in the room at the Tiger's Head, at Lee. The first of these I have copied below.

This rash adventure was wound up by the opening of a subscription list for the benefit of Cocking's widow, which was headed by the Queen with £50. The gas company that had supplied the gas for the disaster gave £30, and the proprietors of Vauxhall gave the gardens for a benefit. Thus the friends who ought to have restrained the vanity of the enthusiast and the speculators who led him on to his fate did their best in the way of atonement; but it was clearly a case where the civil power ought to have interposed to prevent the fatal catastrophe.

The Chronicle varied its illustrations of events by an occasional portrait of a public man, such as Mr. T. Wakley, Mr. Roebuck, Lord John Russell, and Daniel Whittle Harvey. The Queen's first visit to the City, and her Majesty delivering her speech to her first Parliament, furnished subjects for large woodcuts. Early in the year 1838 the Royal Exchange was burnt, and this historical event was made the subject of an engraving in the number for Jan. 14, 1838.

This year the Weekly Chronicle also published several engravings illustrative of the rebellion in Canada, including a portrait of Papineau, the insurgent leader, and views of

MR. COCKING IN HIS PARACHUTE AT THE MOMENT OF ASCENSION.
From the "Weekly Chronicle," July 30, 1837.

Quebec and Montreal. The murder of Eliza Grimwood in the Waterloo-road furnished another opportunity for sensational sketches, and in the same number that contained them (June 10, 1838) appeared three illustrations of the Courtney Riots at Canterbury. M. J.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

The annual congress of the Royal Archæological Institute will be held this year at Taunton, and will occupy the entire week, from Tuesday, the 5th, to Tuesday, Aug. 12, inclusive. It will be under the presidency of the Bishop of Bath and Wells and of Lord Talbot de Malahide; and the names of Lords Bath, Cork, Carnarvon, Bridport, Portman, and Carlingford appear on the list of patrons of the meeting. After the presidential address on Tuesday the members will visit Taunton Castle, St. Mary Magdalen's Church, and other objects of interest in the town, and will be entertained at lunch by the Mayor and Corporation. The next day (Wednesday) will be devoted to an excursion by railway to Cleeve Abbey and Dunster Castle, followed in the evening by a conversazione in the castle hall at Taunton. The morning of Thursday, being the annual meeting of the institute, will be devoted to business; and in the afternoon there will be a carriage excursion to Staple FitzPaine and Castle Neroche. Friday will be spent in visits to Bridgewater, Cannington, and Fairfield (where the members will be received by Sir A. Hood), and also to Quantoxhead and St. Audrie's; and in the evening the Mayor of Taunton will entertain the members and visitors at a conversazione. Saturday will be devoted to Muchelney Abbey, Montacute House, Barrington Court, Ilminster, &c.; and Sunday will be a dies non, but there will be a special service in the Church of St. Mary Magdalen. Monday will form, perhaps, the most attractive portion of the programme, as the institute will make an excursion on that day by railway to Glastonbury Abbey and to Wells, where, after inspecting the cathedral, close, deanery, &c., they will be hospitably received by the Bishop at the palace. The concluding day, Tuesday, will be occupied by sundry sectional meetings in the morning and excursions by carriages to Norton Fitzwarren, Bishop's Lydeard, Cothelstone, &c.; and the general concluding meeting will be held in the evening. During the week will be formed a temporary museum in the castle, under the superintendence of the Rev. W. Hunt and Mr. A. Malet.

The Surrey Archæological Society held its annual country meeting on the 17th inst., being favoured with excellent weather. Lord Hylton acted as president for the day; and, on passing the gates of his park at Merstham, the party were invited to refreshment under a large marquée. Afterwards they visited Merstham church, which they found to have been restored more than once since their former visit. The carriages thence proceeded to Chaldon church, where an able paper upon its architecture was read by Mr. Nevill, F.S.A., followed by Mr. J. G. Walker, with a highly interesting description of the celebrated wall painting. Chipstead church was next visited, where Major Heales, F.S.A., gave a history of the building as deduced from the fabric, and pointed out its special features; and thence the party went to Gatton Hall, by the kind permission of Mr. Robert M'Calmont, and at Gatton church Canon Cazenove (the Rural Dean) called attention to the beautiful woodwork brought from Flanders; and Mr. W. G. Leveson-Gower, F.S.A., standing beneath the trees which formerly served for (as, indeed, the site is called) the Borough Hall, read a paper on "The Parliamentary History of that very rotten borough." The line of route passed through a beautiful country. The meeting ended by a collation at the Royal Public Hall, at which Lord Hylton presided.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

A grand musical entertainment was given here on Wednesday evening in aid of the sufferers from the inundations in Italy, and from the eruption of Mount Etna. The programme comprised portions of several familiar operas, and included the co-operation of some of the principal artists of the establishment, a special feature having been the performance of a new piece, entitled "Fior di Primavera," for orchestra and military band, composed by Madame Adelina Patti. Of this we must speak next week. The benefit of Madame Patti was announced to take place on Thursday, in "Il Barbière di Siviglia;" and the season is to close this (Saturday) evening with "L'Etoile du Nord," Madame Patti sustaining the character of Caterina. The other performances since our last record have consisted of repetitions of operas as recently noticed, until yesterday (Friday) week, when "Il Trovatore" was given for the first and only time this season, with Madame Patti as Leonora, in which her singing and acting were of the same high excellence as on many former occasions in the same part. The character of Azucena was efficiently filled by Mdlle. Pasqua, and others as often before, including Signor Nicolini (Manrico), and Signor Graziani (Conte di Luna).

The season just terminated opened on April 8 with "Le Prophète," in which Madame Scalchi sustained the character of Fides and Signor Gayarrè that of John of Leyden, as during last season. Madame Adelina Patti reappeared on May 13 as Aïda, having subsequently repeated other well-known performances, an addition to her répertoire having been made by her first assumption, on June 14, of the character of Selika in "L'Africaine." Domestic reasons have prevented Madame Albani's appearance in public during the opera season. Other well-known artists, besides those just named, have reappeared, including Mesdames Scalchi and Cepeda, Mdlles. Hilbron, Thalberg, Mantilla, Cottino, Sonnino, Belocca, Ghiotti, M. Capoul, Signori Sabater, Manfredi, and Fille; M. Maurel, Signori Cotogni, Ciampi, Capponi, Scolara, and Raguer. That excellent artist Mdlle. Valleria transferred her services from Her Majesty's Theatre to this establishment; and successful first appearances have been made by Mesdames Turolla, Rosine Bloch, Pasqua, Schou; Signori Nouvelli, Sylva, Igenio Corsi, and MM. Lassalle and Vidal.

As regards novelties, the promise made by Messrs. Gye (sons and successors of the late Mr. Frederick Gye) have been faithfully kept, two out of the works named in the prospectus having been produced. These were Italian versions of "Les Amants de Verone," by the Marquis d'Ivry, and M. Victor Massenet's "Le Roi de Lahore." On these works and their efficient performance we commented at the time.

The orchestral, choral, and scenic effects have been on the same efficient scale as heretofore; and the ballet department has included the clever dancing of Mdlle. Zucchi and the Mdlles. Reuters. The chief duties of conductor have been, as during previous seasons, ably fulfilled by Signor Vianesi; some of the performances having been, as hitherto, skilfully directed by Signor Bevignani.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We gave last week a summary of the proceedings at this establishment during the regular season, which ended a fortnight ago. The supplemental series of performances, at reduced prices, have drawn good houses. The chief specialty of last week was Mdlle. Minnie Hauk's first assumption here of the character of Elsa in "Lohengrin," in which that excellent artist achieved a genuine success. She sang the music with alternate sentiment and brilliancy, and her dramatic conception of the part was throughout highly effective. The cast was otherwise the same as that recently commented on. On Monday "Mignon" was repeated, with the title-character transferred to Madame Marie Roze, who sang with artistic style and acted with genuine dramatic power, having thus added another part to her répertoire here; one, however, in which she had been successful in America. The cast of the opera was otherwise the same as recently. For Thursday last "Linda di Chamouni" was announced, for the first time at this theatre, with Madame Gerster as Linda. Of this performance we must speak next week.

The series of extra performances at reduced prices is to be prolonged to Aug. 2.

The annual orchestral concert of the students of the Royal Academy of Music took place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, when the Duchess of Edinburgh distributed the prizes. These included the Parepa-Rosa and Lewellyn Thomas gold medals for singing, awarded respectively to J. H. D'Egville and Marian M'Kenzie; and the Lucas silver medal for composition, to A. G. Thomas; other prizes having been bestowed on Margaret Gyde and F. W. Bampfylde (for pianoforte playing), A. F. Jarratt (for declamatory English singing), T. A. Matthay and H. R. Rose, for composition; besides silver and bronze medals and certificates of merit to a large number of the other students. The performances were generally very satisfactory, including the pianoforte playing of Miss M. Willett and Mr. F. W. W. Bampfylde, the violin playing of Master J. Payne, and the singing of Misses A. Patterson, A. Aylward, E. Lloyd, Madame M. Bolingbroke, Mr. A. F. Jarratt, Mr. Davies, and others. Favourable proofs of progress in composition were offered in an "Andante" and "Gavotte" for orchestra by Cecile Hartog, and a "Creed" (from Communion Service) by Ernest Ford. The performances were conducted by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

A dramatic performance of Auber's opera, "Le Maçon," followed by Grisar's operetta, "The Disguise," was given at St. George's Hall on Thursday evening, by the London Academy of Music. We must defer till next week giving a notice of the performances and of the distribution of prizes to the pupils of this Academy, which took place the same evening.

The so-called Musical Festival in aid of the fund for the restoration of Chester Cathedral took place on Wednesday and Thursday. On each day there was a special service in the cathedral, where, on the first day, Attwood's Coronation Anthem, "I was glad," a new "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" by Dr. Bridge, Spohr's "Last Judgment," and a short selection from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" were performed; and on the following day another "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis," by Dr. Bridge, and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were given. On Wednesday evening there was a miscellaneous concert. A full orchestra was engaged, and the chorus was formed from the cathedral choirs of Chester, Westminster Abbey, York, Durham, Ripon, Manchester, Worcester, Hereford, Bangor, St. Asaph, St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Leeds parish church, and the College chapels of the University of Cambridge. The solo singers named were Miss José Sherrington, Miss Jessie Jones, Madame Patey, Mr. Joseph Maas, and Signor Foli. Dr. Bridge conducted, and Dr. Rogers, of Bangor Cathedral, presided at the organ.

Dr. Sloman's cantata "Supplication and Praise" will be performed by the Norwood Choral Society during the ensuing autumn, it being now in course of rehearsal.

The original autograph will of George Frederic Handel was sold by auction on Monday by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson for £53, the purchaser being Mr. W. H. Cummings.

The general congress of the Cecilia Societies of Germany will be held at Ratisbon on Aug. 4, 5, and 6. The object of these societies is to effect a reform of the music in the Roman Catholic churches, and to bring it back to the more severe style of Palestrina and his school. It is usual at these German annual meetings to perform some specimen works (both of the more important and minor kind) of the earlier Church composers; and as the number of singers is large, and all have been thoroughly well trained, the effect of ensemble, which is one of the great features in such works, is always well realised. At the approaching meeting there will be choral services and other performances of church music both in the forenoons and afternoons of Aug. 5 and 6, in the Cathedral of Ratisbon, and the Dominican church and the Church of St. Emmeran. The chief selection of music of the early composers will be on the afternoon of the 6th.

THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.

Miss Neilson reappeared on Saturday, commencing a series of twelve performances previous to the resumption of her professional engagements in the United States. "Romeo and Juliet" was represented on the occasion; and on Monday, "As You Like It." Both plays serve to illustrate the mingled delicacy and power of the actress's style and genius, and they have continued judiciously to be alternated during the week.

COURT.

Mr. John Hare terminated on Saturday, as announced, his management of the theatre which has owed all its popularity to his excellent conduct of its business. The programme included the comedietta of "Cousin Dick," the comedy of "The Lady's Battle," and the little play of "A Quiet Rubber." Mr. Hare availed himself of the occasion to address the audience, and explained his mode of proceeding, and his designs touching the St. James's Theatre, which it is his purpose to reopen next October. In referring to the influence of the recent performances of the Comédie Française, he remarked, "that it should have needed the advent of a troupe of foreign artists to compel this marked recognition of the dignity of histrionic art is no doubt galling to English actors—not that the latter are jealous of it; on the contrary, perhaps the warmest, certainly the most appreciative admirers of the finest company of the world have been their English brothers in art;—but," added Mr. Hare, appealing to his audience, "you must not think us vain if the effect upon us, after witnessing their representations, is to give us a feeling of pride and strength in ourselves, inasmuch as that, without the aid and advantages given by the State and by the marvellous system of enforced training in which those gifted artists are subjected, we in England in the case of individual actors, and in many all-round representations at theatres devoted to various forms of dramatic expression, have unassisted, save by native wit and perseverance, succeeded in a manner that we have every reason to be proud of; and when that general respect and sympathy are extended to our art that are given to the sister arts (and our own when expressed in a different language), so much higher and more ambitious will be the aim of the actor, so much better the work given to the public." Mr. Hare then alluded to his proposed management of the St. James's, undertaken in conjunction with his friend Mr. Kendal, with the "reasonable hope of conducting successfully a theatre which, up to the present time, has laboured under the stigma of being unfortunate." He then proceeded to state that "our plan of campaign will be similar to the one adopted by me here. Comedy and comedy-drama will form the staple of our dramatic fare, and we shall endeavour to get the best company together, with a view to giving that which is always, I take it, the most satisfactory thing to an audience—an even all-round performance. Our opening play will be "The Queen's Shilling," which has already been received with great favour at matinées, and in the course of the season we may revive one or more English comedies, and an original play by Mr. Dubourg will also be produced. These remarks and arrangements appear to us to be very judicious, and we wish Mr. Hare full success in his venture.

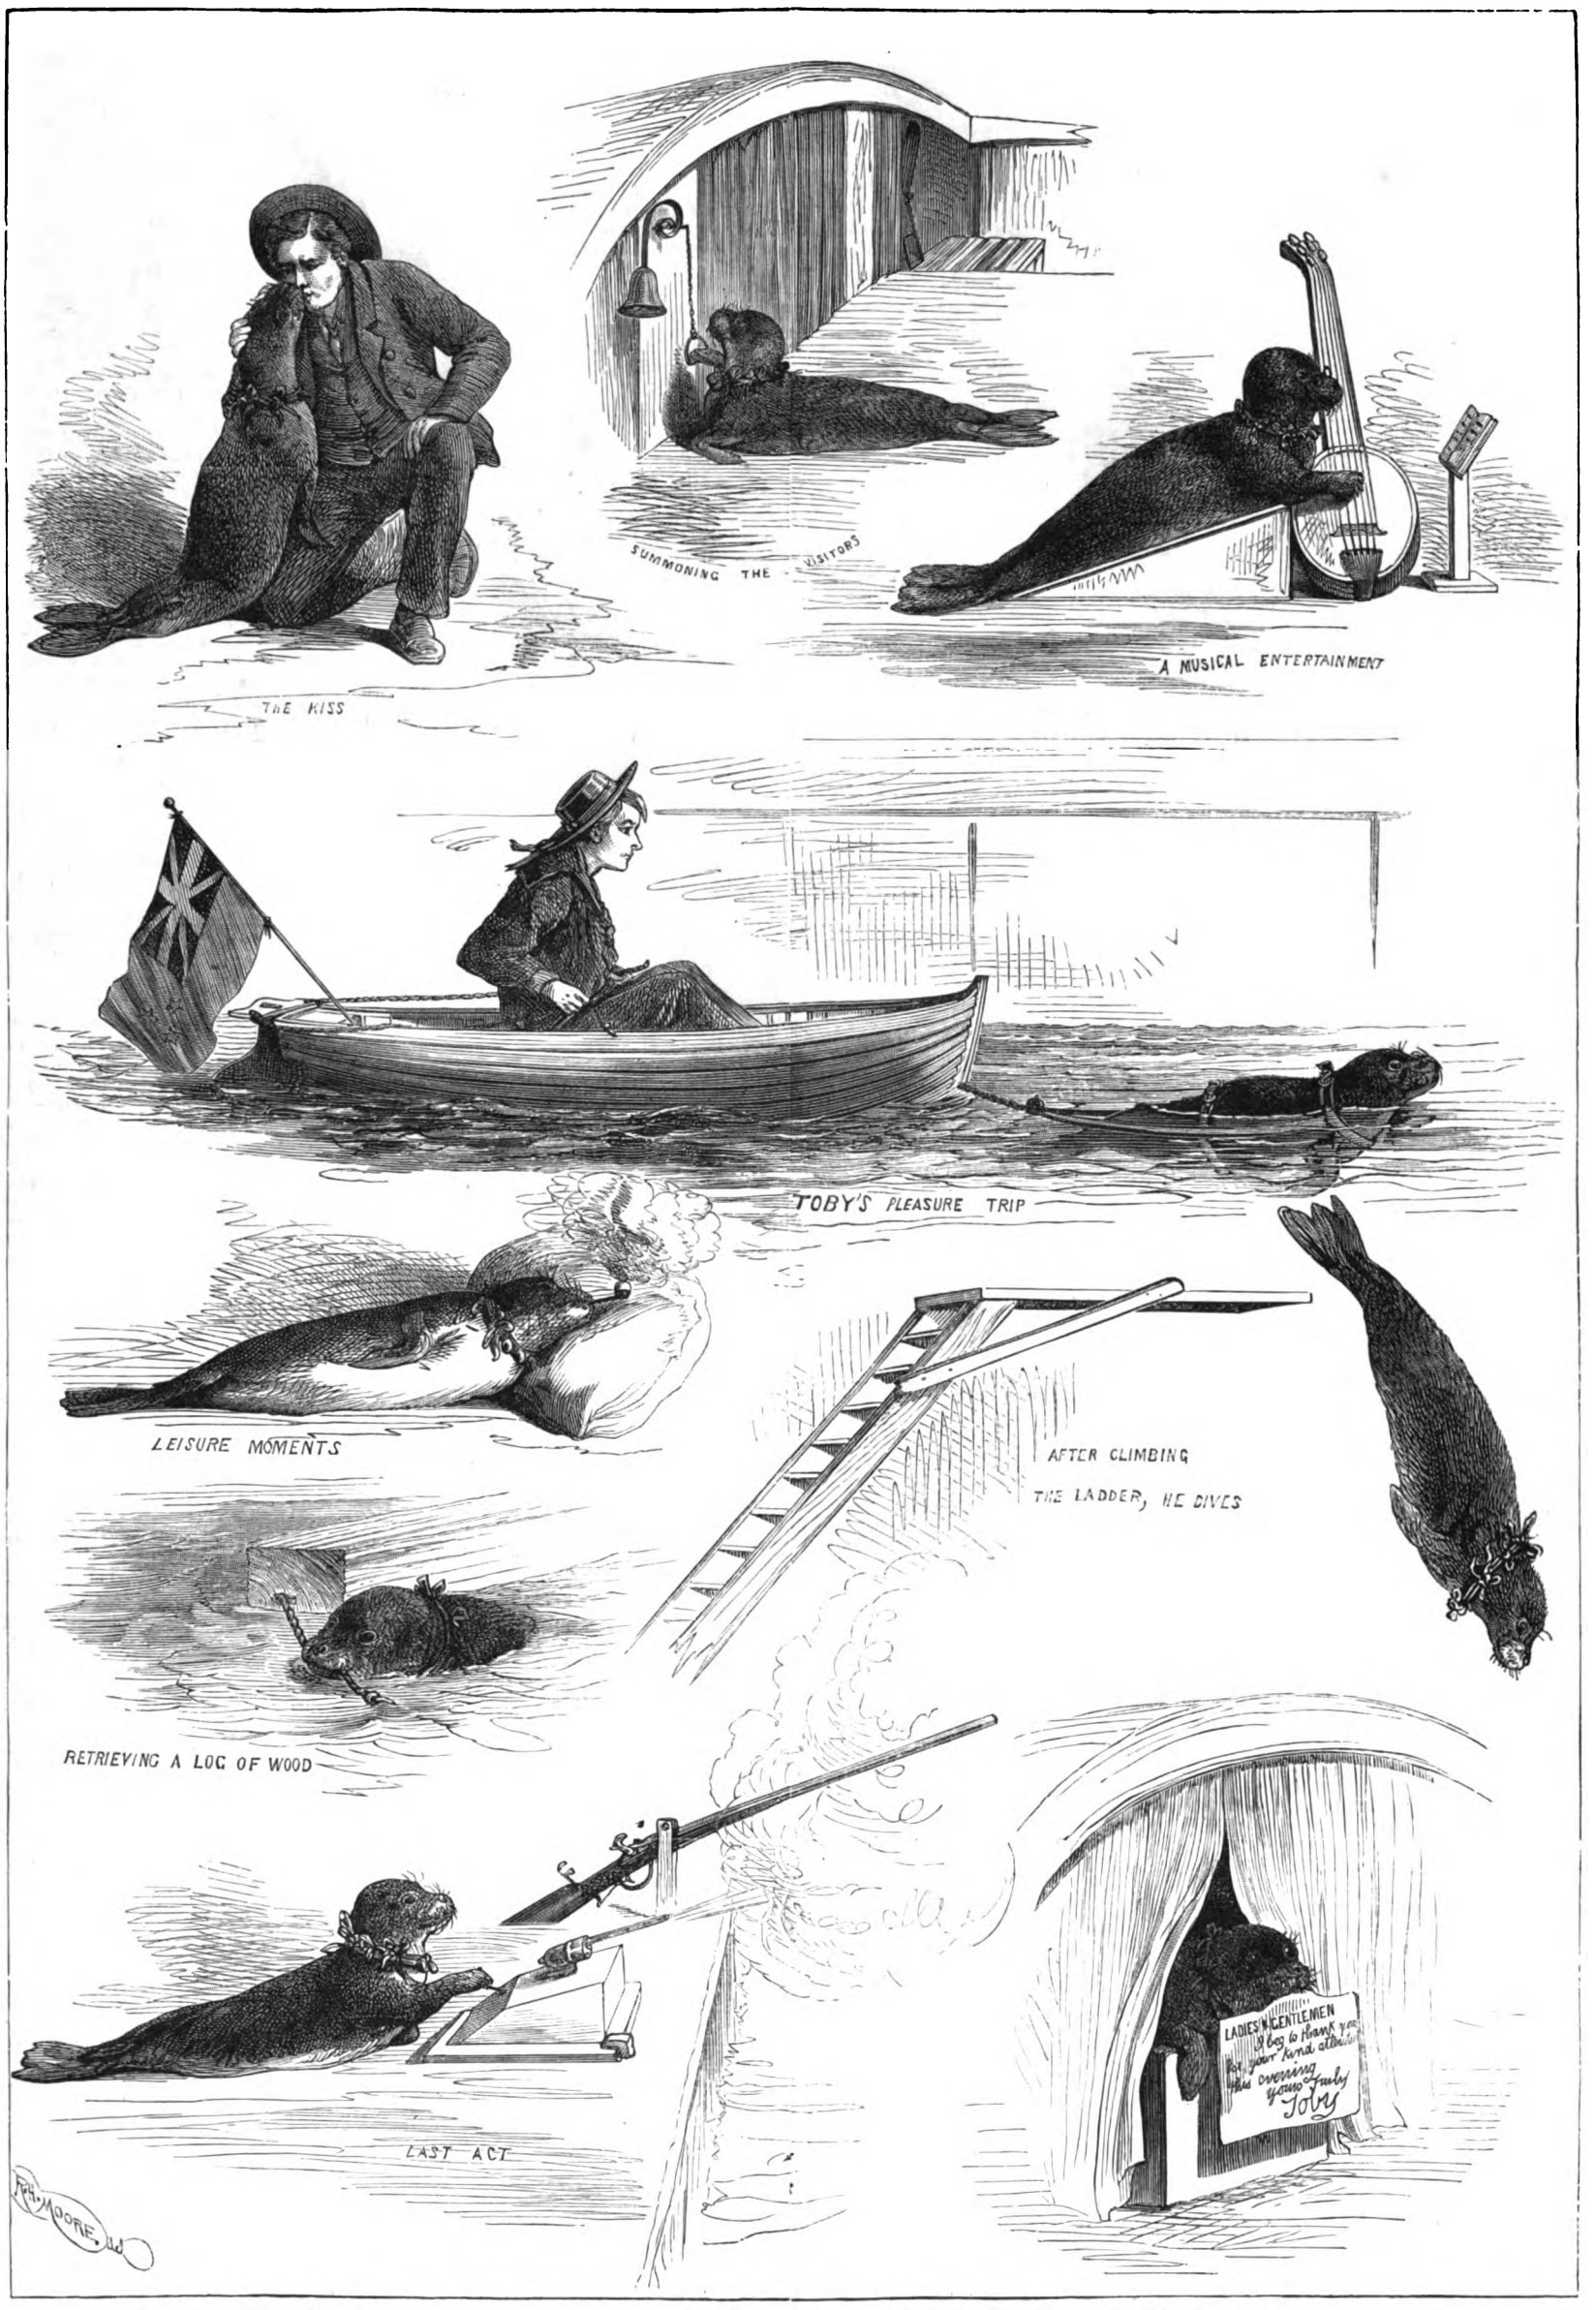
OLYMPIC.

This house was on Monday the scene of, in its way, a daring and, relatively to the audience, triumphant experiment. Messrs. Paul Meritt and Henry Pettitt, who formerly had so prominent a hand in the production of original pieces at the Grecian, have essayed their best skill in providing a similar popular sort of drama for the West-End. They acknowledge that in this sort of thing there is no special literary aim, nor any other than an humble endeavour to entertain a large section of the public by means of dramas that they can understand and sympathise with. These dramas have generally a pronounced moral purpose and a specific application. Goethe has told us that the drama or romance which is capable of being condensed into a moral tag pronounced at the end is essentially a bad one, at least one of moderate ambition, and that the highest efforts of dramatic genius have signally avoided the practice. Modern writers, particularly among the French, and at our East-End houses, have sought popularity by adopting it. Mr. Charles Reade has acquired that same popularity by pursuing it as a plan;—specifically in his "Never Too Late to Mend," and in his adaptation of "L'Assommoir," under the title of "Drink." Messrs. Meritt and Pettitt are well-practised hands in such productions. Ignoring "literary merit," as it is "called," they have "simply aimed at human interest, and to illustrate the terrible consequence of intemperance by means of a simple, honest, English melodrama, intended to reflect English homes, and English hearts, and English life." They insist that in this they have not imitated "L'Assommoir," but stand on original ground, and paint life from their own observation, and as it exists in those who live it. Their present work, they state, has long been in existence, though not acted, and has no relation at all to the French drama. Nevertheless, we have detected more than one situation having a manifest reference to the Princess's version. We dwell not on this, for undoubtedly the Olympic drama stands on independent ground, and shows considerable original talent. The drama is in five acts, and is of great length. It has, however, what its authors name "human interest," and is skilfully manipulated. This kind of interest is mainly centred in two parts, acted by Mr. Edward Righton and Miss Maria Davis, which are as well drawn as they are amusing. Mr. Alexander Needham and Mrs. Ambrosia Needham are an eccentric couple—the former acting as broker's man and in other occasional callings, and the latter keeping a chandler's shop. Both, engaged apparently in sordid business, have tender and benevolent hearts, and are capable of great generosity. The lady gives unlimited trust in her shop, and the gentleman (for so he deserves to be called) gives up his own dinner to the unfortunate whom he is expected to "distress." They are, in fact, angels in disguise; and so much is said two or three times over in the dialogue, so anxious are the authors that the pit shall catch their meaning. The other two promising parts are Matthew Brayton and Mary Brayton, his wife (Mr. W. H. Vernon and Miss Louise Moodie), the victim of thirst, and his unhappy partner, who, bred in the country, fall easily victims to London sharpers, and imitate their worst habits. Of these, the chief is Stephen Luard (Mr. E. H. Brooke), who lives by the circulation of forged notes. The rest of the characters, more than thirty in number, are necessarily mere sketches. The story, such as it is, lies in a nutshell. All parties are engaged in "The Worship of Bacchus"—such is the title of the piece, and such is the tale it tells. It divides itself into portions relative to the worship and its temple. It begins "at the gates" of the latter. The Devonshire couple are in a state of excitement, and the husband has already cultivated the art of constant thirsting and frequently visiting the public-house, in the vain attempt of allaying a vicious habit. He finds solace in a London tavern, and is seduced into the snuggery. The next step shows him in "the Temple," a room in Rasper's-alley; and the next at "the Shrine," in a restaurant in Leicester-square. His appearance in the charge-room at Bow-street police-station is described as "Behind the Veil." The last act shows the reformed culprit at the Old Home in Devonshire, under the title of "The Broken Idol;" and here he takes revenge on his old tempters for the ruin they had betrayed him into, showing that, albeit he had been cured of the vice of drunkenness, he remained a slave to bad passions. There is a manifest want of elevation and completeness in the moral, with an admixture of something worse to supply the deficiency. The acting was careful throughout, and the new scenery and effects were good and striking. So far the arrangements were commendable; and there were some occasional pious sentiments, which were applauded. Indeed, the theme is one fitter for the pulpit than the stage.

It is announced that Mr. George Buckland is about to reappear at the Polytechnic on and after the 24th inst.; and, as a new entertainment has been written for the occasion by Mr. F. G. Burnand, there can be no doubt that many a hearty laugh will be got out of Professor Pepper's Metempsychosis, which is to be introduced.

THE LAWN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP.

The playing of an interesting series of matches in this popular and fashionable exercise of skill at the All-England Croquet Club Ground, Wimbledon, is the subject of one of our Illustrations. It was on Monday, the 6th inst., that the competition began, to be carried on through six rounds, the winner of the duel upon each occasion having to meet a fresh antagonist at the next meeting. The prize of that ultimate superiority, which may be styled, in Darwinian philosophical terms, "the survival of the fittest," was the Gold Prize and the Championship of Lawn Tennis, with a cup held by the champion for each year. This honour was gained in 1877 by Mr. Spencer N. Gore, and in 1878 by Mr. P. F. Hadow, who is now absent in Ceylon, his ordinary residence these four years past, and has not therefore been able to defend his title for the present year. The two leading competitors at the present meeting, as the matches went on day after day, proved to be Mr. J. T. Hartley, of Yorkshire, and the Irish champion, Mr. V. St. Leger. Among those who had contended and succumbed to the prowess of one or another of this conquering pair were Messrs. C. J. Heathcote, A. S. Tabor, and C. F. Parr; while Sir Victor Brooke, Mr. C. D. Barry, and others, played their part with much dexterity. At last, on Tuesday week, the 15th, the final round was played between Mr. Hartley and Mr. St. Leger. The Irish champion was decidedly the favourite in betting circles, and his performance was eagerly watched by the spectators, among whom not a few ladies occupied chairs on the ground. But he was, after all, rather easily vanquished by Mr. Hartley, who throughout all the sets played in the most wonderful way, returning balls over the nets everywhere. Though the rain had been very heavy in the night, the lawns were in a very good state for playing, great care having been taken in rolling them during the morning. More than a thousand people were on the ground, and the interest shown in every rally was remarkable. The form of both the competitors was far superior to anything yet seen in any lawn tennis matches, the returns being not only very good both as to height and sharpness, but also as to the placing. Mr. Hartley won the first set by six games to two, the second by six to four, and also the third by six to two. The first and second sets were the best contested, three of the games in each being called "deuce." The certainty of Mr. Hartley's returns was most marvellous, ball after ball being sent back which most players would have given up as hopeless. There were other prizes and matches on the ground in those days. Our Illustrations show the final round of the contest for the Championship, and two or three little bits of by-play among the spectators; that of "three to love" being intelligible not perhaps to all our lady readers, but to all who are conversant with the rules and scores of lawn tennis.



An action was on the 17th inst. brought at the Maidstone Assizes by a widow to recover damages from the South-Eastern Railway Company for causing the death of her husband. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £900, and apportioned to the widow £400, and £125 to each of her four children.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

Mormonism and its accessories were at one time topics of absorbing interest, but that mine of curiosities has been so energetically worked that it is a question whether the Mormonic experiences related in Rambles in North-Western America, by John Mortimer Murphy (Chapman and Hall), will awaken more than a transient feeling of mild surprise, not unaccompanied by contempt. And yet the two chapters devoted to Utah, its area and population, its agricultural aspect, its adaptability for grazing purposes, its climate, minerals and mining districts, its remarkable streams, its abundance of fish and game, its natural scenery, and its unnatural system of religious doctrines and social institutions, are quite worthy of close attention. And so are all the other portions of the book, in which the author describes what seemed to him most to deserve notice, as he travelled and observed and made "assiduous inquiries," from the Pacific Ocean to the Rocky Mountains, in Oregon, Washington Territory, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Wyoming. Marvels he has to tell of; but, of course, he has been to some extent anticipated, and the edge has been taken off from the novelty of his revelations. It is some years since the quiet readers who stay at home were fain to gape with admiration over the spectacle presented in the pages of "The Yellowstone Region;" but reminiscences of that charming work enhance rather than diminish the gratification derived from Mr. Murphy's chapter concerning "the Yellowstone National Park." It is a park well suited to the ideas of the nation which boasts that it possesses the "biggest" of everything. Fancy a "park" with an "area of 3575 square miles!" There may be something irónical in the notion of setting apart "for the benefit and enjoyment of the people" a place so situated that "the people," with their limited amount of opportunities, are not likely to "look in" between work and bed-time; but it is no doubt true that, when you are once there, "as a ground of recreation, in every sense of the word, it has no peer, nor is there any to approach it in its array of numerous and magical attractions." What if it be 6000 feet above the level of the sea, and "hemmed in on all sides by mountains that range from 9000 to 12,000 feet in altitude, and are perpetually enshrouded in snow," so that "the weather is very severe there, except from June to September, and even then frost is found every night, and the thermometer frequently falls to 23 deg. or lower?" Well, on the other hand, "every element which one might think of in a landscape may, in fact, be found there." Do "the people" rejoice in "the most violent igneous action?" There it is, and plenty of it. In "deep and gloomy precipices?" They are there; and so are "brilliant waterfalls, crackling lakes of brownish mud, and tarns as crystalline as a mirror," forming a striking contrast with "turbid streams of sooty water." Springs there are, on the one hand, "as pure and cold as ice," and, on the other, "so hot that they can cook an egg in five minutes." The eye which is satiated with "miniature fountains, that gleam in the sunshine," can be relieved, at once and on the spot, at a turn of the head, with the sight of "stupendous geysers that hurl the water into the air to a distance of from 50 ft. to 200 ft." There is "bracing air that arouses every nerve into action, and imparts to the mind and body extraordinary exhilaration," and, should the exhilaration require to be taken down a peg, there are, hard by, "noxious vapours of sulphur, soda, salt, and other minerals that depress the spirits." Add to this cataracts, canyons, and splendid rivers stocked with fish, to say nothing of the game on land—the bear, the panther, the buffalo, the wolf, the deer, and what not, whilst "the feathered tribe is numerous enough to satisfy the appetite of the most insatiable fowler." From which it would appear as if it were open to anybody to "fowl" and to follow other sports; but should "the people" ever come forth "in their millions" to take advantage of the privilege, it is probable that "boards" would soon have to be put up, even in that miraculous "park" of more than three thousand square miles. Last in order, but certainly not least in interest, is the chapter which the author occupies with an account of the "Flatheads," the name formerly given to all the Indians in "the vast country lying between the Pacific Ocean and the Rocky Mountains, owing to their habit of compressing the cranium, so as to give it a flattened appearance in the frontal and occipital regions," but "now more particularly applied to tribes that dwell in Oregon, Washington Territory, and parts of Idaho and Montana, as they still retain the custom in a large degree, though it is fast dying out with the rising generation." They do not seem likely to make a name for themselves as musicians, seeing that their music, at any rate their dance-music, is said to be limited to the beating together of two pieces of stick with a vocal accompaniment of "He, ha! hi, ho!" or, perhaps, "Hee-haw!" on special occasions, and a "grunting sound" of "hu ha! hu ha!" When discoursing about Cheyenne, the author tell us that women sit upon juries, and relates that "men are said to be rather partial to the feminine jury, as it is more apt to do them justice than one composed entirely of the sturdy sex;" and this view is confirmed by the "sage remark" of a veteran defendant in cases for breach of promise: "Them womin know mighty quick," said he, "how a fellow is taken in by designin' widders and gals that seem innocent-like, and, knowin' it, they give a man some show; for womin is things that no man can know, and they know it." Altogether, the book is excellent reading, useful as well as amusing. The exact date of the author's travels is not mentioned in such a manner as to strike the eye and impress itself upon the memory, if at all; but there is reason to believe that his expedition took place about three years ago. There is a convenient map, but there is no index.

Splendid is scarcely too strong an epithet to apply to the handsome and very important volume entitled From Egypt to Palestine: by S. C. Bartlett, D.D., LL.D. (Sampson Low and Co), a volume of Transatlantic authorship, full of learning, observation, argument, and carefully-drawn conclusions, with elaborate maps, numerous charming illustrations, an appendix relating to thermometrical matters, and an ever desirable index. The scope of the work will be best understood from the following brief statement:—The author desired to gather together in a compact form, for the benefit of his fellow-creatures, the results arrived at from the investigations carried on for many years past into the history of the Israelites in connection with the Sinaitic Peninsula. He would, of course, have to weigh various discoveries and theories; and he determined to qualify himself for the task by personal examination of places and things. He was fortunate enough to have for his companions "three intelligent and observing friends," whose co-operation must have been invaluable to him, and whose support, if in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom, must, whenever they agreed with him, have lent to his authority an additional force which is not likely to be lost upon the more intelligent and reflective of his readers. Nor is his own unassisted authority inconsiderable, for he is announced as "President of Dartmouth College, and lately Professor of the Chicago Theological Seminary." So worshipful a dignitary would be sure to bring to the labours of his survey a mind well stored with knowledge and well trained for the accomplishment of his aim. It is true that he might also bring with him a bias, a load of prejudices; but his praiseworthy resolution to see for himself and form his judgment, as far as possible, on ocular evidence and the probabilities it might suggest, is the best indication he could give of his conscientiousness and of his desire to deal impartially. He does not seem, however, to have spent a disproportionately vast number of months over the work of personal verification of localities; indeed, the whole trip is made out to have lasted only from December in one year to April in the next; but, on the other hand, further lingering would probably in many cases have been mere waste of time. The author, if he have been properly understood, took a plunge, as it were, into the antique atmosphere of Rome by way of preparing himself for the influence of a still more remote antiquity; and so went by way of Brindisi to Alexandria, tasting for forty-eight hours the bitterness of quarantine. In a few chapters he is in the land of Goshen, and forthwith he begins his disputations. But long before this he has run a-tilt against Professor Piazzi Smith, whose notion that the great pyramid's proportions were divinely inspired to teach us the exact length of a yard-measure and the true capacity of a pint-pot he characterises as "all this extravagance," remarking further that "General Sir Henry James, of the British Ordnance Survey, in his brief Notes on the Great Pyramid (1869), has punctured this bubble summarily, but satisfactorily," the "bubble" being, of course, the learned Professor's aforesaid notion touching the burial-place of Cheops. Indeed, the author's range of observation and disputation is very wide, whereby his subject proper is greatly diversified and enlivened.

MADAME ROZE (MAPLESON).

This lady, Madame Roze, is the wife of a son of Mr. Mapleson, of Her Majesty's Theatre. Marie Roze was born in Paris, in 1849, and was partly educated in England for the sake of acquiring a knowledge of our language. Her remarkable musical and dramatic talents were early recognised by Auber, the great composer, who was a friend of the family; and at his instance Mdlle. Roze became a pupil at the Paris Conservatoire, where her progress was great and rapid, and she soon made her début at the Opéra Comique, with a success that was sustained by repeated appearances in various masterpieces of French opera—the last but one of Auber's productions, "Le Premier Jour de Bonheur," having included the co-operation of Mdlle. Roze in the important part of Djelma, for which she was specially chosen by the composer. The début of the accomplished vocalist in this country took place during Mr. Mapleson's season at Her Majesty's Opera, in 1872, at Drury-Lane Theatre. The decided success then obtained was enhanced in subsequent appearances there, and afterwards at Her Majesty's Theatre on Mr. Mapleson's removal to the new building. Since 1877 the lady, recently married, has fulfilled a round of engagements in America, where she was recognised at once as an artist of exceptional merit. Her reappearance at Her Majesty's Theatre, with rather enhanced than diminished powers, has recently been noticed by us.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mora, of Broadway, New York.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Metzler have lately brought out some pleasing vocal pieces, among which are two graceful songs—"Rest, weary heart," and "I will seek her whom I adore"—by Signor Arditi; two songs by Berthold Tours, "The old trysting-tree" and "A shadow only," each one full of flowing melody and nice feeling; "The solicitor's song," "Strictly proper" (duo bouffe), "The servant's song," and the ballad, "True, true love," from Mr. Alfred Cellier's lively music to the vaudeville, "After All." The same publishers have also issued Mr. Brinley Richards's effective pianoforte transcription of the popular "Toreador's song," from Bizet's "Carmen;" other brilliant and moderately difficult pianoforte pieces from the same firm being P. De Vos's "Melodia Brazileira"—and "L'Attaque" ("Galop Militaire") and "Morning Chimes" ("Caprice Matinal"), both by Edouard Dorn.

From Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. we have two pleasing songs, "When the crimson sun was low," and "After so long"—each in the sentimental style, and both bearing the well-known name of Louisa Gray, as also does a very spirited Polka for the Pianoforte, entitled "Hand in Hand."

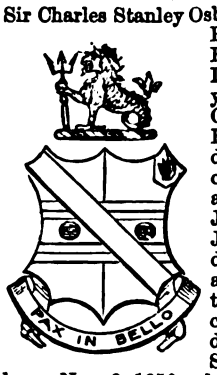
"The Organists' Quarterly Journal," Part 43, for July (Novello, Ewer, and Co.), has a special interest, opening, as it does, with a "Postlude" by the late Henry Smart, whose death was recently recorded by us. The movement just specified was probably one of his recent compositions, being produced specially for this work, as all its contents are. Like all Mr. Smart's music, the "Postlude" is written with the fluency and coherence of a practised and skilled master; and is admirably calculated for the display of an instrument on which he was himself so accomplished a performer. It opens with a dignified "Andante lento," leading to a highly effective and well-sustained "Allegro," in which the several manuals and their various stops are skilfully contrasted. The number contains other well-written pieces, consisting of an "Andante," by Hamilton Robinson, R.A.M.: an "Introduction and Fugue," by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew; an "Introduction and Allegro," by Dr. Spark (the editor of the work); and a "Prelude and Fugue," by C. E. Melville.

"Earl Haldan's Daughter" is a setting, by Professor G. A. Macfarren, of words by the late Charles Kingsley. The music is in the form of a trio for soprano, contralto, and bass, with a pianoforte accompaniment. Mr. Macfarren has successfully reflected the spirit of the words, and has impressed a distinctive character on his trio; which is, moreover, well written for the display of each voice, in alternation and combination. Messrs. Duff and Stewart are the publishers.

ROYAL AQUARIUM, WESTMINSTER.

The entertainments at this popular establishment are sufficiently varied for all differences of taste, and special directions of curiosity or fancy, in the minds of many thousand visitors, including both regular Londoners and country people visiting London. There is a performing bull from sunny Spain, Ligero by name, whose accomplishments are worthy of that land of romantic chivalry; but there is also, a creature of high merit in its way, the performing seal, which is the subject of our Illustration. It reminds us of the gambols that everybody has seen in the large circular basin at the Zoological Society's Gardens, where that kindly venerable old French sailor used to encourage his sea-lions to disport themselves in his gentle company for the public amusement. The feeding of the seals and otters at the Royal Aquarium is an ordinary operation to be witnessed three times a day. There are, moreover, a troupe of performing fleas; one of performing dogs, who are, we trust, exempt from fleas of their own; marionettes, ballet-girls, a crystallised woman, and several artists of illusion, legerdemain, and other pleasant surprises or wonders. The Aquarium Theatre, with good old English comedy and brisk novelty of burlesque, has a more intellectual attraction for its attentive audience.

OBITUARY.



VISCOUNT ST. VINCENT.

The Right Hon. Carnegie Robert John Jervis, third Viscount St. Vincent, of Meaford, in the county of Stafford, died at Courtlees, near Canterbury, on the 19th inst. His Lordship was born Aug. 12, 1825, the elder son of the Hon. William Jervis, by Sophia, his wife, daughter of George Narbonne Vincent, Esq., and was grandson of Edward Jervis, second Viscount St. Vincent (nephew of the celebrated Naval commander, Earl St. Vincent), whom he succeeded Sept. 25, 1859. Lord St. Vincent was educated at Eton. He was a J.P. and D.L. for Staffordshire, and a Magistrate for Kent. He married, March 14, 1848, Lucy Charlotte, youngest daughter of John Baskeroyle Glegg, Esq., of Withington Hall, Cheshire, and had five sons and four daughters. The peerage devolves on his eldest son, John Edward Leveson, now fourth Viscount St. Vincent, Lieutenant 7th Hussars, who was born April 3, 1850.

SIR C. S. OSBORNE, BART.

Sir Charles Stanley Osborne, thirteenth Baronet, of Beechwood Park, in the county of Tipperary, and Eccleston-square, London, died in Dublin, on the 16th inst. He was the youngest son of Sir Daniel Toler Osborne, eleventh Baronet, by Lady Harriette Le Poer Trench, his wife, daughter of William, first Earl of Clancarty, and succeeded to the baronetcy at his elder brother Sir William's death, July 2, 1875. Sir Charles married, first, July 13, 1846, Emilie (who died 1869), daughter of M. Geantz, of Arden, France; and secondly, 1873, Emma, daughter of the late Charles Webb, Esq., of Clapham-common, but had no issue. The title devolves, consequently, on the present Sir Francis Osborne, fourteenth Baronet, born Nov. 2, 1856, who is son of the late Charles Osborne, Esq., only child of the second marriage of Sir Henry Osborne, tenth Baronet, with Elizabeth, daughter of William Harding, Esq., of Ballyduff. Four of the Baronets of this family sat in Parliament for the county of Waterford.

MISS TYLNEY-LONG.

Emma Tylney-Long died at Madehurst Lodge, near Arundel, on the 16th inst., aged eighty-seven. This lady was youngest and last surviving daughter of Sir James Tylney-Long, Bart., M.P., of Draycot, Wilts, by Lady Catherine Windsor, his second wife, eldest daughter of Otho, fourth Earl of Plymouth. With her expires the last but one—Lady Victoria Long Wellesley—of that branch of the Long family, distinguished in Burke's Romance of the Peerage by the Legend of the White Hand. She led a life of great gentleness and nobility, and the list of her public charities was only exceeded by those private benevolences which carried courage to the weak and succour to the unfortunate. She was sister of the great heiress Miss Tylney-Long, of Draycot, Wilts, and Wanstead, Essex, whose luckless marriage with the late Hon. William Wellesley Pole (afterwards Earl of Mornington) so much interested the public some sixty-five years ago. The beautiful seat of Wanstead, which has long since disappeared, came through the marriage of Sir James Tylney-Long's father, Sir Robert Long, Bart., M.P., with Lady Emma Child, daughter and heiress of Richard Child, Earl of Tylney. The Longs of Draycot flourished in the county of Wilts for many generations, "Knyghtes," as Camden says, "and men of greate worship."

The deaths have also been announced of—

Henry Carey Owtram, Esq., J.P., on the 12th inst., at Newland Hall, Ellel, Lancashire, aged fifty-eight.

Thomas Whaley, Esq., of Taplow Lodge, Bucks, J.P. for the county of Lancaster, on the 15th inst.

The Hon. Charles William Manners, son of John Thomas, late Lord Manners, and brother of the present Lord, on the 14th inst., at 43, Princes-gate, aged twenty.

Henry Thomas Lambert, Esq., of Sandhills, Bletchingley, Surrey, and of Queen's-gate, South Kensington, J.P., on the 8th inst., in his sixty-first year.

Lieutenant-Colonel Russell Alexander Stevenson, R.A., son of the late Brigadier-General Stevenson, C.B., Bombay Artillery, on the 17th ult., at Ahmedebad, Bombay.

Vice-Admiral John Barling Marsh, on the 12th inst., aged seventy-one. He entered the Royal Navy in 1822, and attained the rank of Vice-Admiral 1879.

Thomas Leedham Robinson, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for the county of Surrey, on the 15th inst., at 40, Queensborough-terrace, aged seventy.

The Rev. Henry Bayley Williams, J.P., of Pant Afon, Carnarvon and Coppy Hall, Aldridge, in the county of Stafford, for many years Rector of Llanrug, on the 7th inst., aged seventy-three.

Adelaide, Mrs. Neale, widow of Lieutenant-Colonel E. St. John Neale, C.B., H.M. Minister Plenipotentiary at Quito, and daughter of the late Henry Sewell, Esq., Madras Civil Service, on the 12th inst., aged fifty-five.

Colonel George Baxter Browne, C.B., late Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and late Commissioner of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, on the 12th inst., at Clifton-gardens, Folkestone, aged ninety-one. He was the second son of George Browne, Esq., Imperial and Tuscan Consul at Liverpool, and brother of Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Henry Browne, K.C.H., of Bronwylfa, in the county of Flint, a distinguished Peninsula officer, and of Felicia Hemans, the celebrated poetess.

Major-General Edward Fellowes, late Assistant Adjutant-General in Ireland, on the 10th inst., at Uppingham Hall, Rutlandshire. He was formerly in the 78th Regiment, and afterwards in the 11th Hussars. He served in the Crimean War, including the battles of the Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and the siege of Sebastopol. He was second son of the late Robert Fellowes, Esq., of Shotesham Park, and brother of Lady Gladstone and of Lady Sandhurst.

Josiah Patrick Wise, Esq., late of Dacca, Bengal, on the 3rd inst., at Rostellan Castle, in the county of Cork, aged seventy-five. He was son of the late Thomas Wise, Esq., of Lunan, Montrose, by Anne, his wife, daughter of William Chalmers, Esq., of Glencricht.

Charles Moreton-Macdonald, Esq., of Largie, on the 16th inst., in London, aged thirty-nine. He was eldest son of the late Hon. Augustus Henry Moreton, M.P. (who assumed the additional surname of Macdonald), by Mary Jane Lockhart Macdonald, his wife, daughter of Sir Charles Macdonald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, and was grandson of Thomas, first Earl of Ducie. He married, 1870, Elizabeth Hume, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Esq., and leaves issue.

Colonel Patrick Lewis Cole Paget, late Scots Guards, on the 17th inst., at Farnham, Surrey, aged fifty-nine. He was son of the late General the Hon. Sir Edward Paget, G.C.B. (brother of Henry William, first Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., G.C.B., twice Lord Lieutenant of Ireland), by Lady Harriet Legge, his second wife, daughter of George, third Earl of Dartmouth. He married, Oct. 23, 1855, Frances, youngest daughter of the Rev. Richard Garth, of Morden and Farnham, Surrey, and leaves issue.

THE QUARTERLIES.

A very good number of the Quarterly Review opens with an able article on "The English Monarchy," in vindication of the Sovereign's right to interfere actively in public business. The writer produces numerous instances, derived from the memoirs of the late Prince Consort, of occasions on which this power has been advantageously exercised. On getting to the root of the matter, however, one is struck by the curious inversion of the most obvious relations between the monarch and his counsellors; the former advises, the latter decides. A paper entitled "Why is Scotland Radical?" rather attests than explains the phenomenon. Another on the Irish University question betrays the desire of the Ministry to coax their followers into sanctioning the endowment of denominational colleges. A review of the lives of Dean Hook and Bishop Selwyn is a somewhat too undisguised endeavour to turn these holy men to account as weapons against Ritualists and Non-conformists. "Music and Musicians" is distinguished by great technical knowledge, and the chatty anecdotic paper on Cavour, and the scholarly and genial survey of Herefordshire, are excellent specimens of styles indigenous to the Quarterly. The most permanently valuable contributions, however, are the articles on Polybius and the Glacial Epoch. The first is a most luminous and statesman-like review of the condition of the Latin and Hellenic worlds at the period when their fusion was effected by the Roman conquest of the latter; the other a masterly exposition of the supposed influence of the vicissitudes of the inclination of the earth's axis in producing the succession of glacial periods whose traces are so incontestibly legible in the northern hemisphere.

The contribution to the New Quarterly Magazine which will probably attract most notice is Mr. George Meredith's powerful "Tale of Chloe," a story distinguished by all the peculiarities of his elaborated and artificial manner. Cardinal Newman is the subject of an over enthusiastic article, and Mr. Burne Jones of an unjustly depreciatory one; both, however, are ably written. A retrospective sketch of the determination of the Greek Frontier in 1829 has a decided bearing on the present state of the question. Winchester is the subject of this month's instalment of the series on the Public Schools of England. An account of the "pigeon" dialect of Yokohama is exceedingly amusing, and mentions the curious circumstance that, while the Chinese "pigeon" is mainly broken English, the Yokohama is for the most part real, though very corrupt, Japanese.

The Church Quarterly is of purely professional interest, but for a pleasant essay on Sir Walter Scott and a rather carping review of Abbey and Overton's "History of the Church of England in the Eighteenth Century."

The North American Review has a review of American successes at the Paris Exhibition, papers on the African and Indian questions by Mrs. Beecher Stowe and General Howard, and an essay by Mr. Thomas Hughes on the English public school system, recommending its introduction into the United States. By much the most important contribution, however, is an article on Russian Nihilism, professedly by a Nihilist, which comes near to a formal exposition of the objects of the party. They would seem to be the abolition of the monarchy, the confiscation of landed property, and the destruction of the military and official classes. If this is so, the internecine character of the strife can excite no wonder.

The Popular Science Review has a delightful paper by Professor Martin Duncan on luminous animals, and a brilliant sketch by Professor Owen of the palæontology of the British colonies, especially remarkable for its account of the gigantic fossil birds of New Zealand, and of the extraordinary developments of animal life recently brought to light in South Africa.

RUINS OR TOPES AT HADDA.

We are happy to announce the safe return, and arrival in London on Wednesday morning, of our esteemed Special Artist, the hero of so many campaigns, in this bloodless service, among scenes of real warfare, Mr. William Simpson, late at the head-quarters of General Sir Samuel Browne in Afghanistan. His experience of European battle-fields, of the operations of great armies, and of the sieges and capture of renowned fortresses, which will occupy the historical students of ages to come, is scarcely less remarkable than his zealous predilection for Oriental antiquities, more especially those relating to the history of religion in its three principal developments, outside of our Bible—namely, the Hindoo, the Buddhist, and the Mohammedan systems. The architecture and sculpture of Eastern temples and shrines, both in Asia and in the neighbouring parts of Europe and Africa, have been explored con amore by this diligent travelling archæologist, as well as the remains of other ancient buildings in Greece, Asia Minor, Palestine, and Syria, Abyssinia, India, and China. We lately published his account of the "topes" which he was enabled to inspect and to delineate in the Cabul Valley, formerly the seat of an important branch of what may be called the Buddhist Catholic Church, and some notice was then taken of the leading facts in its history, associated with that country under its former rulers. Mr. Simpson's Sketch of the ruins at Hadda, to which reference was made in our Journal at that time, is now presented to the reader. It is not unlikely that he may soon be invited to lay the results of his observations before an audience disposed to take interest in subjects of this kind.

The state apartments of Windsor Castle are open to the public.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

EAST MARDEN.—Your analysis is correct, but we think the defect in the position of the Pawns is compensated by the ingenuity and difficulty of the solution. We are glad to note you receive the paper so promptly, and hope you have travelled into fair weather.

CARLOS (Lille).—No. 1842 cannot be solved by 1. P to Q Kt 4th. The White King must be moved to B 2nd on the first move, as given in the published solution.

ALPHA.—A player is bound to take a Pawn en passant if he has no other at command. The rule is laid down in the "Praxis" laws under the head of "The move and forced move," and was formally adopted to settle a question frequently discussed in the periodical publications of five-and-twenty years ago.

P ST C M (Manitoba).—Your card has been forwarded to the gentleman named.

G W M (Manchester).—Thanks; the problem shall be examined.

ALPYN (Plymouth).—You must have set up the position incorrectly, for your analysis includes the true line of play, while the defence you suggest, 1. Q to Q sq, is unavailing. Look again.

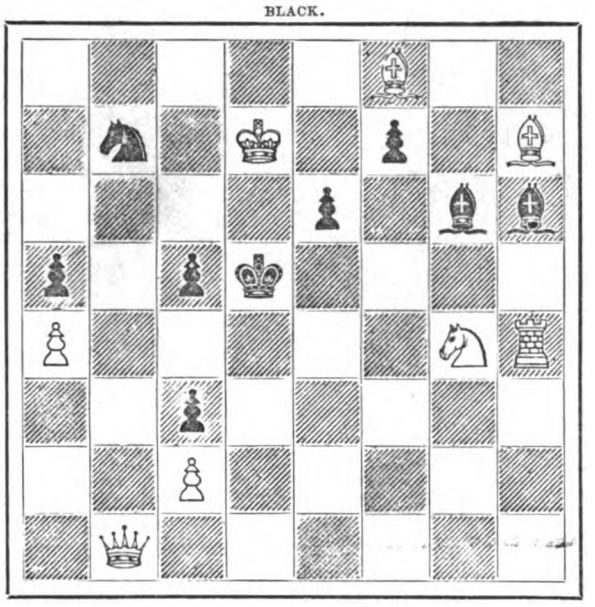
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1846.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt (from Kt 4th) to K 3rd	P takes Kt *
2. R to Q B 8th (ch)	K to Q 2nd
3. P to B 6th (dis. ch). Mate.

* If Black play 1. Kt to K 2nd, White's answer is 2. R takes P (ch); and if 1. Kt takes R, or 1. K takes P, then 2. R to B 8th (ch), as in the main variation, mating in each case on the following move. Black has several other defences, but they should present no difficulty to the student.

PROBLEM No. 1849.

By EAST MARDEN.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

ENGLAND v. AMERICA.

A Game occurring in the Correspondence Match between representative amateurs of England and America, Mr. W. COATES, of Cheltenham, on the one side, and Mr. MAX JUDD, of St. Louis, on the other.

(Scotch Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. C.)	BLACK (Mr. J.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. P to Q 4th	P takes P
4. Kt takes P	Q to K R 5th
5. Kt to Q Kt 5th	B to Kt 5th (ch)
6. B to Q 2nd	Q takes P (ch)
7. B to K 2nd	K to Q sq
8. Castles	K Kt to K 2nd

A departure from "the books," but hardly in the right direction, for the Knight now occupies a position that prevents the ready co-operation of the King's Rook with the forces in the field. The best line of defence here is 8. B takes B, followed by 9. Q to K B 5th and 10. Kt to K R 3rd.

9. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q to R 5th
10. P to Q R 3rd	B to B 4th
11. P to K Kt 3rd	Q to B 3rd

Black's ninth and tenth moves are not satisfactory, but he had already a difficult game to play, and now the move in the text is the only one to save the Queen.

12. Kt to K 4th	Q to B 4th
13. Kt takes B	Q takes Kt
14. B to K B 4th	P to Q 3rd
15. P to Q B 4th	P to Q R 4th
16. Q to Q 2nd

White conducts the opening with consummate judgment. His last two moves cannot be "bettered" by analysis.

16.	R to R 3rd
17. Q R to Q sq	Kt to Q Kt sq

Intended to prevent the threatened capture of the Q P, which affords White a fine attack.

WHITE (Mr. C.)	BLACK (M J.)
18 P to Q Kt 4th	P takes P
19. P takes P	Q to B 3rd
20 Kt takes Q P	B to K R 6th

If 20. P takes Kt, then follows 21. P to Kt 5th, &c.

21. Kt to K 4th (dis. ch)

All this is in the best style, and much better than taking the K B P, a move that would have frittered away the attack for very small blessings.

21.	Kt to Q 2nd
22. B to K B 3rd	R to R 6th
23. Kt to Kt 5th	R takes B
24. Kt takes B

Obviously stronger than 24. Kt takes R.

24.	P to K B 3rd

To prevent the Knight being brought into play again, but he has not time for such a manœuvre, as the sequel shows. Indeed, Mr. Judd, although a most accomplished player, must have altogether overlooked White's next move.

25. K R to K sq

Threatening 26. P to Kt 5th, after which Black can avoid the mate only by sacrificing his Queen.

25.	P to Q Kt 4th
26. P takes P	Q takes P
27. B takes P (ch)

(The coup de grâce.)

27.	K takes B
28. Q to Q 6th (ch),

And Black resigned. There are three other games pending between these players, all of which, we are informed, are likely to be drawn.

A Chessikin played recently by our veteran contributor Delta, opposed by a promising young Amateur.—(Salvio Gambit.)

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. James).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. B to B 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to K 5th	Q to R 5th (ch)
6. K to B sq	Kt to R 3rd
7. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3rd
8. Kt to Q 3rd	Q to B 3rd

The correct line of play here is 8. P to B 6th. The move in the text is very weak.

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. James).
9. P to K 5th	P takes P
10. P takes P	Q to R 5th

It would have been better to have taken the Queen home again; this move shows the lost time on his eighth move in a very forcible way.

11. Kt takes P	Kt to Q B 3rd
12. Kt to Q 5th	Q to Q sq
13. B to K Kt 5th,

and Black resigned.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The ninth game in the match between Messrs. Mason and Potter was won by the former, a result that made the score of the players equal—viz., two games to each and five draws. In the tenth game, which was played on the 19th inst. at the Divan, Mr. Potter began with 1. P to Q 4th, and obtained a strong attack in the opening; but the defence was equal to the occasion, and, after a struggle prolonged to forty-five moves, the game was abandoned as drawn. The eleventh game was played at the City Club on the 21st inst., Mr. Mason opening with 1. P to K 4th, and the Englishman adopting the French defence. The American sacrificed a Pawn at an early stage of the battle, thereby securing a worrying attack and producing a highly interesting game. The defence held the Pawn to the last, but could not prevent a series of exchanges, when there ensued an end-game, with Bishops moving on opposite colours, in which Mr. Potter's extra Pawn was of little service; and on the thirty-third move the players agreed to the seventh draw.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The following is an amended statement of the will of the late Hon. Maria Otway-Cave, an abstract of which appeared in our last issue:—The personalty was sworn under £60,000. The testatrix gives her real estate to her eldest nephew, Captain the Hon. Edmund Verney Wyatt-Edgell, with remainders in tail. She bequeaths £3000 to her sister, the present Baroness Braye; £10,000 to her said nephew, the Hon. Edmund; £3000 to her great-nephew Adrian Verney Wyatt-Edgell; £2000 to her great-niece Cecilia Violet Wyatt-Edgell; three annuities of £200, £21, and £15 to three servants respectively (the capital thereof to revert to the residue); and £1000 to each of her two executors. The entire residue she gives to her two nephews, the Hon. Edmund Verney and the Hon. Alfred Wyatt-Edgell.

The will (dated March 27, 1873) with two codicils (dated March 26, 1874, and Aug. 26, 1875) of Mr. George Hamilton Fletcher, J.P., formerly of Liverpool, but late of Barrow Hedges, Carshalton, Surrey, merchant and shipowner, who died on the 6th ult., was proved on the 2nd inst. by Thomas Hughes Jackson, George William Bahr, and Mrs. Sophia Fletcher, the widow, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator bequeaths £250 each to his executors; £500 each to the Birkenhead Borough Hospital, the Albert Memorial Birkenhead Ragged Schools, the Liverpool Infirmary, the Liverpool Northern Hospital, the Liverpool Southern Hospital, and the National Life-Boat Association; £500 to his wife, and an annuity of £1000, to take priority over all other bequests, during widowhood, in the event of her marriage again an annuity of £500 is substituted; £150,000 upon trust to pay the income to his wife during widowhood, and then to divide the capital between all his children; and as to the residue of his real and personal estate, upon trust to pay the income in like manner to his wife during widowhood, and then to pay such residue to his son George Hamilton Fletcher.

The will (dated Nov. 18, 1878) with a codicil (dated Feb. 13, 1879) of Mr. Frederick William Collard, late of No. 22, Upper Hamilton-terrace, who died on May 20 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Alfred Beverley Collard, the son, John Peter Theobald, and Robert William Thurburn, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Mary Farr Collard, £500, all his furniture, household stores and effects, plate, pictures, horses and carriages, and an annuity of £2000; and a few other legacies. The residue of the personalty he gives to his said son.

The will (dated April 14, 1877) of Mr. Francis Adkins, formerly of Manor House, Selby Oak, in the parish of Northfield, Worcestershire, and late of Brighton, who died on April 12 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Mrs. Sarah Adkins, Henry Adkins, and George Caleb Adkins, the brothers, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to Mrs. Adkins £2000 and all his plate, pictures, furniture, books, household effects, horses and carriages; a sum of £20,000 is also left upon trust for her life, and then for his eight children, as she shall appoint; and the residue of his property, real and personal, is to be held upon trust for his eight children.

The will (dated Feb. 25, 1875) of Mrs. Mary Ann Gardnor, formerly of No. 24, Montagu-street, Portman-square, but late of No. 59, Redcliffe-gardens, South Kensington, who died on the 8th ult., was proved on the 3rd inst. by Charles Phillips and William Moore, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testatrix, among other legacies, bequeaths £1000 to the Sailors' Home; £.00 each to the Blind School, Southwark, the Cripples' Home, and the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Old Kent-road; and £50 to each of the poor-boxes of the Metropolitan Police Courts; to her sister, Mrs. Catherine Beard, she leaves an annuity of £500 for life; and the residue to her said sister's six children.

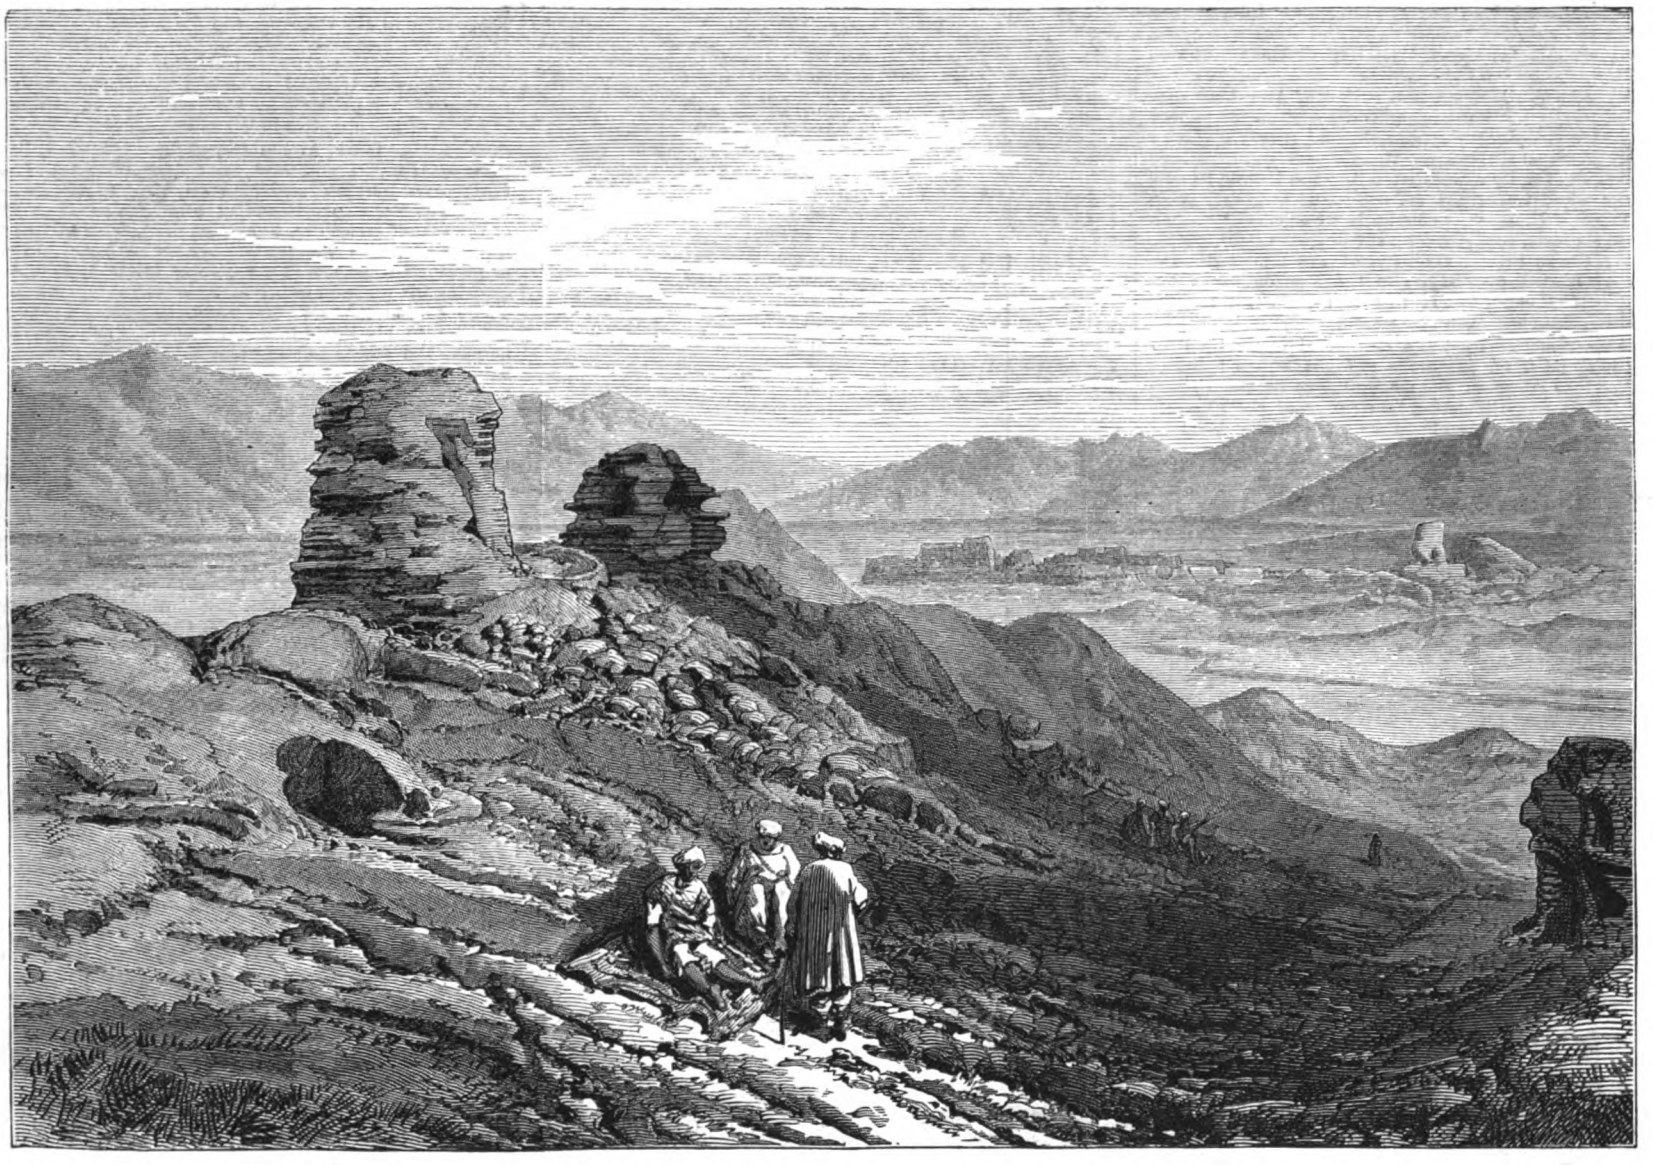
The will (dated Sept. 6, 1876) of Mrs. Amelia Idle, late of Shopwyke, Oving, Sussex, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 10th inst. by Harvey William Dixon, Benjamin Binstead, and John Austin, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. Among other legacies the testatrix bequeaths £1000 to the West Sussex, East Hampshire and Chichester General Infirmary and Dispensary; and the residue of her property to her brothers and sisters and the children of her deceased brothers and sisters.

The will of Mr. Arthur Capon Watling, of 5, Brunswick-square, London, and late of the Honourable East India Company's Service, who died on May 15 last, was proved under £50,000, in the Principal Registry, on June 18, by two of the executors and trustees—his nephew, Mr. Henry Charles Churchman, and his friend, Mr. John Yarde, to whom he bequeathed a legacy of £200 each for their trouble. After devising his freehold estate at Mersey, Essex, with a legacy of £2000 to his nephew, Mr. H. C. Churchman; and various legacies to his servants and friends and nephews and nieces, he gave the residue of his real and personal property to be held by his trustees for the benefit of his niece, Mrs. Maria Grantoff, of 5, Brunswick-square, and her children.

The will (dated May 3, 1877) of Dame Sarah Fairfax, the widow of the late Colonel Sir Henry Fairfax, Bart., late of St. George's-road, Westminster, who died on the 23rd ult., was proved on the 5th inst. by John Harvey Astell and Henry Godfrey Astell, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. After leaving considerable legacies, the testatrix gives the residue of her estate to her said two brothers.

The will (dated Feb. 29, 1872) with three codicils (dated March 30, 1872, Dec. 9, 1874, and March 19, 1878) of the Right Hon. Elizabeth Julia Georgiana, Countess Dowager of Clare, late of Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, who died on April 30 last, was proved on the 4th inst. by Edward Randolph, William Edward Ratcliffe, and Lady Louisa Isabella Georgiana FitzGibbon, the niece, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. There are a good many legacies, and the residue of her property the testatrix gives to her niece, Lady Louisa J. G. Dillon.

The will (dated Feb. 5, 1869) with four codicils (dated Dec. 6, 1870, Feb. 5 and Oct. 17, 1872, and April 13, 1876) of Mr. Addison John Baker Cresswell, late of Cresswell, Northumberland, who died on May 5 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Francis Joseph Cresswell, the nephew, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000.



Mr. T. Brassey presided on the 17th inst. at the distribution of prizes to the boys of the Formidable training-ship, which has now been established at Bristol ten years, and has about 300 boys in training.

Mr. J. Walter, M.P., last Saturday opened a coffee tavern at Eastbourne, erected at the expense of his cousin, Miss Hall. The hon. member, in an address he delivered on the occasion, said that from a social point of view coffee taverns were of foremost importance, and they did more to counteract the influence of the public-houses than all the bills introduced into Parliament, as they provided alternative attractions for the working classes.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for carrying on the business of Fire Insurance in England and France—in both of which countries the principles of Fire Insurance are well understood and appreciated—with power to open branches in other places, and (with the sanction of a Special Resolution of the Shareholders, but not otherwise) to extend the business to Life, Marine, and Accidents Assurance, or either of them.
This Company will have the support and influence of several important Institutions in France having Agencies throughout the Country.
Having regard to the large and growing increase in the value of buildings and insurable property of all kinds in recent years, it is believed that there is a good opening for a Company commencing with the prestige and advantages which this Company will possess.
Independently of large and influential connections, both in England and France, this Company will have the advantage rarely possessed by a new Company, of being able to offer Assurers, from the first, the security of a substantial Reserve Fund, in addition to a large amount of paid-up and uncalled Capital.
It will not be necessary, and it is not intended, that this Company should rely for its success on any novel or experimental method of business but, at the same time it will in every way, consistent with safety, seek to popularise and extend the principles of Fire Insurance.
Regarded as an investment it is difficult to conceive anything safer than the shares of a well-conducted Fire Insurance Company. The business of such companies rests upon the most perfect data, with the advantage of the largest practical experience.
The best evidence of the value of such shares as an investment is shown by the following tables of the present market price of the shares of some of the Fire Insurance Companies in England and France, as compared with the amount paid up on them:—

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1879.

The victory at Ulundi, achieved by the division of our troops under the direct command of Lord Chelmsford, news of which reached us last week, suggests more than one topic of satisfaction to the British public. It gives something approaching to definiteness to the previously hazy prospect of bringing the war in Zululand to a speedy conclusion. Cetewayo must now be alive to the fact that, as a belligerent, he is overmatched. His chief Kraal, the centre, we may call it, of his Sovereignty, has been taken and burned to the ground. Though, perhaps, a larger portion of his army has been withdrawn to a more inaccessible and therefore a stronger position than that which they lately failed in defending; though the season in South Africa for campaigning has just come to an end; and though, if Cetewayo saw fit to do so, he might protract for some time to come the warfare which has been undertaken against him, it does not seem likely that he or his chiefs can longer indulge in visionary expectations, which the late event has done so much to destroy. Sir Garnet Wolseley, it may be hoped, will propose terms of submission which, whilst they assure safety to the contiguous colonies, will, at the same time, consult, as far as may be, the susceptibilities of a gallant but savage foe. Such appears to be the intention uppermost in his mind. By the orders he has given, subsequently to the announcement to him of Lord Chelmsford's victory, he has made it tolerably clear, we think, that he does not contemplate a second campaign. Perhaps, even before these sheets can see the light, further tidings may reach our shores containing an announcement that, in all substantial respects, the Zulu War is over.

Another matter for congratulation may be found in the conduct of our troops. On no occasion have they exhibited greater steadiness in action. Young though the great majority of them may be, and therefore unseasoned against panic in the face of visible and appalling danger, they stood their ground with all the coolness and unflinching determination of veteran soldiers. The battle, it is true, was well and scientifically planned by Lord Chelmsford, who in person set the example of unflinching bravery, clear presence of mind, and unwavering confidence. But it might have had a different result. It was not impossible that, confronted, as our soldiers were, with vastly superior numbers of raging foes, careless of and even courting death, they might at some point or other have given way, and have thus occasioned a pell-mell encounter, in which discipline loses its hold upon troops and science ceases to be effective. Happily, this formidable danger was obviated, or there might have been another Isandula. The description of the battle by Mr. A. Forbes, the Special Correspondent of the Daily News, presents as vivid a picture of the conflict as the pen of man can describe, and his appreciation of the conduct of the men engaged in it is emphatic. We take the satisfaction which his assurance, corroborated by that of Lord Chelmsford, is calculated to give; but one cannot avoid the inference that, although successful in the instance before us, the immature age at which so considerable a proportion of our fighting army was hurried off to South Africa, cannot be repeated without enormous peril, and reveals some serious defect of our present Army organisation at home.

The public will be pleased, moreover, that Lord Chelmsford has rehabilitated his reputation as a soldier. He has been much and severely criticised, nor can it be denied that much of the criticism inflicted upon him appears to have been well founded. He was rash where he ought to have been especially cautious; he was hesitating where it was, above all things, important that he should have been resolute. But the difficulties of his position were, undoubtedly, great. His sense of responsibility could not have been otherwise than extremely onerous, and probably he had less confidence in his strategical skill than is indispensable in a great Commander. When the whole truth comes to be known with regard to the material obstacles he had to surmount in moving his forces and in keeping open his communications with his base, it may be found that, although he possessed not the genius of a great warrior, he had no small share of the patience which should accompany it. It has been found, in fact, that, in front of the enemy, he knew both when and how to strike. The public will not grudge him the honour which he has redeemed, but is glad that the main object for which he so assiduously and, for a while, fruitlessly laboured, was achieved at last, not by another, nor by means of another, but by himself.

It would be folly to pretend that this victory at Ulundi is one of a character the recollection of which our country will cherish with a glow of patriotic pride. The war which, it is hoped, it will bring to a close has never been one in which the people of Great Britain have taken an approving interest. It was initiated without consulting their wishes. The policy of it, however it may please the Cape Colonists, never commended itself to the authorities or to the people of the United Kingdom. It will never leave behind it any historical landmark to which posterity will revert with reverential feeling. It has not been popular even in the Army; and, although assented to by a Parliamentary vote, it has met with but few words of eulogium in Parliamentary speeches. We have reason, perhaps, to be glad that it has not been more successful than it has. The country, having been dragged into it, could not, of course, put an end to the War, in the face of the disasters it had sustained, until it had sufficiently demonstrated its power of ascendancy. This it has now done, and it may be pretty confidently said that the best incident of the Zulu War is that which opens a way out of it. It will, we hope, exhibit a useful warning to future High Commissioners, and it may read a lesson of some value to Governments who appoint them with so large a measure of discretionary control. Beyond this, we are afraid it will prove unproductive. It opens a way nowhere. It may place in safety colonies which need never to have been endangered. It does not even force an outlet for an expansion of trade, and it will scarcely increase the power of Christian influences among the races which it has affected. Lastly, it may be a source of great dissatisfaction between the Colonies of South Africa and the Mother Country; for it cannot be supposed that we shall be content to let them prescribe the results of victories which, to a large extent, they leave us to achieve for them. Grave questions have still to be brought to an issue in the Colonial Office and in the Imperial Parliament, and the settlement of them, we fear, has not been forwarded by the haste with which the country was hurried into the Zulu War.

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne House by the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Newport, Isle of Wight. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh visited her Majesty. Princess Beatrice rode with the Duke of Edinburgh on Monday. George and Mrs. Prothero, have also dined with the Queen. Her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice and other members of the Royal family, has taken daily walks in the Royal demesne, and has driven to various places in the island. The Queen has continued to receive good reports of the favourable progress of Prince Leopold.

The Queen has appointed Colonel Robert Biddulph, C.B., to be her Majesty's High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Island of Cyprus.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales presided on Saturday last, at Marlborough House, over a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851. The Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Teck were present. The Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince Christian visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House and remained to luncheon. The Prince and Princess, accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, went to the Royal Hospital School at Greenwich, where his Royal Highness distributed the prizes to the successful pupils. The Royal party drove from Marlborough House by the Old Kent-road, and were received at the school by the Duke of Cambridge, Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Mr. Childers, M.P., Sir M. Lopes, Earl Sydney, and several of the Lords of the Admiralty. A number of the boys of the school were drawn up on the parade ground, and and others manned the yards of the ship which stands in the square. The Prince was in the undress uniform of a Captain of the Royal Naval Reserve; the young Princes wore the uniform of naval cadets. The Royal visitors, under the guidance of Captain Burney, R.N., the superintendent of the school, made a tour of inspection through the various workshops, where the boys are taught trades. The boys, being engaged in such various occupations as tailoring, carpentering, shoemaking, and laundry work, both amused and interested the visitors. The prizetakers and other boys, with the visitors, assembled in the gymnasium, and upon the arrival of the Royal party "God Bless the Prince of Wales" was sung by nearly 1000 boys; after which the prizetakers filed past the Prince and received from his hands their books, medals, and certificates. After this ceremony Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., in a concise speech, thanked the Royal visitors for their interest in the school and for their presence among the boys; at the conclusion true Kentish fire was given for the Prince, the Princess, and Princes Albert Victor and George. The Prince rose and expressed his thanks to Mr. Smith and the assembled company for the vote of thanks, and to the lads for their response, and added, "Let me say again it has given me, as also the Princess and my two boys, great pleasure to come here to-day and to go through this most interesting and excellent institution." Some gymnastic exercises having been gone through by the pupils, the Royal party visited the swimming-bath of the school, where some interesting feats in swimming and diving were performed by the boys; the Prince throwing pieces of money into the water for the boys to dive for. The Royal party returned to town, and in the evening the Prince and Princess, with their sons and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-Garden.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz visited the Prince and Princess on Monday and remained to luncheon. The Archduke Charles Stephen of Austria called upon their Royal Highnesses, and the Prince returned his Imperial Highness's visit. Subsequently his Royal Highness left Marlborough House for Molecombe, Chichester, for Goodwood week. The Princess remained in town.

The Prince and Princess were present at Countess Spencer's last ball, at which were also the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden.

At the close of the late visit to Brocklesby Park, the Princess planted in the grounds a Wellingtonia gigantea, and her Royal Highness with the Prince, with their hostess and the Earl of Yarborough, and numerous guests were photographed in a group.

The gold medal for swimming, given by the Prince to the Royal Savoy Club, the competitors being the junior choristers of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, has been won by Cornelius Payne.

Princes Albert Edward and Victor of Wales, whose two years career on board the Britannia training-ship at Dartmouth has been most satisfactory, have passed out. The Royal cadets have been treated exactly the same as the other cadets, and subjected to the same discipline afloat and ashore. Prince Albert Victor not intending to adopt the Navy as a profession, the authorities have allowed a slight deviation from the usual course of study in his case. At the last examination both Princes obtained first-class in seamanship, which entitled them to three months sea time, and another three months has been accredited to them for good conduct.

Princess Christian distributed the prizes at the Royal Naval Female School, St. Margaret's, Twickenham, on Tuesday.

The Duchess of Connaught presented the prizes after the annual examination of the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army at Clarence House, Roehampton, on Wednesday.

The Duchess of Cambridge completed her eighty-second year yesterday week. Early in the day her Royal Highness received congratulatory visits from the Duke of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duchess of Teck, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and Princess Frederica of Hanover, who is staying with the Duchess. In the afternoon there assembled at her Royal Highness's residence in the Ambassadors' Court, St. James's Palace, the Prince and Princess of Wales and their children, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Teck and children, Prince Louis of Battenberg, and various old personal friends of the venerable Duchess.

The Duchess of Teck and Princess Frederica of Hanover have dined with the Earl and Countess of Bradford.

The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway has been on a visit to Louisa Marchioness of Waterford, at her residence, Highcliffe, Christchurch, Hants. His Royal Highness, after three days, left for Torquay.

The Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden visited the East and West India Docks on Tuesday. He inspected from one of the company's tugs the East India Import Dock and the new East India Dock entrance, which will be opened to-day (Saturday). The Grand Duke also went on board Messrs. Donald Currie's steamer the Dunrobin Castle, and afterwards the Cuzco, a vessel of the Orient Line, which has just accomplished the passage from Australia in the quickest time on record (thirty-six days). After a general inspection of the docks, the Prince lunched with the Directors at the Dock House.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Marchioness of Salisbury closed the season by a dinner party on Wednesday, followed by a reception at the family residence in Arlington-street.

The marriage of Viscount Galway, M.P., with Miss Vere Gosling, only daughter of the late Mr. Ellis Gosling, of Busbridge Park, Godalming, was celebrated on Thursday week at St. George's Church, Hanover-square. The bride was received by her stepfather, Mr. John C. Ramsden, who gave her away. Her bridesmaids were the Lady Lilian Paulet, the Hon. Amicia and the Hon. Florence Milnes, the Hon. Helen Brodrick, Miss Leslie, Miss Drummond, Miss Monckton, Miss M. Gosling, Miss Ethel Milner, and Miss Owen. The bride wore a dress of pearl-white satin duchesse, with long train, trimmed with crêpe lisse and orange-blossoms, with a bunch of natural edelweiss, and round her neck a string of large pearls, and on her head a wreath of orange-blossoms, with a diamond tiara, and in her hair some diamond stars and a crescent of brilliants. The costumes of the bridesmaids were of white Indian muslin, and each carried a bouquet of white flowers. Each wore a jewelled pin, the head forming a Viscount's coronet, composed of pearls and diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom. Viscount Galway was accompanied by Mr. Francis Monckton, M.P., as groomsman. The ceremony was performed by the Hon. and Very Rev. Augustus Duncombe, Dean of York, assisted by the Rev. Charles Jardine, Chaplain to Lord Galway, and the Rev. William Tringham, Rector of Busbridge, Surrey. In consequence of a recent bereavement in Mr. Ramsden's family, only the relatives and the most intimate friends were invited to the breakfast at Mr. and Mrs. Ramsden's, in Grosvenor-street. The bride and bridegroom left for Serlby Hall, Lord Galway's seat in Notts. At the Bawtry station the Viscount and Viscountess were met by a troop of the Notts Yeomanry Cavalry and a large body of mounted tenantry, who escorted his Lordship and bride to their home. Lady Galway's travelling costume was of white foulard satiné trimmed with Bretonne lace, with bonnet and parasol to match, and bouquet of orange-blossoms.

A marriage is arranged, and will shortly take place, between Mr. Reginald Baliol Brett, eldest son of the Right Hon. Lord Justice Brett, and Eleonor, youngest daughter of the late M. Sylvain van de Weyer, for many years Belgian Minister at the Court of St. James's.

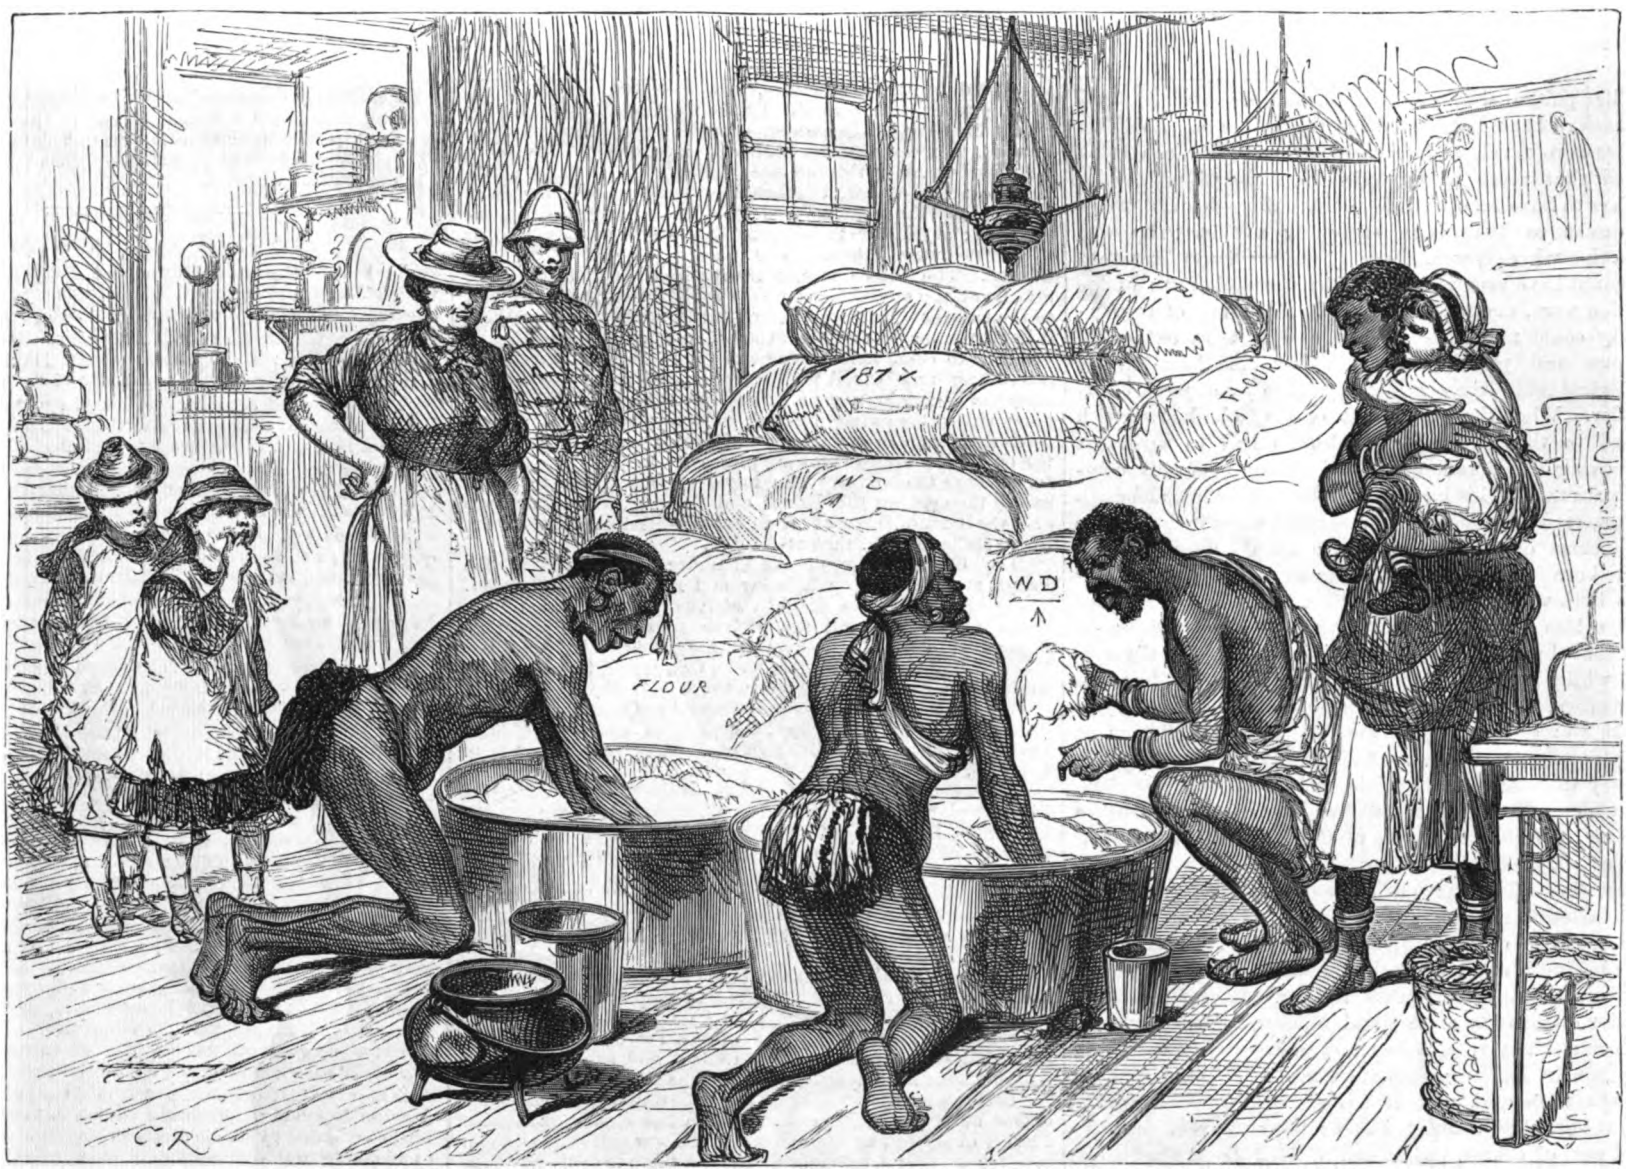
The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the third week in July the total number of paupers was 77,712, of whom 40,995 were in workhouses and 36,717 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show a decrease of 1142, 779, and 795 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 580, of whom 432 were men, 120 women, and 28 children under sixteen.

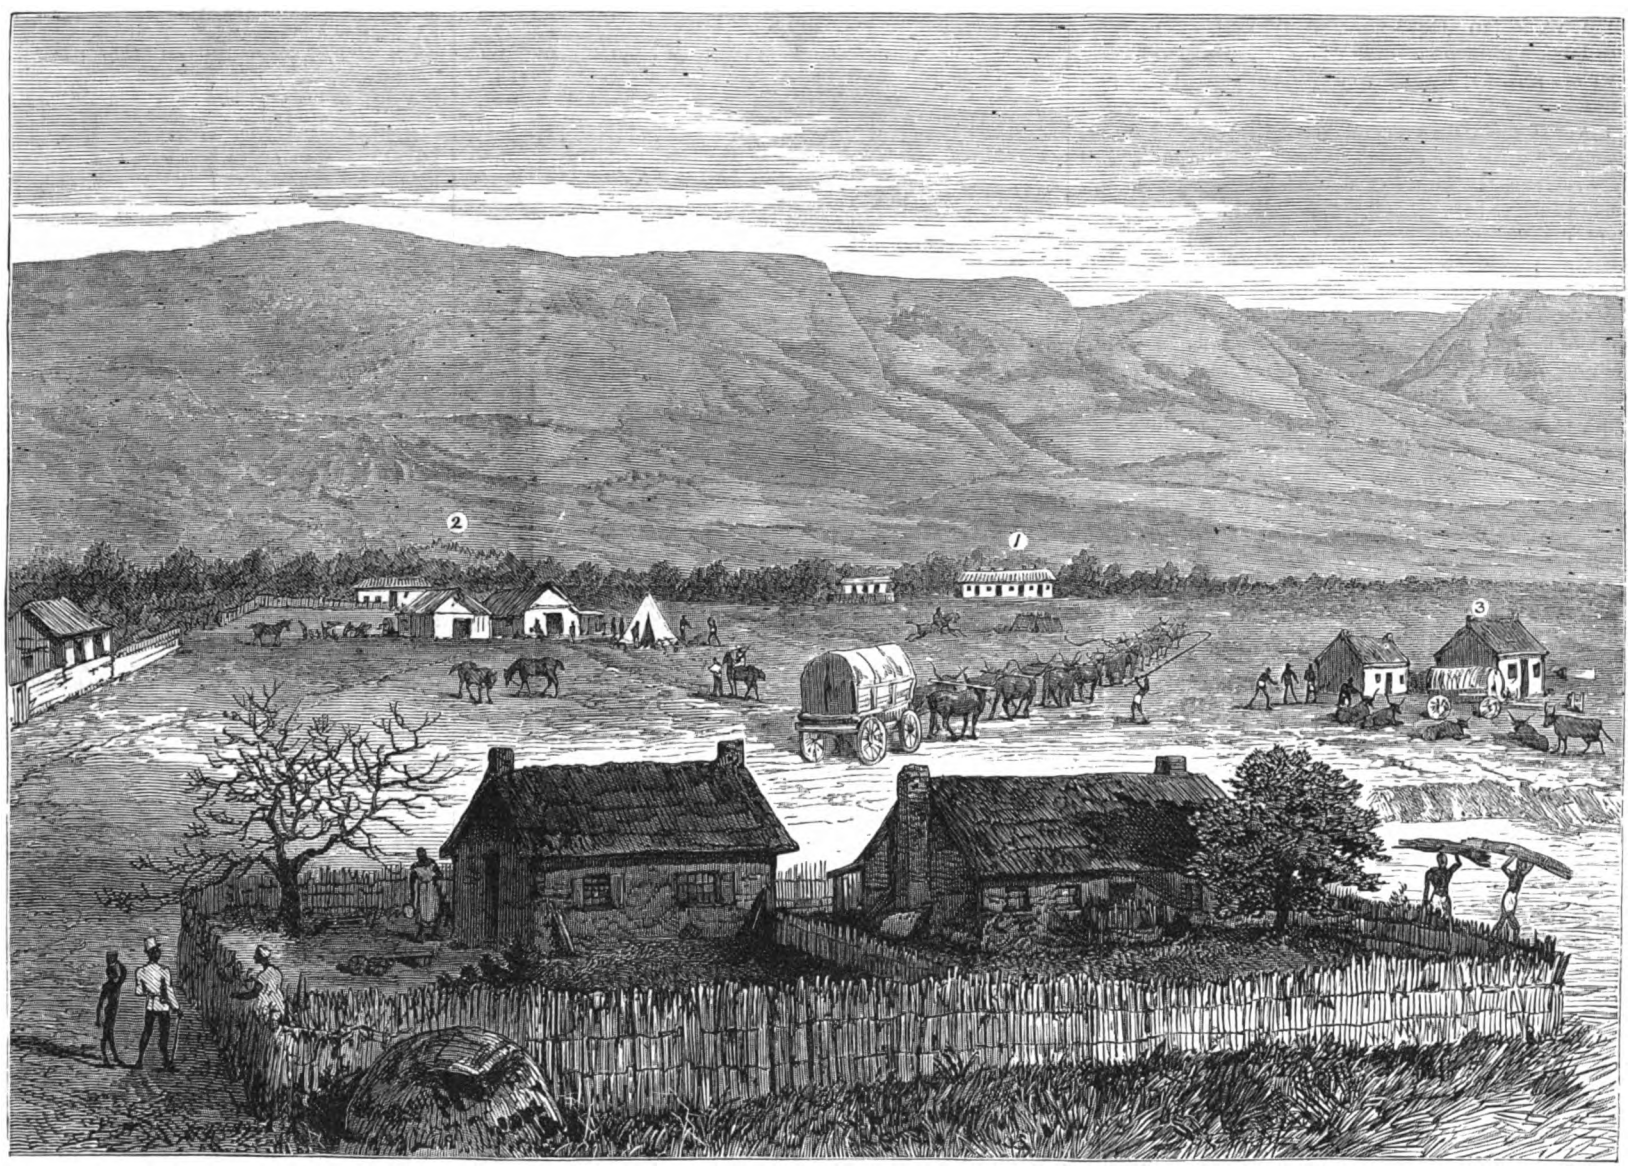
There were 2482 births and 1208 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 78, the deaths being 535 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 3032 births and 1423 deaths were registered, equal to annual rates of 34·9 and 16·4 per 1000 of the population. The mean temperature of the air was 57·4 deg., being 5·4 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 15·6 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 110·5 hours.

Last Saturday the third exhibition of plants grown by boys and girls attending the Aldenham-street Sunday School took place at the Vestry-Hall, Pancras-road. Sir T. Chambers, Q.C., M.P., opened the exhibition; and the attendance of people anxious to see the flowers was very large. The show was excellent, and many of the plants found purchasers. During the afternoon the band of the Leavesden Schools was present, and a choir sang a selection of part-songs. In the evening the prizes to the successful competitors were distributed by Mr. Justice Fry and Lady Fry. The Royal Horticultural Society granted a medal, which was awarded as a special prize for the best plant in the show.



The quarterly court of the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire was held at their offices, 66, Ludgate-hill, yesterday week, when the accounts and balance-sheet for the week ending Dec. 31, 1878, were submitted, showing the receipts to be £894, and the expenditure £837. The secretary reported the receipt of £270, being the final instalment of a legacy by the late Mr. James Sturm. Also, that the society had, during the past three months, placed appliances for the saving of life in Sandown, Isle of Wight, Bridgwater, and Ramsgate — making the total number of escapes stationed by the society in suburban and provincial localities sixty. Applications for the grant of fire-escapes from the Swindon Local Board and Crediton urban authority were agreed to. Numerous rewards for saving life were then distributed.

Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., distributed the prizes to the cadets of the Worcester Training College, off Greenhithe, Kent, yesterday week. In his speech at the close of the distribution Mr. Smith said that our national greatness was principally due to the fact that we had a larger mercantile marine than any other nation. No other nation in the world could have got ready so large a force as we had recently sent out within so short a space of time; and our reserve power in that direction was such that, no matter how great the effort we made, there was still an enormous amount of latent power in hand. The First Lord of the Admiralty was accompanied by Mrs. W. H. Smith, who had kindly undertaken to decorate the Queen's prizeman (Mr. Alexander Saxton) and other cadets to whom medals had been awarded. A numerous party of ladies and gentlemen went down from town to Erith by special train, and were conveyed to Greenhithe by steam-boat.



Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., Principal of the College, Highbury New Park, gave, on Wednesday, his last lecture for the season at the British Museum on Assyrian Antiquities, a distinguished company being present. The sports of the Assyrian Kings occupied a great portion of the lecture, which the Doctor illustrated by reference to the beautiful and well-preserved sculptures of the Royal lion-hunting that are in the basement rooms, and he highly commended the accuracy of detail of Mr. Bridgeman's picture, "A Royal Pastime in Nineveh," in the Royal Academy. Much was said about the cuneiform writing, and some interesting translations were given which confirm our historical Scriptures. The bronzes lately found by Mr. Rassam, which belonged to gates twenty feet high, set up in the time of Elisha, were explained: their excellent state of preservation is something remarkable. By way of a bonne bouche the signet-cylinder of King Dungi, who lived 4000 years ago—before the time of Abraham—was shown, as well as an impression from it. Such lectures are deeply interesting, as they enable us to appreciate these inestimable treasures of our great national collection.

FRANCE.

The Committee of the Senate upon M. Ferry's Educational Bill yesterday week adopted article 2, and by five votes to four passed the first two paragraphs of article 3. It was decided to reserve the consideration of the third paragraph until the Committee should be able to hear the views of M. Ferry on the subject. The Chamber passed the Estimates of the Ministry of Public Works. M. Proust brought forward a motion proposing that the ruins of the Tuileries should be razed to the ground, and the motion was referred to a Special Committee. Both Chambers met on Monday, but nothing of interest occurred at the sitting of either body. The Committee of the Senate on the Ferry Education Bill has voted all the clauses with the exception of articles 7, 9, and 10. It is believed that the Session of the Chamber of Deputies will be prorogued at the end of the present week. In the Chamber on Tuesday the bill for the destruction of the ruins of the Tuileries and laying out a garden on the site was, after a warm passage of arms between the Bonapartists and Radicals, passed by 249 to 160 votes.

Not less than 2500 cartloads of documents deposited in the Palais du Luxembourg have to be removed to the Pavillon de Flore, the future seat of the Paris Municipality.

The inauguration of the Exhibition of the Industrial Sciences took place on Thursday week at the Palace of Industry in Paris. The interior presents a charming appearance. The catalogue has already been printed, and the names of upwards of 1800 exhibitors figure in it.

The annual distribution of prizes bestowed on works exhibited at the Salon took place on Sunday at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. Conspicuous among the numerous eminent personages present was M. Jules Ferry, in whose person the offices of Minister of Public Instruction and of Fine Arts are united. In his official capacity he had to make a speech, and in doing so he naturally referred to the present state of art in France. He spoke of the advantages of establishing drawing-schools all over the country, and of the benefit to artists and to the general public. To the South Kensington Museum, in which, after the Exhibition of 1851, all the most perfect models of art applied to industrial purposes were collected, the education of the English workman and artisan was mainly due. The taste of French workmen was still uncontested, but all who had travelled in England could bear witness to the immense progress which during the last twenty years had been made in that country. English and other workmen were preparing to dispute the superiority of Frenchmen. In conclusion, the Minister set forth the necessity of coping with foreign countries by the extension of schools of design.

Delegates in large numbers from various associations in favour of Free Trade met on Sunday in the Alcaza at Lyons. Three thousand persons were present, and a resolution affirming the principles of Free Trade was unanimously passed.

The Théâtre Français is to reopen its doors this (Saturday) evening, when the alterations and decorations of the theatre will be exhibited for the first time by gaslight. The Maison de Molière will be reopened by a characteristic representation, consisting of a performance of "Les Femmes Savantes" and "Le Malade Imaginaire."

The Tenth Chamber pronounced judgment Last Saturday in the Lanterne case. After declaring that the Lanterne had committed the double offence of insulting the agents of the public force and of publishing false news in stating that Mdlle. Bernage had been arrested by an agent des mœurs, the verdict went on to say that, far from establishing the fact that the individual in question was an agent des mœurs, the evidence all went to prove that it was utterly impossible that such could have been the case. M. Genay, manager of the Lanterne, is accordingly condemned to four months' imprisonment and the payment of a fine of 4000f. The Lanterne was also ordered to insert the judgment at the head of its next number.

ITALY.

The Senate on Thursday week, by 75 votes against 10 passed the bill voted by the Chamber of Deputies abolishing the grist tax on cereals of inferior quality. The reporter of the bill stated that the Committee would, after the recess, present a report on the Supplementary Bill passed by the Chamber providing for the reduction by one fourth of the tax on the better sorts of cereals from July 1, 1880, and of the complete abolition of the impost in 1884. Signor Cairoli recently asked the Senate not to insist upon deferring the final vote on the Grist Tax Bill until after the recess, urging that the measure involved both financial and political issues. The Minister of Finance stated that the increased sugar duties would come into force at the same time as the abolition of the tax on inferior cereals.

In Monday's sitting of the Senate Signor Cairoli assured the House, in reply to interpellations respecting the policy of Italy in relation to Greece and Egypt, that the present Ministry would pursue a policy of peace, insisting at the same time on the execution of treaties, more particularly upon the carrying out of Article XXIV. of the Treaty of Berlin.

The parish church of Newton-on-Trent, Lincolnshire, was reopened on the 14th ult., after restoration. The structure consisted originally of tower, nave, north aisle, and chancel; but at the beginning of the century the north aisle was pulled down, and the whole building submitted to that ruthless whitewash-and-plaster process which is only too familiar to modern restorers. There is no resident squire, nor any other person able to give largely to the work which the present Vicar, the Rev. H. Bickersteth Ottley, undertook upon his appointment to the parish, in 1876, and the subscription-list is a remarkable proof of what can be done, under the most unfavourable circumstances, to complete a good work.

The Church of St. Anthony, between Globe-road and James-street, Mile-end-road—the second of the three churches to be built within six miles of the city of London, pursuant to the provisions of Lady Slaney's Estate Act, 1869—was consecrated on Wednesday by the Bishop of London. The endowment, £500 a year, comes out of the tithe rate of All Hallows Staining, Mark-lane. The patronage is vested in the Grocers' Company, who, besides bearing the entire cost of a room intended for a Sunday school, &c., adjoining the church, augment the endowment by £100 a year to provide a residence for the Rector, the Rev. Alfred Whiston Frost Martell, late Curate of Leatherhead.

Four Bishops were consecrated yesterday week in St. Paul's Cathedral—namely, the Rev. William Walsham How, D.D., as Bishop of Bedford (suffragan of London); the Rev. Joseph Barclay, LL.D., as Bishop of the Church of England in Jerusalem; the Rev. John Martindale Speechly, M.A., as Bishop of Travancore and of Cochin; and the Rev. William Ridley, D.D., as Bishop of Caledonia, in British Columbia. The canon in residence, prebendaries, and minor canons met the Archbishop of Canterbury, the assistant bishops, and the Bishops-designate in the apse at the east end of the cathedral at a quarter past eleven, when the procession entered the choir. Amongst those present were the Bishops of London, St. Albans, Rochester, St. Davids, Lichfield, and British Columbia, the Archdeacon of Middlesex, and Canon Gregory. The Archbishop of Canterbury proceeded to the altar, where he began the Communion office, the Epistle being read by the Bishop of Rochester and the Gospel by the Bishop of London. The service throughout was Schubert in G. The sermon was preached by the Dean of Ripon from Acts i. 7. The Archbishop, Bishops, and clergy then returned to the sacrarium, while the Bishops-designate retired to put on their rochets. During their absence Mendelssohn's anthem, "How lovely are the messengers," was sung. Dr. How was presented to the Archbishop by the Bishops of London and Lichfield, and the other Bishops each by two of the assistant prelates. The Queen's mandate in each case was read by Mr. Hassard. The Litany was sung by one of the minor canons; and, the Bishops' examination being over, they again retired to put on the rest of their robes, during which Stainer's anthem, "How beautiful upon the mountains," was sung. On the return of the Bishop the "Veni Creator" was sung, and the consecration proceeded in the usual way. The newly-consecrated Bishops having taken their seats in the sacrarium, the offertory, which was for the Colonial Bishopric Fund, was collected—the Archbishop, Bishops, and cathedral clergy presenting their donations kneeling before the holy table. There were a large number of communicants.

CHURCHES IN LONDON PULLED DOWN OR CONDEMNED.

A return has been issued of the number of churches in the city of London pulled down, or condemned, under the "Union of Benefices Act, 1860," and of the new churches which have been built out of the proceeds:—

St. Benet, Gracechurch-street, was sold for £23,894 4s., and the proceeds were appropriated as follows:—£7236 10s.4d. for the erection of the Church of St. Benet, Mile End-road, Stepney—£9000 for the endowment of same; £4000 for the alteration and repair of the church of the united benefice (All-hallows, Lombard-street); and £1500 for a parsonage house.

St. Mary Somerset, Upper Thames-street, was sold for £10,241. Of that sum £9149 was appropriated to the erection of St. Mary's, Hoxton, and £1028 towards the alteration and repair of the Church of St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey.

St. Mildred's, Poultry, was sold for £49,550 14s. 6d. Towards the erection of the Church of St. Paul, Clerkenwell, the sum of £9000 was contributed, as well as a further sum of £2207 8s. 10d.; and £7550 was appropriated towards the parsonage-house and church of the united benefice, and the augmentation of another benefice.

St. Martin Outwich, Threadneedle-street, realised £37,631. Three sums of £8000 were appropriated to the erection of Holy Trinity, Dalston; Christ Church, Stepney; and St. Peter's, Limehouse; £3000 has been given for the alteration and repair of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate (united benefice), and £7843 has been invested to be applied in payment of certain annuities (under 36 Geo. III.) for rebuilding the Church of St. Martin Outwich.

St. James's, Duke's-place, Aldgate, was sold for £6601, of which sum £1980 was contributed towards the erection of the Church of St. John, Red Lion-square, and the residue was applied for the alteration and repair of the church of the united benefice (St. Catherine Cree) and for a parsonage-house.

St. Antholin's, Queen Victoria-street, was sold for £44,990 12s. 9d.; £1000 was appropriated to the Church of St. Antholin, Nunhead; £2000 towards a parsonage-house; and £7000 for repairing and altering St. Mary Aldermary.

St. Michael's, Queenhithe, was sold for £10,741 14s. 7d.; £5000 appropriated for the proposed Church of St. Michael, Camden Town, and £2425 for repairs, parsonage-house, &c.

Allhallow's, Bread-street, was sold for £32,254. To the erection of the church of Allhallows, East India Docks, £9000 was appropriated, with £4000 towards the endowment, and £3000 for the parsonage-house and church of the united benefice (St. Mary-le-Bow).

Allhallows Staining was sold for £12,418 3s. 4d. (including the proceeds of the sale of the Curate's house). The new church of Allhallows, Bromley-by-Bow, was assigned £10,189, and the proposed Church of St. Anthony, Stepney, is being built partly out of the balance of the proceeds and partly out of the funds derived from the accumulation of the tithes of Allhallows Staining. A third church is to be built as soon as the funds will permit.

The site of St. Dionis Backchurch, Lime-street, has not yet been sold, but it is intended to apply £4000 towards defraying the cost of a new vestry and muniment room for the parish of St. Dionis Backchurch; £10,000 for the provision and endowment of a new church to be called St. Dionis; £1500 towards the cost of a parsonage-house; and £700 for the improvement of Church of St. James, Kennington.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the net sum realised by the sale of nine churches has been £228,324 1s. 11d. Of that sum £85,955 11s. 9d. has been appropriated for the erection of new churches, and further grants to the amount of £35,357 have been promised.—Guardian.

Canon Farrar.—The annual distribution of prizes at Reading School was held in the presence of the Mayor and Corporation and a large number of ladies and gentlemen. The prizes were distributed by Mr. Walter, M.P. A long list of distinctions gained by scholars of the school last year was read.

The new buildings of the King's School, Warwick, were opened on Friday, when the prizes for the past year's work were distributed in the new school-room.

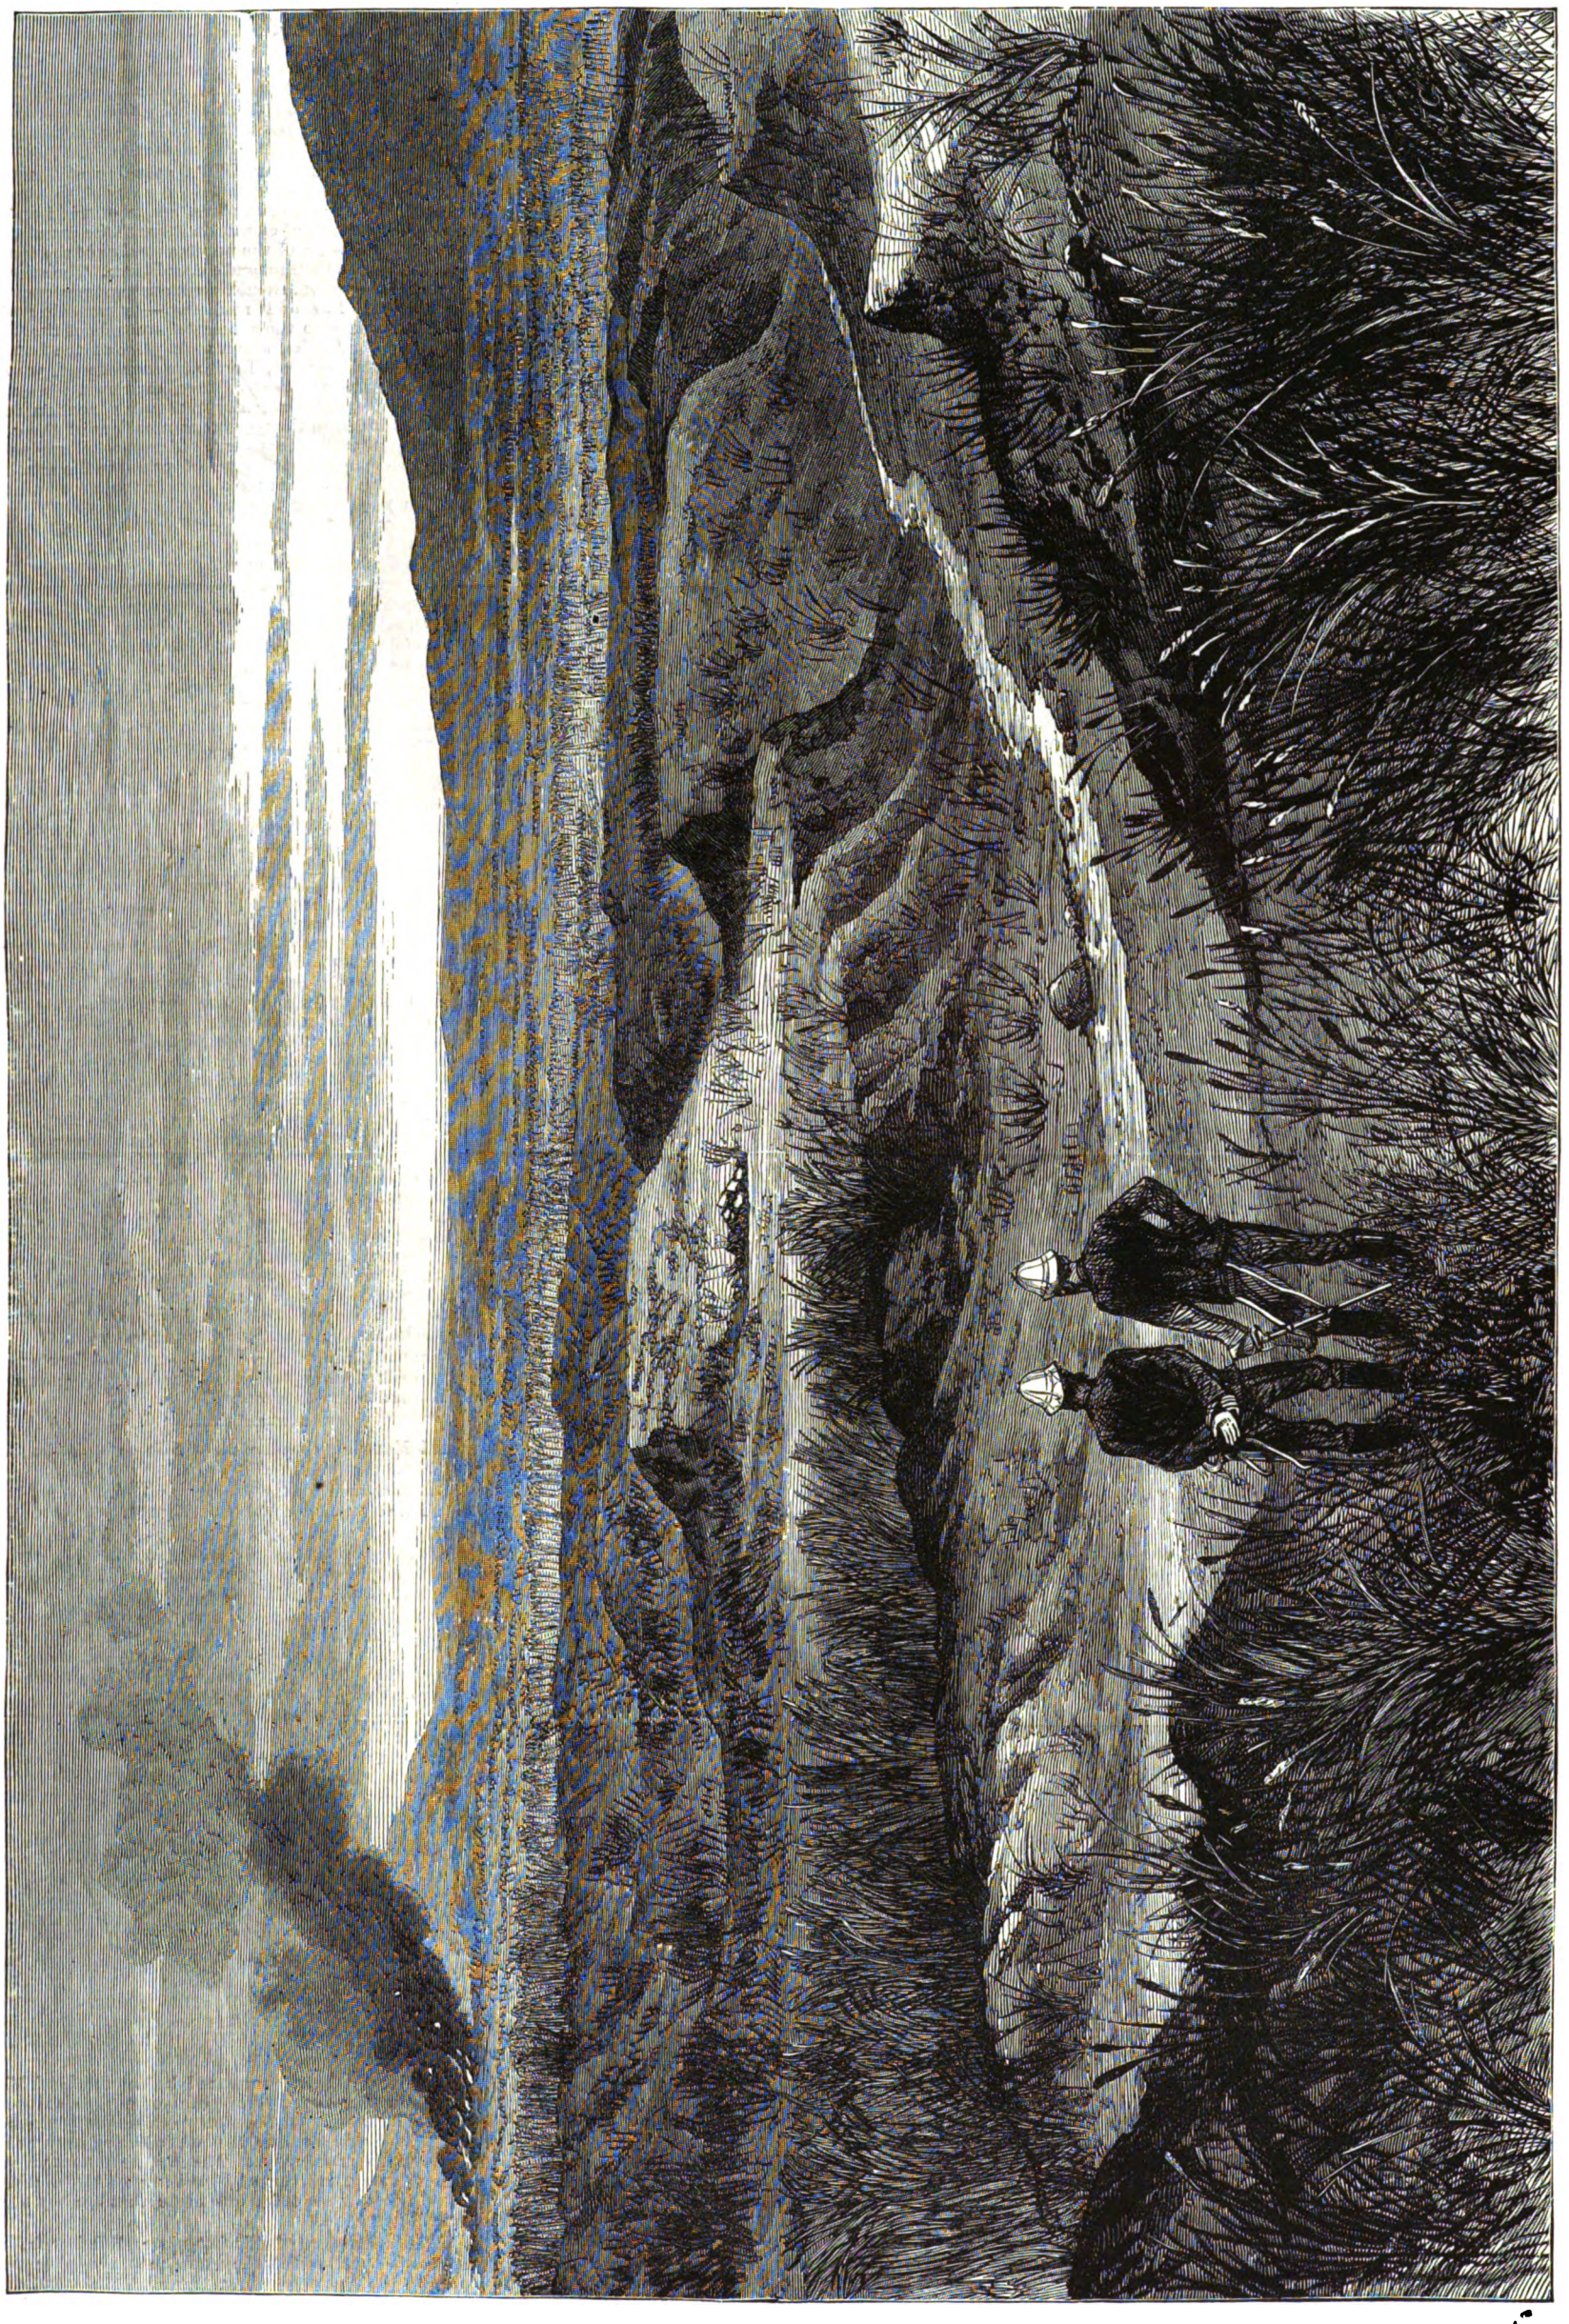
Cardinal Manning consecrated a Roman Catholic Archbishop of Shrewsbury yesterday week at Birkenhead.

The Gazette announces the appointment of Captain Henry Fairfax, R.N., to be a Companion of the Bath, Civil Division.

The Eleanor Cross erected at Ashby-de-la-Zouch to the memory of the late Countess of Loudoun by the people of that town and the neighbourhood was unveiled on Thursday week, in the presence of a large concourse.

The foundation-stone of the new public buildings to be erected at Reading, at an estimated cost of £44,000, is to be laid with Masonic honours, and the Earl of Carnarvon, Pro-Grand Master of the English Freemasons, has consented to perform the ceremony on Tuesday, Oct. 14.

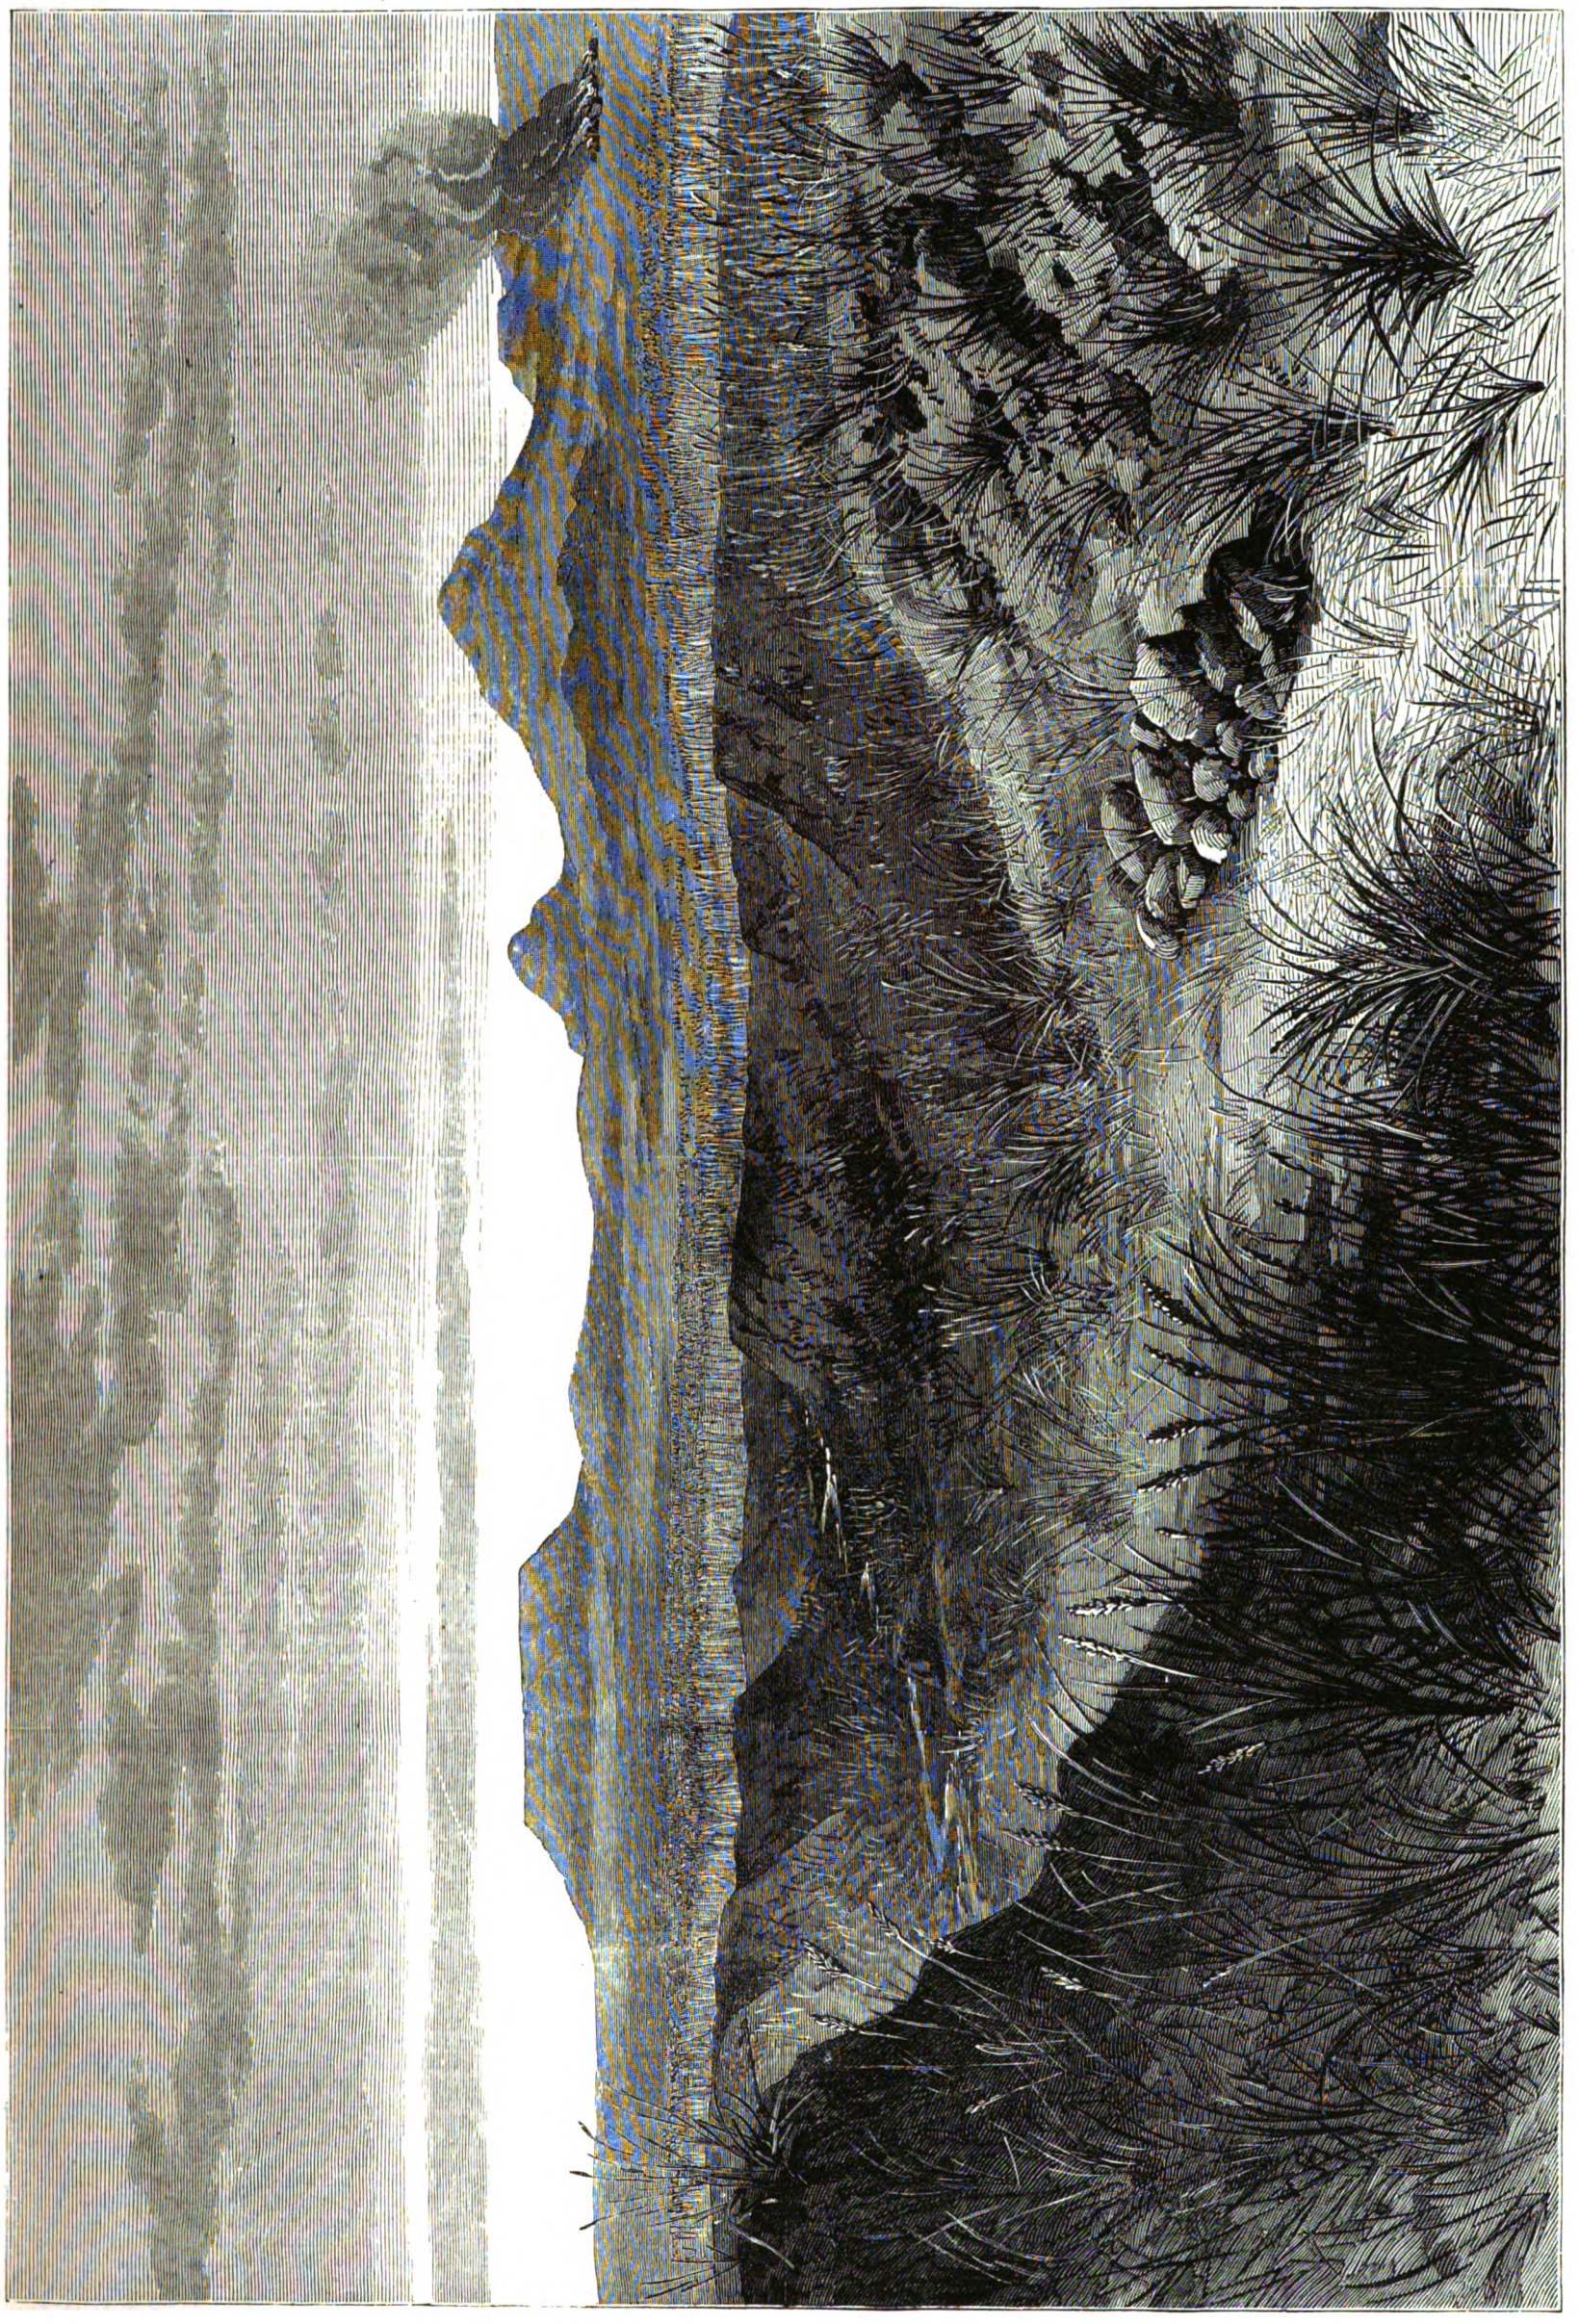
Mr. Roebuck, on Thursday week, opened an institution erected near Sheffield by the local Association of Licensed Victuallers, intended for the benefit of poor members. The building, which has cost £30,000, comprises twelve cottages. The opening ceremony was followed by a luncheon, over which Mr. Roebuck presided.



A new line of railway was opened on Monday from Dungannon to Cookstown. This line will connect the two great railway services in Ulster—the Great Northern at Dungannon with the Belfast and Northern Counties Railway at Cookstown. The new railway was opened by the Great Northern Company, to which it belongs.

The République Française states that England and France have come to the determination to organise the future régime of Egypt, and will begin by proposing the nomination of a European commission to protect the interests of the creditors of the Khedive. General inspectors will be appointed, whose intervention in administrative affairs will be effective.

A woman having been summoned before the Lord Mayor for not sending her boy, twelve years of age, to school, his Lordship spoke strongly on the money of the ratepayers being expended in such prosecutions, the lad, it having been proved, reading and writing fairly well. The law, he remarked, when pressed in this way, instead of benefiting children, did the reverse. Ultimately an order was made that the boy should attend school half time.



Mr. William Hunter, of Blacket-place, Edinburgh, who died a few days ago, has left the whole income arising on the capital of his estates, amounting to about £100,000, to be applied in the payment of annuities of from £10 to £30 to natives of Scotland in decayed circumstances, who have been engaged in business in Edinburgh as merchants, manufacturers, or other tradesmen. The legacy will take effect after the death of certain annuitants and a period for accumulation. Mr. Hunter was a partner in the firm of Messrs. Hunter and Co., clothiers, Edinburgh.—Times.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

So there is positively to be nothing left of the façade of the wrecked and burnt-out Tuileries. The Chamber of Deputies at Versailles have, by a large majority, decreed that the grimy and ghastly skeleton which stretches from the Pavillon de Flore to the Pavillon Marsan is wholly to disappear; and henceforth the spectator standing at the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile will enjoy an uninterrupted vista down the Champs Elysées and through the grand alley of the Tuileries gardens to the Arch of Triumph in the Carrousel. The site of the razed ruin is to be planted as an ornamental garden. I wonder that the Republicans did not propose to sow it with salt. After the execution of Louis XVI. the Sovereign People were content to suffer the palace to remain standing; but the garden was converted into a potato-field. "La Liberté et des patatas!" was the popular cry. Poor old dismantled and soon-to-be-demolished Tuileries. Poor old Tuileries! When I was in Paris last Easter I used to go and look at the black mask of bygone grandeur, with its eyeless windows and toothless portals, by moonlight, and fancy it haunted by the ghosts of Catherine de Médicis, Philibert Delorme, Maximilian Robespierre, and Béranger's "Petit Homme Rouge." But the grass and the flowers should grow bravely on that well-irrigated site. Blood enough has been shed there, in all conscience.

I scarcely think that our excellent Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings would find much favour in France. The French are wonderful hands at destroying their own property. They pulled down the Bastille, "lock, stock, and barrel." They pulled down, under the Restoration, the old Opera House in the Rue de Richelieu (where now is the Place Louvois) because the Duke de Berri had been assassinated within the theatre walls, and it was intended to build an expiatory chapel on its site;—only another Revolution came and scattered the project to the winds; and there was at one time a serious talk of demolishing the Panthéon for the reason that the abhorred ashes of Marat had been deposited in its vaults. A very thoroughgoing people, the French. From a social and civilising point of view, I should not mind if they were to invade us for a few days, and, marching straight on London, pull down Seven-dials, Dudley-street, the remaining slums of Westminster, Bedfordbury, Holywell and Wych streets, Charles-street, Drury-lane, and, for the matter of that, the foul old "Lane" itself.

I do wish that people would not write me anonymous letters; or that if they did that they would abstain from writing either in a silly or in an abusive strain. In perfect good faith I asked a question last week, founded on Mr. Du Maurier's picture of "Madame est Servie" in L'Art, as to which arm a gentleman should offer to a lady when he takes her down to dinner. A silly anonymous person writes thus to me:—

> How can you? Why, who ever heard of a lady being taken down to dinner unless she got the wall? The weakest goes to the wall—always, Mr. ——, always the lady inside, if you please. As for Du Maurier, I am really very sorry for him. But why bannisters, Mr. ——; why bannisters? Is it not balusters, from Walker to Webster!

Is this meant to be clever? The question involves a very nice point of etiquette, which has puzzled me for years. In many houses the dining-room is on the same floor with the drawing-room, and there is consequently no wall to be taken by the lady. Under these circumstances, which arm should you offer her? My perplexity on this score has been removed by a courteous and sensible communication from Lieutenant-Colonel G——, who does not write anonymously, but whose name I have no authority to publish, and who writes:—

> The canon of etiquette in the case of taking a lady down to dinner is one which I have heard propounded and answered in this way—"that the gentleman should offer the right arm." The reason which I heard assigned for the rule was that the fashion of handing down to dinner came into vogue before the wearing of swords in private society was discontinued.

Another correspondent mildly suggests that the left arm should be offered, as "being next your heart." But then, if you give your right arm, that will be next the lady's heart. The canon as propounded by Colonel G—— seems to be the most feasible one. I may add that I asked Gustave Doré what was the practice abroad—right arm or left arm? "It is a matter of indifference," he replied. "Either arm." Now, this would account for the apparent solecism in Mr. Du Maurier's drawing. It may be in the mansion of a foreign Ambassadress that his grand dinner party is taking place.

Touching bannisters (which I wrote with one n, and not two, as my anonymous correspondent puts it, everybody knows that the word is a corruption of "baluster." But it is a universally recognised, and all but universally adopted corruption, and, as such, finds a place in the latest edition of Webster and Worcester's Dictionary, and is there defined as "a wooden railing enclosing stairs." For the rest, beshrew Webster and Worcester, and Walker and Johnson, and Bailey and Smellfungus, and the whole tribe of dictionary makers! The weather has turned gloriously hot. The sun shines; the green peas have become delicious, and the strawberries are in glorious condition, and have got at last some colour into their heretofore pallid cheeks. I will take the train to Eastbourne or to Hayling Island and laugh the lexicographers to scorn.

Mem.: Poor Angus Reach used, with mock gravity, to relate that when Shakspeare asked Ben Jonson why he drank so much soda-water, the author of "Every Man in his Humour" replied, "Because I like it, William." No little philosophy underlies the jest. I will continue to write and to say "banisters" because I like it; but when I have a cold in my head, I will say "balusters," and, in addition, I will speak of "the inconstant moon" as "th' idcodstadt bool." There is really, I believe, a much deeper philological reason for the frequent convertibility of l with n; but the weather is (happily) too hot to be philological.

I went on Tuesday night to Her Majesty's Theatre to see just one act—the last—of Balfe's Opera of "Il Talismano," which was splendidly performed, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa; Signor Galassi playing Richard the Lion Heart, Signor Campanini Sir Kenneth, Madame Marie Roze Berengaria, and the fascinating and accomplished Madame Etelka Gerster Edith Plantagenet. I was compelled to go very late, but I was just in time to hear the famous rondo in the third act, which follows the trio between Richard, Berengaria, and Edith. Madame Gerster was in splendid voice; and her execution was as wonderfully finished and accurate as usual. She had had three or four encores, I was told, before I arrived: yet she supported another encore, and a series of re-calls, and a bombardment of bouquets without betraying the slightest symptoms of fatigue. It was Madame Etelka Gerster's benefit night, and it was a graceful act on her part to select the last work of an illustrious British composer for her benefit performance. My opera-going days are over, but I went to Her Majesty's for the sake of "auld lang syne," and it did me good to sit there and listen to my old friend Balfe's music; it did me good to sit there by his widow, and see the box filled with the fair young faces of his grandchildren, and to remember that their mothers were the playmates of my sister and myself. Ah! so many years ago.

What do you say, you whose lot is to "drive the quill," or rather the steel Gillott—to drive it wellnigh incessantly—for literary, for legal, or for commercial purposes, to writing on black paper with white ink? A Russian savant—wonderful people, these Russian savants! we owe the modern torpedo to Professor Jacobi, of St. Petersburg—has suggested such a radical revolution in the normal conditions of caligraphy. His object is to afford relief to the writer's eyes. I asked a dressmaker who had done a good deal of work for mourning warehouses what effect the constant contemplation of a sable surface had had on her sight. She made answer, a dreadfully distressing effect. But then she had worked "black upon black," with black thread, and with black lace or bugles upon a black texture. That alone would be enough to strain the eyes to a fearful extent. I have an indistinct idea that I purchased some black writing-paper and some white ink many years ago, at a stationer's in the town of Blidah, in Algeria, and that the stationer told me that these writing materials were much patronised by the French employés in the bureaux Arabes, because they found the glare of white paper under an African sun almost intolerable. The chief drawback to the use of black writing-paper would be, I apprehend, the difficulty of obtaining a dye capable of staining the paper a jet black without largely increasing its weight and cost.

Mem: The "grounds" of the panels or canvases on which the Old Masters painted were usually a deep Venetian red, on which they drew their outlines in white. One very strong argument in favour of black writing-paper and white ink will occur if you recall the process of etching. Your plate is covered with a ground of varnish, which you smoke over the flame of a taper until it assumes a glossy black, or, at least, a very dark brown, hue. I have been able, with great care, to smoke my plates quite black without burning the ground. Then, with a shade of tissue-paper strained on a wire frame between the daylight and your plate, you begin to etch; and each scratch you make through the varnish on to the copper gleams like a thread of gold. If you are etching on steel the thread looks like one of silver. Now, etchers are a very long-lived and strong-sighted race. George Cruikshank, who had been etching since he was eight, went on etching to within a year or two of his death, which took place at the age of eighty-three. Mr. Thomas Landseer, the engraver, is alive, and over eighty. About old Mr. Pye the engraver's eyes, who lived until nearly ninety, I have no information. G. A. S.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

The victory gained by General Lord Chelmsford at Ulundi was the alleged reason why Lord Strathnairn did not on the 25th ult. carry out his intention of calling the attention of the House of Lords "to the neglect of the first and elementary rules of the art of war exhibited in recent operations in South Africa." But the noble and gallant Lord did animadvert on the harm done to our military system by the short-service system; and was answered by Lord Bury and the Duke of Cambridge, who said that the Military Committee had the whole matter under consideration. On Monday, Lord Shaftesbury elicited from the Marquis of Salisbury that no slavery existed in Cyprus; and various measures were advanced a stage. On Tuesday, the Duke of Richmond enlightened the Archbishop of Canterbury as to the education of canal-boat children; and Lord Bury promised the Duke of Buccleuch a return as to the number of floggings in the past five years.

Proof against the seductions of Goodwood, steeled even against the attractions which a fish dinner at Greenwich offers to the jaded legislator when the glass registers 80 in the shade, hon. members there still are, who, faithful among the faithless found, continue to support the Leader of the House in his efforts to transact the remaining business of the Session. The regard in which Sir Stafford Northcote is held on both sides of the House was conspicuously shown on his taking his seat for the first time since the narrow escape he had from a carriage accident on Saturday last. There was genuine warmth in the cheers which greeted the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Monday. To come to dry business, and to hark back a little, the Ministerial measure for granting a new University to Ireland has been the toughest knot for the House to undo of late. When, on the 24th of July, Mr. Lowther came to explain nothing further than that the bill proposed to abolish the Queen's University, and hand over £5000 a year to a new University of Ireland, Mr. Shaw may have conceived he had good cause in the course of his remarkably effective speech to make an appeal to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and beg him to announce this further concession to Irish feeling—that the new University should receive substantial endowment. But Mr. Newdegate and Mr. Courtney deprecated the granting of further indulgence to Irish Roman Catholics, as did Mr. Fawcett, to whom Sir Stafford Northcote replied, "that the Government had no desire to re-endow the 'denominational system,' but simply intended to propose in Committee that the Senate of the proposed University should be empowered to draw up a scheme for the provision of the desired scholarships and buildings, the examinations to be confined to secular subjects." Mr. Shaw's amendment, declaring the Bill unsatisfactory unless it complied with his suggestion, was negatived by 257 to 90 votes; but the debate on the second reading was adjourned on the motion of Sir Wilfrid Lawson. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, again, could not secure the passing of the East India Loan Bill without some debate. Mr. Fawcett, for instance, on July 25, moved the following amendment to the motion for the second reading:—

> That, considering that it has been officially stated that the Afghan War was undertaken in the interests of England and India jointly, this House is of opinion that it is unjust to make India pay towards the expenses of that war more than seven times as much as will be contributed by England

Mr. Gladstone and other right hon. gentlemen on the front Opposition bench accorded their support to Mr. Fawcett, whose arguments were answered by Mr. E. Stanhope and Sir Stafford Northcote. The Government, in the division, had only the small majority of twelve—137 against 125. Sir George Campbell then moved an amendment to the effect that the United States proposal should be accepted to steady the value of silver, but the discussion could not be finished. On Monday Mr. Fawcett made the smallness of the majority against his amendment the grounds for an appeal to the Government to make the bill more equitable to India. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer was obdurate; and the measure passed through Committee unaltered.

The hard and unsympathetic part of the Home Secretary's nature was prominently shown yesterday week by the grounds he advanced in not yielding with a good grace to the evident wish of the House to agree to Sir E. Wilmot's motion:—

> That the innocence of Edmund Galley of the crime of which he was convicted at Exeter in 1836 has been established beyond all reasonable doubts; and that an humble address be presented to her Majesty praying her Majesty graciously to grant a free pardon to Galley.

Mr. Lowe was alone in supporting Mr. Cross in the obstinate stand he endeavoured to make. Mr. Bright's warm appeal on behalf of Galley more than counterbalanced the cold reason of Mr. Lowe; and the key struck by the right hon. member for Birmingham was followed by several succeeding speakers. Mr. Cross, however, could not be induced to concede the innocence of Galley; and so, in the end, this curtailed motion of Sir E. Wilmot was adopted:—"That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying her Majesty graciously to grant a free pardon to the convict, Edmund Galley." The House thereafter plunged into Committee of Supply, and sat up over the Estimates till the small hours of Saturday morning. The rumours that thousands of Russian subjects "were being driven to slavery in Siberia," and that 250 Russians had died on an overcrowded ship while being transported to Saghalien, and other reports reflecting adversely on the Russian Government, were embodied by Mr. Cowen on Monday in one formidable question as to their truth. But Mr. Bourke could only return a diplomatic answer to the effect that he had no official knowledge of the accuracy of the statements. With regard to Mr. Grissell's persistence in refusing to comply with the Speaker's warrant to appear at the Bar to answer the recent charge of breach of privilege, Captain Gossett, the worthy Serjeant-at-Arms, on Monday occasioned a little laughter by his explanation:—

> The messenger has returned and reported to me that he had seen Mr. Grissell, who is still at Boulogne-sur-Mer, beyond the jurisdiction of the House, at the Hôtel Bordeaux, under the name of Graham.

In Committee of Supply subsequently, Mr. Shaw prevailed upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer to postpone the votes for the Queen's University and the Queen's Colleges; and the evening was spent in passing various other Irish votes. On Tuesday Mr. Finegan took his seat for Ennis. Mr. Walpole announced that Mr. Ward, who was still in custody, had cried peccavi. The Banking Bill was read the second time, after much criticism. Ere the House could go into Committee, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre initiated a lively discussion in opposition to the Police Vote for Cyprus, which he proposed should be postponed for a year, and which gave Sir W. Harcourt a fresh opportunity of redishing his philippics against the Cyprus policy of the Government. There voted for Mr. Shaw-Lefevre's motion 72, and against it 99. In very quick time, a vote of £2,500,000 was granted to pay off Exchequer Bonds; and votes for embassies and the consular service were agreed to.

On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Wednesday Mr. J. S. Ward, who had been in custody eight days on a charge of breach of privilege in connection with the Tower High Level Bridge Bill Committee, was, after some discussion, released from confinement, he having expressed his sorrow for his offence, and having, according to doctors' report, suffered in health. In Committee of the House on the Educational Estimates the Educational Vote, estimated at £2,481,168, was passed. Progress was reported on the Scotch Vote, and the House adjourned shortly before six o'clock.

An hour and a quarter sufficed the House of Lords on Thursday to transact the multifarious matters that illustrated the comprehensiveness of noble Lords' mental vision. When it is mentioned that in this brief space of time not only were subjects as diverse as Workmen's Compensation, Summary Jurisdiction, Petroleum, Industrial Schools, Public Companies, the New Forest, Irish Bills of Sale, and Railway Brakes passed in review, but that the Marquis of Salisbury informed the House (in a tone that implied that his firmness had been not altogether uninfluential in hastening the departure) that the last Russian soldier had left Eastern Roumelia, enough will have been adduced to prove once again the omniscience of the Chamber, which adjourned with alacrity at the smiling suggestion of the Earl of Beaconsfield. In the Lower House, even the promise of yet another financial statement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer was powerless to draw a full attendance. Neither Mr. Gladstone nor Mr. Bright were present on the front Opposition bench, nor could the Marquis of Hartington be expected to be in his seat on the Goodwood Cup day, albeit the Duke of Richmond himself, by-the-way, was not absent from the Upper House. The leadership of the Opposition, indeed, was in commission for the nonce, Mr. Forster and Sir Henry James seemingly sharing the task between them, somewhat against the will, apparently, of one or two recalcitrant hon. members below the gangway, who admonished the right hon. gentlemen to "speak up" when they rose to question the Chancellor of the Exchequer in too low a key. The Zulu Budget of Sir Stafford Northcote was remarkably concise and brief. With a bland straightforwardness which, it will be seen, did not quite carry conviction to the minds of, at least, two right hon. gentlemen, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that the estimated expenditure on the Zulu War of half a million a month had not been exceeded up to the end of July, and that subsequently the expenses ought to diminish rapidly. The account he had now to present would be for three millions. So the total cost of the War, which he hoped was now concluded, would be four millions and a half. At any rate, Sir Stafford Northcote felt satisfied that this sum would be sufficient until the next Session. But the Government were of opinion, and the Colonial authorities at the Cape and at Natal were fully informed of the views of the Government, that the bulk of the expenses incurred through the difficulties in South Africa ought not to be defrayed by the Home Government. Coming to the question of how the three millions for the Zulu War would affect the general finances of the year, he had to confess there would be a deficiency of £1,163,000, but there was an approving cheer both loud and deep from Major O'Gorman when he went on to say that he hoped to recover that deficiency from the South African colonies. In conclusion, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he would not that evening ask for more than the renewal of the Exchequer Bonds falling due, and would postpone till Monday next his formal proposal for the vote of £1,200,000 for the Zulu War. In his amiably earnest apologetic style, Mr. Childers entered a protest against the Government's habit of throwing present liabilities on the future. Sir Robert Peel followed suit with some pungency, boldly questioned the accuracy of Sir Stafford Northcote's estimate of three or four millions for the war, pointed to the precedent of the Abyssinian War, the cost of which grew to be nine or ten millions, and vigorously demanded an immediate debate on the South African policy of the Government—to which demand the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not find it convenient to accede. Soon, Mr. Grant Duff, burning to retain the Indian Museum, was on his legs; and from the summit of the hon. member's full sandy beard issued a shrill lecture, which might have been of greater interest, it was felt, if the speaker had deposited some Museum specimens on the table, and had provided himself with a lecturer's rod to give point to his learned disquisition, which was accompanied by a gentle murmur of conversation that lulled one or more present into a peaceful slumber. There was, perhaps, less of the Little Bethel delivery noticeable in Mr. Fawcett's speech against burdening India with the expense of the Museum—some £9000 a year, Dr. Lyon Playfar said. With regard to the future, the Chancellor of the Exchequer previously stated that Saturday would be devoted to the Bankruptcy Bill, and Tuesday to the Committee on the Irish University Bill.

ART BOOKS.

In his aims as an artist Mr. E. J. Poynter is one of the most commendable painters of our school. His early works, "Israel in Egypt" and "The Catapult," were distinguished by study and originality, and some later works have attained a dignity and largeness of style due to an intelligent emulation of the old masters, which, unfortunately, is very rare in our day. And, unlike most of our English painters, he has been found not unwilling to impart his knowledge, first as Slade Professor at University College, and subsequently as Director for Art of the Art Department, South Kensington. The teaching of one so well versed in both practice and theory is entitled to respectful consideration, and the lectures Mr. Poynter delivered in his official capacity, a selection of which, under the title Ten Lectures on Art, has lately been published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, cannot be too strongly recommended to all interested in the cause of art-education in this country, the elevation of our school, and the diffusion of sound principles, whether as applicable to fine-art proper or to art industry. We cannot quite agree with Mr. Poynter that it is "much easier to write about art than to practise it"—that is, to write about art with a sufficient acquaintance with technicalities, upon well-grounded theory, with an adequate knowledge of historical developments and wide familiarity with nature. And we regret his conclusion, which he announces somewhat brusquely, that "the more time he devotes to painting in future and the less to public lecturing the better it will be for his art and for those interested in it." We doubt if it will be better for the public, if it will be for the benefit of his manual facility. The process of mind necessary so to assimilate and concentrate the results of experience as to transmit them to others is not a bad exercise for an artist. In all art and science it often happens that in teaching others we learn something ourselves; and such instruction as our lecturer is competent to impart can ill be spared by the public in view of the ignorant, fanciful dogmatism, and mere literary exercitation or rhetorical claptrap which are put forth, even from prominent official positions, as art-criticism. At present, and while we have the Old Masters, the student and the public require to be lectured and written at, rather than to be painted at. We regret that we cannot even glance at a tithe of the topics discussed, always with judgment, learning, and plain practical sense, in these lectures. Mr. Poynter has formed an estimate of some contemporary painters with which we cannot wholly agree, and his liberality is somewhat restricted, perhaps, by reverence, though in itself well founded, for certain old masters; but otherwise he is singularly free from "crank," bias, or sympathy with eccentricity or narrowness, whether in painting and sculpture or "applied art." The lectures are full of valuable directions to the student. As might be expected, the importance of the study of the nude, as the very fountain-head of all art, is constantly insisted on. The time wasted in drawing from the antique in the Royal Academy schools and in preliminary work (formerly) in the schools of the Art-Department is pointed out and compared with the system adopted at Paris, where Mr Poynter received much of his own art-education. We cordially concur with all that the lecturer says respecting the importance of "tone" in painting and the comparative absence of that quality in English pictures, owing to an inability to grasp the relations of the work as a whole, the result of imperfect training. The greatness of Michael Angelo is prominently but not unduly proclaimed; a new revelation of his mighty genius has been afforded since photography has assisted us to see the marvels of the Sistine Chapel ceiling as they are. Apropos of Michael Angelo: Mr. Poynter exposes, in a manner as just as it is outspoken, the ludicrous depreciation of the great Florentine—emanating, it would seem, from mere capricious self-contradictory querulousness—contained in the later writings of Mr. Ruskin. The lecturer very properly remarks in effect that Mr. Ruskin's standpoint is almost wholly outside the domain of art; it is not æsthetics, properly understood, but religious, moral, sentimental, and political theses which give occasion for his surpassing eloquence; cant about "earnest work" in detail but masks insensibility to the essential generic beauty of form; with him bright colour is synonymous with beautiful colour; he is ignorant of the practical side of art, and still more so of its noblest qualities.

There is a curious contrast between the Lectures we have just noticed and the Essays on Art (Smith, Elder, and Co.), by Mr. J. Comyns Carr, a professional art-critic. The former have little pretension to literary style; but they are full of clearly-expressed opinion and definite instruction based on practical knowledge, the possession of which is unconsciously manifested, rather than seen or obtruded, but which is felt to be as essential as the skeleton to a living figure. The latter are distinguished by considerable literary taste, by careful construction and balance of sentences, by delicate sensibility to the possible or remote literary relations and poetic affinities of art, by an inquiring spirit, which, however, loses itself sometimes in a vague effort to discriminate nearly intangible differences, or in hazy misconception, and by an apparently judicial temper—a desire, seemingly, to be moderate and fair, and especially to do justice to the incompris which, if justified by its decisions, would be as praiseworthy as it is rare in art-criticism. Yet in all that large portion of art which is practical, definite, material, precisely where the lectures are strongest these essays are weakest. The skeleton is little more than infantile cartilage. It is the distinction, more or less, between science on terra-firma and super-subtle dilettanteism in cloudland. Mr. Carr will, for instance, propound a problem respecting the peculiarities in the works of a given artist, or he will assume that artist to have been actuated by some intention in order to account for those peculiarities—an intention which often probably never existed; he will walk round his problem to examine it from different points of view, and the reader's attention will be engaged by the writer's graceful and conciliatory ingenuity, till he finds that the inflated speculation ends where it began—nowhere; and if the reader happens to be an artist he is likely to discover that the whole theory is traceable to a want of acquaintance with the simple technical nature or material conditions (more especially in sculpture) of the peculiarities in question, be they merits or defects, and which intrinsically possibly hardly deserved analysis. With our author and writers of this class the works of poor crazy Blake are a favourite subject for apologetic and wire-drawn theorising. Great wit to madness may be near allied, but a man is not great in the proportion that he is mad; and, although extremes meet, it may, on the contrary, be said with at least equal truth that the greatest wit is nearest allied to the greatest sanity. Keats is a no less favourite poet with the writers on art who seem to make common cause with the "sensuous school" of contemporary poetry, and with the melancholy-mad mediævalism or pseudo-classical affectation of some of our painters. But we fail to find, with Mr. Carr, in his essay on "The Artistic Spirit in Modern English Poetry," that Keats is the only poet in the early years of the present century who fully apprehended the true relations of art and poetry. We doubt if he apprehended any such relations. Sound criticism would, indeed, insist on the essential distinctness of art from poetry, not on fanciful relationship or accidental interfusion. The essays on Corot and Millet, Frederick Walker, Flaxman and Gibson, and the chapters on the drawings by Old Masters in the British Museum (which originally appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette) are the most acceptable of the collection. We must add that much injustice is often done when criticism of the kind under consideration is brought to bear on contemporary art, ignoring, as it is apt to do, the bulk of honest, capable work in favour of some eccentric or merely tentative performances, for no other reason than that they afford occasion for a display of imaginary acumen.

An apology is due for our delay in calling attention to the two careful, able, and interesting volumes by Mrs. Mark Pattison on The Renaissance of Art in France (C. Kegan Paul and Co.). The plan adopted by Mrs. Pattison was, in the main, to give an historical and descriptive account of the life and works, so far as they are known, of the men who chiefly advanced the development of the renaissance in France in the various sections of art—as Bullant, De l'Orme, and Lescot in architecture; Jean Goujon and Germain Pilon in sculpture; Fouquet and the Clouets in painting; Cousin in painting on glass; the Penicauds, Reymond, and Léonard Limousin in enamelling at Limoges; and Palissy in pottery—whose naturalistic works scarcely, however, partake of Renaissance convention. There are chapters, also, in a somewhat biographic spirit on engraving on wood and metal and other minor arts. In collecting her materials the authoress has not only consulted available authorities and rendered herself au courant with recent discoveries, but has examined and verified many works and much evidence, documentary and otherwise, for herself. She has likewise given some consideration to the national and social influences which more immediately affected the revival. As a book of reference, within the limits indicated, it fills almost a vacuum in our literature, and is quite sufficiently comprehensive for the English student, unless he be a specialist. Even in France the want of an adequate treatise on the subject has been lately felt—a want which M. Léon Palustre, director of the French Society of Archæology, proposes to supply in an édition de luxe, now announced for publication. But while Mrs. Pattison has dealt with her attractive theme in a very intelligent, practical, and useful manner, we could have wished that she had taken a less restricted and more impartial view of the primary causes of the art revolution of the fifteenth century—causes which probably operated earlier and over a wider area than Mrs. Pattison seems to admit, or cares to inquire. By concentrating her attention over a limited field she has not unnaturally overestimated the importance of the French phase or reflex of the Renaissance relatively to that of Italy, to which it owed so much, as well as that of the Netherlands and Germany. And surely in her enthusiasm she has too often extolled the comparatively mannered and affected beauties of the French revival or imported fashion at the expense of the purer native art of an earlier period. Yet we cannot admit that the spirit of the new order of art-ideas died out so soon and so completely as she would have us believe.

The late Mr. Henry Merritt was chiefly known in the art-world as a skilful restorer of pictures, and he wrote a pamphlet entitled "Dirt and Pictures Separated," which puts forward with much plausibility all that can be said in defence of a practice pregnant with danger unless directed by extreme conscientiousness and mature knowledge of the processes and materials of painting and the nature and conduct of varnishes and solvents. But Mr. Merritt was also a journalistic art-critic, and the author of two or three short works of fiction, the most elaborate of which, "Robert Dalby," was published anonymously. These, with the pamphlet on picture-cleaning, a selection from his art-criticisms, and much additional biographical detail, have been published by his widow (a painter of talent, whose acquaintance with her husband was of longer duration than the very short period of her marriage), under the title Henry Merritt: Art-Criticism and Romance, two volumes (Messrs. Kegan Paul and Co.), and are interesting and suggestive in many ways. His editor, Mr. Basil Champneys, candidly admits to have found among Mr. Merritt's art-criticism "very little which there is any advantage in preserving," yet we may say, from personal acquaintance, that he had an exquisitely sensitive perception of the beauties both of the old masters and of nature. The peculiar value and interest, despite obvious defects, of his novelettes consist in the fact that they are in the main autobiographical. He drew from the hard experiences of his own early life as an Oxford boy, and some of his stories of the very lowly and occasionally criminal people with whom he was brought in contact have a simple, graphic, direct power and gentle loving pathos that it would be hard to match in the works of professional novelists.

The Ceramic Art: A Compendium of the History and Manufacture of Pottery and Porcelain, by Jennie J. Young, with 464 illustrations (Sampson Low and Co.), was originally designed for the American public, and some notice of this circumstance should, we think, have been given on the title-page. In the selection of examples for illustration—and we may at once say that the multifarious wood engravings are executed throughout with rare delicacy, beauty, and fidelity—the preference is avowedly given invariably to the examples in American collections, although it was found necessary to cull a few from the British and South Kensington Museums and other European sources. This, of course, limits the serviceableness of the book to the English amateur, but, on the other hand, it is interesting to the more advanced connoisseur to find how widely and worthily the ceramic art of the Old World is represented in the New; and it is also instructive in some instances for purposes of comparison. Moreover, owing to the book having been written by an American, we have a fuller account of the manufacture of pottery and porcelain in the United States than we had hitherto seen. The American manufacturer has unusual difficulties to contend against. With a high protective tariff, the home manufacturer is barely able to compete with the foreign producer in plain domestic wares. The import duty, while it tends to exclude the finer models of Europe, does not cover the greater expense of working in the United States. Yet the Americans have made considerable progress, particularly since the Civil War, and the manufactures of ordinary wares at Trenton, the "Staffordshire of America," the artistic productions of the "Etruria Pottery Company," the terra-cotta of Chelsea, and the porcelain of Greenpoint, as represented in the Philadelphia Exhibition, have evidently a fair future before them. It is not out of place to say that the great impetus given to the porcelain manufacture of England through the discovery of the kaolin of Cornwall by William Cookworthy of Plymouth, was probably brought about by an American having shown him samples of china-stone and kaolin from Virginia in 1745. Although there are some novel features in this book, it can hardly be expected that it will supersede the excellent similar works already published in England. Yet, on the whole, it is a very creditable performance, especially as regards its comprehensive scope and systematic arrangement. The aim of the authoress to solve problems in the "science of ceramics" is somewhat ambitious; and the explanations are not sufficiently rudimentary for an initiatory "compendium" or manual. In speaking of Sèvres porcelain, no mention is made of the colour "Rose du Barry;" no explanation is given of the discovery of the method (which so long remained a mystery) by which the decoration of the Henri Deux faïence was effected. Although the work does not profess to furnish the marks on pottery or porcelain, some of those used on nankeen blue-and-white china are given, but these do not include several of the marks held in highest estimation. Satsuma ware is represented to be older than is warrantable, at least as regards the best kinds; and so in other sections simplicity and desirable detail are apt to be sacrificed to questions touching chemical and mechanical processes or historical theories.

The Industrial Arts in Spain, by Juan F. Riaño (Chapman and Hall), is one of the excellent series of art-handbooks issued under the authority of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education, being reprints of the dissertations prefixed to the large catalogues of the South Kensington collections. It is worthy of the series to which it belongs, and the information it contains was less readily accessible. The Spanish—by which, of course, is to be understood, also, in large proportion, the Moorish—arts treated of, are work in the precious and other metals, including arms, furniture, ivories, pottery and porcelain, glass, textile fabrics, lace, &c. The lists of the sword-masters of Toledo, armourers, goldsmiths, potters, and other art-workmen much enhance the value of the handbook for reference. The numerous illustrative wood-engravings are not always worthy of the text. The author, Señor Riaño, of Madrid, is the same who compiled the serviceable Catalogue of Art-Objects of Spanish Production in the South Kensington Museum, issued in 1872.

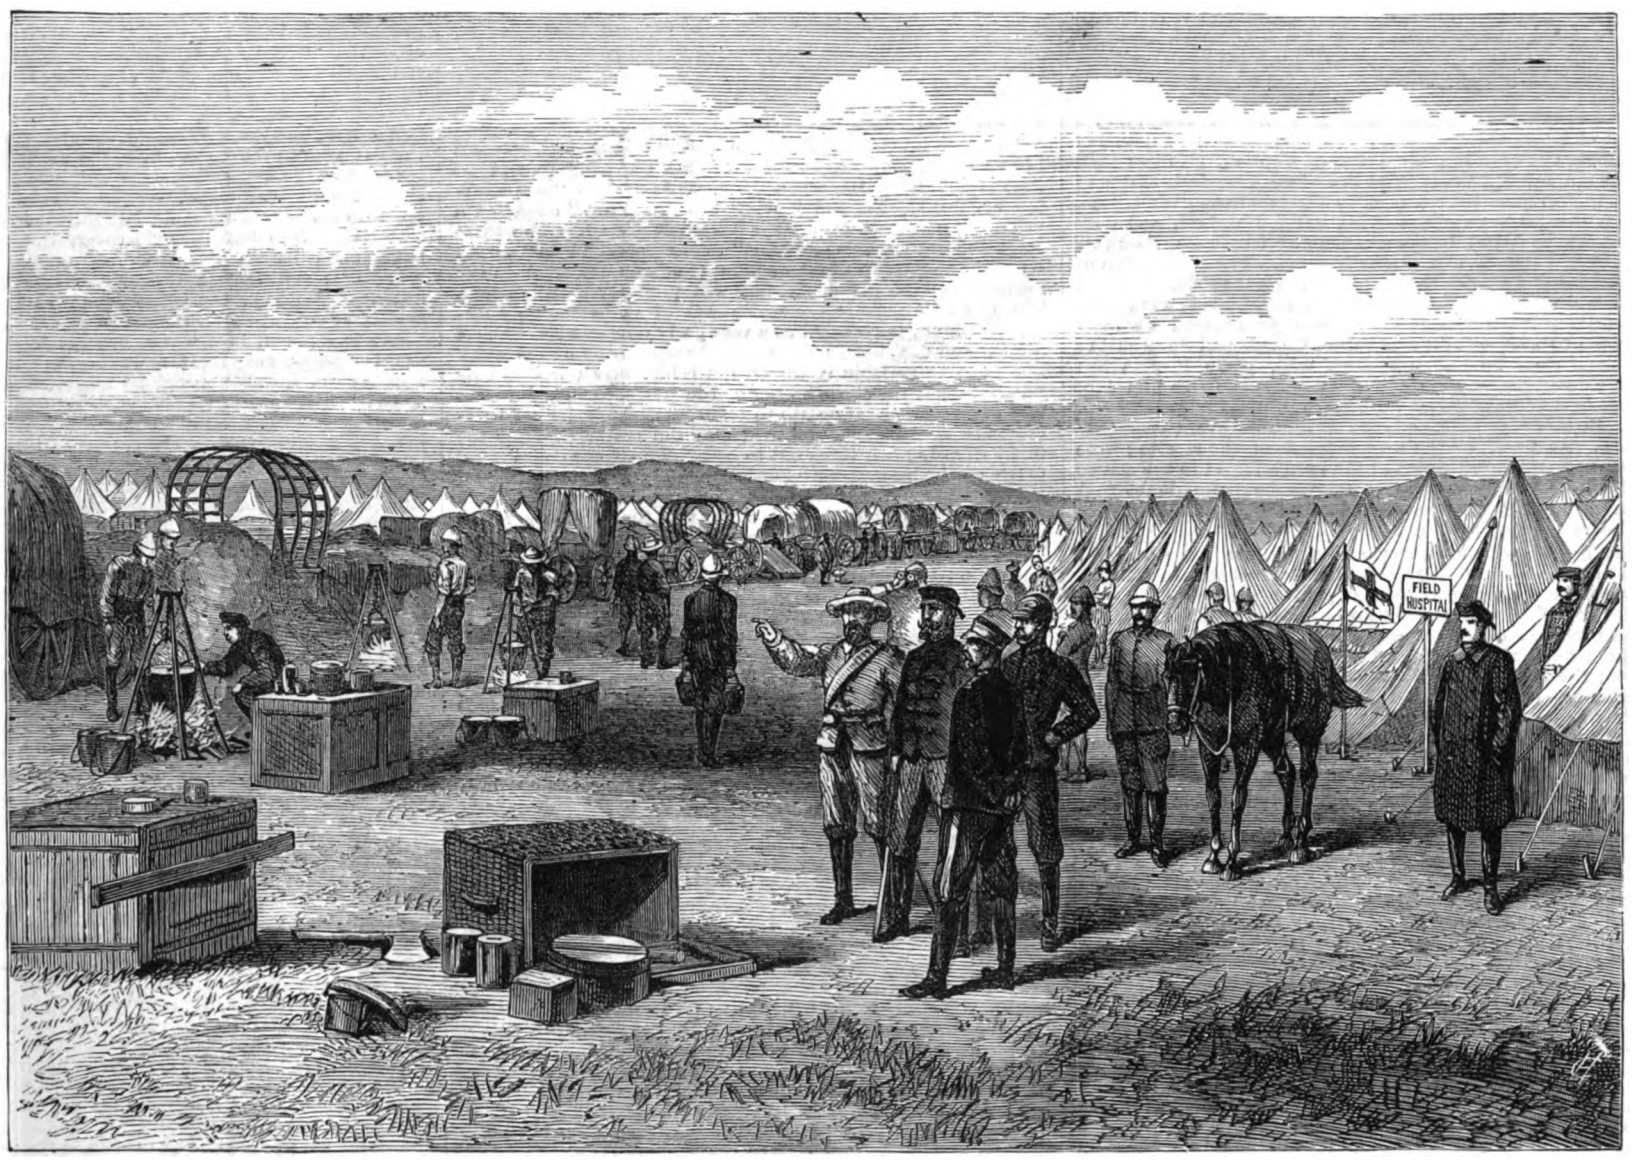
Glass. By Alexander Nesbitt, F.S.A. With numerous woodcuts. (Chapman and Hall). This is another of the same series of handbooks. Commencing with a full account of the composition of glass, the author proceeds to treat in a comprehensive manner, and with much learning and research, of its ancient or modern manufacture in Egypt, Phœnicia, Greece, the Roman Empire, Byzantium and the East, Italy, France, Spain, the Low Countries, Germany, the British Islands, and China. The chief defect of the book seems to be that the illustrative examples are drawn too exclusively from those at South Kensington, and no mention is made of some extraordinary ancient works in glass in the museums of Naples, Florence, Rome, and other parts of Italy. A chapter also ought, we think, to have been devoted to the modern revival of the glass manufacture at Murano and of enamelling at Paris—pointing out in what respects, artistically, the present Venetian products still fall short of the old. But artistic principles and their application do not form a strong point in this handbook.

The Amateur Pottery and Glass Painter. By E. C. Hancock. Illustrated. (Chapman and Hall.) This little book is more complete and practically instructive than most of those addressed to the amateur. It describes the colours, implements, and materials used, and the various processes and manipulations employed in the arts specified. Its information respecting the pigments should be trustworthy, as the writer belongs to the old-established firm of ceramic colour-makers at Worcester, a member of which mixed "bodies" and made colours for Wedgwood. Among the illustrations are a few facsimiles from the sketch-book of Mr. Westlake. A compendious treatise on pottery and porcelain, published by the Art-Department, is, by permission, reprinted as an appendix.

A new series of Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists is in course of publication by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. We have received six of the series, consisting of the life of Raphael, from the text of Passavent, by N. D'Anvers; of Titian, "from the most recent authorities," by Richard Ford Heath; of Rembrandt, from the text of C. Vosmaer, by John W. Mollett; of Vandyke and Frans Hals (in one volume), from the text of Dr. Lemcke and others; of Hans Holbein, from the text of Dr. Woltmann, by J. Cundall; and of Tintoretto, "from recent investigations," by W. Roscoe Osler. So many errors long current have been corrected by recent investigation, and so much new light has been thrown by the same means on the Old Masters, that the mere compilation of popular inexpensive digests of the results of the research lately published in various languages—to which alone this series pretends—cannot but prove acceptable. Hitherto however, a good idea has been worked out imperfectly. To say nothing of the demerit of many of the illustrations and the wretched binding, the shortness of the biographies, and the non-observance of any scale of relative importance, particularly as regards Raphael (who is dismissed in a small volume of 112 pages), render it impossible to carry out the promise of the scheme, by embodying all the fruits of recent inquiries, many of which of course relate to minute details, the statement and analysis of facts, and the balance of probabilities, still perhaps open to discussion. These biographies therefore—notably that of Raphael—will be found disappointing to the student, critic, and collector, and can only be recommended to the general reader. The qualification of some of the compilers may be inferred from the naïve admission made by Mr. Heath in his preface—viz., that he fancied he had collected almost enough materials before he began to read the "Life of Titian," by Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, and Mr. Gilbert's "Cadore!" Yet, to be just, Mr. Heath's epitome is fairly well done. The biography containing the greatest amount of information new to the reader of English only is probably that of Rembrandt.

It will suffice to announce the appearance of the second part of the "entirely new work" in course of publication by Messrs. Sotheran and Co., British Mezzotint Portraits, being a descriptive catalogue of these Engravings from the Introduction of the Art to the early part of the present century. Arranged according to the Engravers, the Inscriptions given at full length, and the Variations of State precisely set forth; accompanied by Biographical Notes, and Appendix of a Selection of the Prices produced at Public Sales by some of the specimens down to the present Time. By John Chaloner Smith, B.A. The work, which will be completed in four parts, uniform with Smith's "Catalogue Raisonné," is indispensable to the collector, and of the highest value for reference to all interested in English portraiture and the school of matchless engravers in mezzotint to which it gave rise.

The Westminster Industrial Exhibition, which still remains open, has been visited by upwards of 100,000 persons. The certificates of merit will be distributed this (Saturday) afternoon at three o'clock by the Hon. Mrs. J. G. Talbot, supported by the lady adjudicators. Next Monday, Aug. 4, Bank Holiday, it is intended to throw open the exhibition to the public from nine a.m. to ten p.m. at the reduced charge of 3d.



A meeting convened by the Anti-Flogging League was held on Tuesday evening at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, to protest against the continuance of flogging in the Army and Navy. Mr. A. J. Otway, M.P., presided, and among the speakers were several members of Parliament, including Messrs. T. Burt, T. Blake, Parnell, and A. M. Sullivan. Resolutions were adopted calling for the abolition of the cat.

THE ZULU WAR: HEAD-QUARTERS OF GENERAL LORD CHELMSFORD, ERZUNGAYAN CAMP.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, MR. MELTON PRIOR.

ZULU WAR ILLUSTRATIONS.

The concluding act of the war has perhaps been opened by Lord Chelmsford's important victory on the 4th ult. at Ulundi, the capital of Cetewayo's kingdom. Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, has furnished some interesting Sketches for the present Number. The interior of Major-General Newdigate's Camp at Erzungayan, with Lord Chelmsford's head-quarters there on June 16, is a business-like scene of the camping in Zululand. The Commander-in-Chief, with Major-Generals Newdigate and Marshall, stands listening to the report of a scout, one of the mounted colonial volunteer troopers, who has just come in from a ride around the outskirts of the Camp. It was in a skirmish near this place, on June 5, that the young Adjutant of the 17th Lancers, Frederick Cokayne Frith, was killed by a shot, as is shown in our front-page Illustration, falling from his horse, between Colonel Drury Lowe, who was at his right hand, and Mr. Francis, Special Correspondent of the Times, who rode on his left. He was not twenty-one years of age, and was a son of Major Cokayne Firth, of Dover.

The Zulu Ambassadors sent by Cetewayo to sue for peace were detained some days at Inodwengu Camp for the General's reply to their message. Our Artist had an opportunity of sketching the seated figures of these native dignitaries, Indunas or Councillors of State, and rulers of tribes or districts, folding themselves in their blankets, as they will do in presence of white men, though accustomed to be nearly naked among their own people. The almost nude figure squatting behind the nearest chief is only a servant. Their head-rings of stiffened and moulded hair betoken the respectable condition of husbands, each probably of several wives, and fathers of many children. Lord Chelmsford refused to hear of peace till the guns captured by the Zulus at Isandhlwana should be restored. On June 28, therefore, Cetewayo's messengers were sent back to him, with an intimation that the British force would advance to the river Umvolosi, a few miles from Ulundi, but would not cross that river till July 3, in order to give time for the guns to arrive, either with a Zulu regiment to lay down its arms, or with a thousand rifles to be given up. This was not done, and on the 4th, at six o'clock in the morning, the 2nd Division, under Major-General Newdigate, with the flying column of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, crossed the river and occupied a position between Inodwengu and Ulundi. Here it was attacked by a large Zulu army, which it resisted in the formation of a hollow square, with cavalry in the centre; till, the enemy giving way after half an hour's fruitless assault, the square opened and let out the cavalry, who charged the Zulu host in every direction, completely routing that large multitude of foes. An account of this battle was given in our last week's publication. The Daily Telegraph special correspondent, Dr. W. H. Russell, sends the following particulars:—

"The battle began at ten minutes to nine o'clock, the Zulus advancing silently and steadily from all sides. Our men were four deep, with the front rank kneeling, and the rear rank in reserve. The 90th, on the left flank of the square, were ordered to throw up shelter, which they did under fire, though not so effectively as was wished. At nine the firing became general. The noise was deafening; and the men behaved admirably. The artillery practice was excellent, and to this mainly is attributed the enemy's repulse. Gunner Morshead though wounded in the leg, crawled to the Gatling battery, and insisted on helping the Sergeant to fill the cartridge drums. As an instance of the intrepid manner in which the Zulus came to the attack, we counted only twenty-eight paces from the front square to the nearest dead. One Zulu came within thirty yards of the Gatling gun, and when retiring was shot. The King's regiment suffered heavily. Four regiments of the Amatongas took part in the action. The Zulus were commanded by Dabulamanzi on our right, and by Sirayo on our left. Dabulamanzi was under fire for a considerable time. Our staff was much exposed during the action, which lasted for forty minutes. The Lancers, whilst pursuing the enemy, did great execution with their lances; but the horses could not compete with the little ponies. James, of the Lancers, had a narrow escape. He charged two Zulus, and both turned upon him. One of his assailants threw an assegai and struck James's cross-belt, penetrated it, and inflicted a slight wound. After the pursuit the mounted men were sent to burn the kraals at Ulundi. Lord William Beresford was the first in, and has been gazetted in the force as 'Ulundi Beresford.' The King's kraal consists of a round belt of huts eight deep. The house is a thatched building, consisting of four rooms and a verandah. Nothing was found but some empty gin, beer, and champagne bottles, and four prisoners. It is stated that the King was present on a distant hill, with a regiment and a half. He believed that our men could not meet the Zulus in the open ground. The estimated Zulu loss is fifteen hundred."

THE LATE MR. CHARLES LANDSEER, R.A.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

The scene in camp at Landman's Drift, where General Newdigate, sitting in a camp-chair, with his lame right leg supported by a stool, interrogates a captured Zulu spy, brought in by Major Bengough's scouts, was sketched by our Special Artist at the time. He contributes also two additional Illustrations of the lamented death of the French Prince Imperial.

These are a pair of accurately-planned views—one looking west, the other looking east—of the place where Lieutenant Carey and the unfortunate Prince, with the six troopers and one native guide, dismounted to rest beside the stream, surrounded by the tall growth of "mealies" or native corn. The burning kraal, or hamlet of six huts, is shown at a little distance, and the donga, or dry ditch, towards which they fled when attacked by the Zulus, and in which the body of the Prince was found next morning.

A certain interest belongs also to the Sketch, furnished by Captain H. B. Laurence, of the 4th Regiment, showing a few cottages and huts at Utrecht, in the neighbouring district of the Transvaal. One of the farm-houses, indicated by a reference number, was the quarters of Colonel Bray, of the 4th, and contains the room occupied some days by the Prince Imperial. Another is the house which was occupied by Lord Chelmsford and his staff while at Utrecht. The house of the late Mr. Piet Uys, a well-known Dutch citizen and commandant of volunteers, who served with Brigadier-General Wood's force at Kambula Hill, and was killed on March 28, at the Zlobane mountain, is indicated in this view of Utrecht.

At Estcourt, in Natal, on his way from Maritzburg to the frontier, our Special Artist stopped at a farm-house which was converted into an inn, and there he saw three or four native servants employed in making bread for the 17th Lancers, who were expected next day. The farmer's wife and children, with an Indian coolie girl, nursing the baby, were looking on at the work of kneading the dough in large tubs. An officer stood by, whip in hand, but not with any intention of compelling the natives to industry by an application of the lash.

Our Extra Supplement next week is to be a large Engraving, drawn by our Special Artist, giving an extended view of the British troops occupying a Zulu military kraal, on their march to Ulundi.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Last week was not the first time that Huntingdon Races have had to be postponed owing to the course being under water; but such a thing has never previously happened at this time of year, and must be reckoned among the phenomena of this most watery summer. There was, therefore, no racing until the Thursday, when sport was provided both at Pontefract and Sandown Park. The northern fixture, at which capital fields contested each event, may be passed without comment; but Sandown demands a few lines. The Prince of Wales and a large number of the aristocracy were present on each day, and the racing was of a very high-class description. No less than fifteen ran for the Great Kingston Two-Year-Old Plate, in which the penalties proved fatal to Early Morn and Whitebine, though the former made a great bid for victory, and only just succumbed to Silverstreak, the finish between Fordham and Cannon being a remarkably fine one. The antagonism of Hackthorpe and Placida in the Gold Cup, on the Friday, excited very great interest. Lord Hastings's horse was in such brilliant form at Ascot that he was at once pronounced a worthy successor to such wonders as Prince Charlie and Springfield; but since then he has not done well, while Placida has improved rapidly, and she actually managed to give him 4 lb. and a half-length beating. Rob Roy ran well under 8 st. 12 lb. in the Royal Stakes, but he is too infirm to be ever thoroughly trained. As usual, all the arrangements of the meeting were perfect; several improvements have been effected in the course of the last few weeks, and there can be little doubt that Sandown Park will soon take one of the first places among the fixtures of the racing season.

The long-expected summer seems to have come at last; and at the time of writing there is every prospect that Goodwood will be "glorious" indeed in point of weather. Still, on the first day the meeting was by no means so brilliant as usual, a fact which is easily accounted for. Owing to the severe illness of the Countess of March, there is no party at Goodwood House; the Princess of Wales has not graced the meeting with her presence; and, on Tuesday at any rate, there was by no means the usual magnificent display of ladies' dresses. The racing itself was very fair, though we have undoubtedly seen better. Backers began badly by making Avontes a very hot favourite for the Craven Stakes, but the mile and a quarter seemed much too far for the Stockbridge winner, and Abbaye reversed much of her previous running by defeating Alchemist and Chios with scarcely an effort. The Stewards' Cup was set early in the day, and the thirty runners reached the post in excellent time, but then nearly half an hour was wasted before a start could be effected. Cradle (7 st. 3 lb.), who had been backed down to 5 to 1, began so badly that he never looked dangerous, and, at the distance, Lollypop (10 st.) was going so well that 2 to 1 was accepted about him. He tired, however, in the last hundred yards under his welter weight, and Peter (8 st.), soon getting the better of Vegetarian (7 st.), won cleverly by three parts of a length, rather more than that distance separating the last-named from Lollypop, while Placida (9 st. 5 lb.) and Stylites (6 st. 8 lb.) were close up. No three-year-old has ever previously carried such a weight as 8st. successfully in this race, and it is quite clear that Peter is fully as good as he was last season, while the frightfully heavy state of the ground may possibly account for his miserable exhibition at Ascot. Lollypop has now gained a place in this race three times, and his performance on Tuesday will rank as one of the finest in the history of handicaps. The Richmond Stakes proved a gift to the grand-looking Bend Or, who is a rare advertisement for Doncaster; and Mr. Crawfurd's pair made the pace so warm in the Gratwicke Stakes that the two roarers—Charibert and Reconciliation—was soon hopelessly out of the race.

In the Lennox Stakes on Wednesday the Stewards' Cup running of Lollypop and Placida was exactly confirmed, a desperate race between the pair resulting in the victory of the horse by a head. He was giving her 8 lb., and Hackthorpe, in receipt of 5 lb. from him, was beaten so far that he has evidently gone all to pieces. Ten ran for the Goodwood Stakes, and the easy victory of Bay Archer (6 st. 8 lb.) enabled Mr. Crawfurd to take the race for the third year in succession. Mistress of the Robes (7 st. 7 lb.) was second, and might have won, but for the penalty entailed by her success in the Cumberland Plate; and Roehampton (8 st. 12 lb.) ran exceedingly well to get a place under his heavy weight. Cradle (9 st. 2 lb.) partly atoned for his fiasco in the Steward's Cup by running away with the Drayton High-Weight Handicap; and America was once more to the front in the Lavant Stakes, in which Mr. Lorillard's Geraldine beat the speedy brother to Ersilia and five others. In the Sussex Stakes Bayon d'Or made such an example of Ruperra, Leap Year, and Exeter that he is sure to find plenty of backers for the St. Leger; and the hollow success of Douranee in the Finden Stakes was the last feature of interest in a capital day's racing. As was anticipated, Isonomy won the Goodwood Cup on Thursday, The Bear being second, and Parole third.

Our cricket records for the past few days are far more satisfactory than they have been previously this season, though, from the number of matches, they must necessarily be brief. A testimonial, amounting to about £1500, was presented to Mr. W. G. Grace, at Lord's, last week, when eleven cricketers of upwards of thirty played a team all of whom were under that age. Dr. E. M. Grace (40 and, not out, 33) was the top scorer on either side; and the seniors, for whom Mr. W. G. Grace bowled grandly, won by seven wickets. Lancashire, which is now undoubtedly the champion county, has beaten Gloucestershire in a single innings, with 49 runs to spare. Though no very large scores were made, eight of the Lancashire men got into double figures, and Mr. A. G. Steel and M'Intyre took nine and ten wickets respectively. Kent has beaten Yorkshire by seven runs, after a very hardly-fought contest. Mr. F. Penn (32 and 25) and Ulyett (22 and 43) were the chief run-getters. Surrey v. Somersetshire resulted in a draw, greatly in favour of the former county, for which Mr. J. Shuter (73) and Potter (105) batted in great form. The M.C.C. and Ground scored a very unexpected victory over Lancashire.

The race for the Wingfield Sculls, the holder of which is amateur champion for the year, took place last week over the usual course from Putney to Mortlake. C. J. Lowndes (Hertford College, Oxford) and C. G. White (London R.C.) were the two challengers, and a desperate race between them, in which they were as nearly as possible level at Chiswick church, resulted in the victory of the Oxonian. He was, therefore, entitled to meet F. L. Playford, the holder; but, contrary to the general expectation of a fine race, he could never even extend him, and was beaten by nearly two hundred yards, Playford, incomparably the finest amateur sculler that ever sat in a boat, thus winning the highest honours of the river for the fifth successive year.

On Saturday last the third annual swimming competition for the long-distance amateur championship of England took place, the course being from Westminster Bridge to Putney Bridge, a distance of between five and six miles. There were sixteen starters, but no one had the smallest chance against Horace Davenport (the holder), who won by no less than 5 min. 13 sec.; G. Spong was second, H. Simpson third, and H. M. Cottam fourth, the three last-mentioned men being very close together. As Davenport has now won the cup for three years in succession it has become his own property.

NOVELS.

Undoubtedly the course of our lives is very frequently affected by what happens among those who are complete strangers to us, and The Fallen Leaves, by Wilkie Collins (Chatto and Windus), is intended to show the readers of the three volumes how "a domestic misfortune falling on a household of strangers" at the time when the hero of the story "was wearing his first jacket and bowling his first hoop" exercised a powerful influence over his subsequent career. The three volumes form but a "first series," to be succeeded by a "second series," no doubt in the same number of volumes, wherein the narrative of the hero's fortunes will probably be completed. The domestic misfortune, which was of an exceedingly unpleasant kind, is revealed at a very early opportunity, when a mother and daughter, wife and child respectively of a wealthy but not very amiable stationer, are reluctantly permitted by paterfamilias, the stern keeper of the purse, to go upon what is apparently a pleasure-trip to Ramsgate. Appearances, however, are notoriously deceptive; and the real reason for the flight from London turns out to be a by no means unnatural desire on the part of both mother and daughter to hide from the stationer and the world in general that the father of a little girl thus clandestinely brought into the world is a young porter, in the stationer's employment, who is represented to have hit upon a cold-blooded and yet risky mode of forcing himself into the family as the stationer's son-in-law and into the business as the stationer's partner. He is wretch enough to carry off and dispose of his own child, whose ultimate discovery is the event which is to have the most serious influence upon the hero's vicissitudes. The lost little girl has no strawberry-mark as a means of identification, but she has in the conformation of her left foot a peculiarity, inherited from her mother, which is quite as efficacious as the time-honoured strawberry-mark; and, as the peculiarity can only be perceived when the foot is bare, the author has to invent a device whereby the hero can obtain a private view of two fair, bare feet—one the daughter's, and the other the mother's. As to the manner in which this little difficulty is overcome, it is probable that opinions will differ; some will pronounce it wholly good, some partially good; but all will agree that it enables the writer to display in the most agreeable fashion the most attractive characteristics of his style, his ingenuity, his premeditation, his mixture of irony, drollery, force, and pathos. The hero, when we first meet with him, appears as an impulsive, enthusiastic young gentleman, English by birth, but educated in America among Christian Socialists, endeavouring to put into practice what his education has led him to consider the preaching of the New Testament. Now any young man who, having such ideas in his head, falls in with a distressed young woman in one of the lowest haunts of London during the "small hours" and, being convinced that if he leaves her to return to what she is anything but pleased to call her home she will be brutally ill-used and perhaps murdered, determines on conscientious and evangelical grounds, to give her shelter until the morning in his own apartments—such a young man runs a risk not only of being utterly misunderstood by, and receiving early "warning" from, his landlady, who has "a character of lose," but of finding himself in a very awkward position as regards his friends, especially his betrothed, as regards the distressed young woman, and as regards the world in general. And novelists, as everybody must have remarked, nearly always employ the peculiar relations between the two sexes to illustrate the obstacles which lie in the way of young persons desirous of fulfilling the precepts of the New Testament. For this purpose they have generally to enlist in their service an extreme case, so that a Christian young man finds himself by the merest accident in haunts of misery, crime, and vice at an hour when nearly every other Christian young man would be sleeping the sleep of innocence in the most regular of homes. And it is scarcely necessary to add that from particular, extreme, exceptional cases, no general conclusion can fairly be drawn, so that nobody who is inclined to be a Christian Socialist has any reason to be deterred on account of anything which befel, or is hereafter to befal the hero of this novel. When we take leave of him, he has just been married to the distressed young woman, one of "the fallen leaves," whom he has rescued from a life of infamy, forced upon her by circumstances over which she was too young, too ignorant, and too feeble, both physically and mentally, to have any control; and we are led to believe that he is only just at the beginning of his troubles, that the "second series" will unfold the tale of suffering in store for a Christian young man who handicaps himself in the struggle with the world by contracting such a marriage. It will be seen that the author has touched pitch, but he has touched it with as little defilement as possible; indeed, with noticeable delicacy. His story is sometimes very interesting, sometimes very amusing, sometimes very affecting, sometimes very horrible, but, when most horrible, it is to be feared, most true. The amusing parts are performed chiefly by an American and a Frenchman, and they are both handled excellently. In the horrible portion there is, according to the practice of the day, a scene of delirium tremens, and the author's object appears to have been to out-Zola Zola. Fortunately he has not quite succeeded.

Singularity will be allowed to be one of the characteristics which distinguish The Ambassador Extraordinary (Richard Bentley and Son), of anonymous authorship, if it be mentioned that the three volumes contain between them as many as 150 chapters, fifty-three in the first, forty-eight in the second, forty-nine in the third. But, lest alarm should be created by this statement, let it forthwith be added that the pages are not correspondingly numerous—not much more numerous than usual—a chapter consisting occasionally of about a page and a half, and even of half a page, which looks curious. The author speaks, in the preface, of an "unambitious story;" but the three volumes can hardly be said to contain any story whatever, but rather a string of exceedingly short sketches, wherein are described, in somewhat rhapsodical style, enough to exhaust all the notes of exclamation in a well-supplied printing-office, many a phase of our many-sided life and many a character either purely imaginary, but natural withal, or formed, with enlargements and embellishments, upon some more or less familiar model. The "ambassador extraordinary" himself appeared to be a wholly mythical personage, recalling memories, with the necessary modifications, of "Asmodeus," or "the Devil on Two Sticks," or of him who, in Coleridge's poem, came forth one day "to visit his snug little farm, the earth, and see how the stock" got on. The "ambassador," in fact, seems to possess the faculty of ubiquity and of the "jack-in-the-box," so that he "assists," as the French would say, at nearly every scene described in the so-called "unambitious story." The object of the story, if story it may be termed, is beyond praise, being neither more nor less, if what has been read have been read with understanding, than a purpose of illustrating the power and blessedness of human love, the love which not only "ends in cradles," as one of the most charming and instructive characters in the book has it, but includes what is more commonly called charity. It is to be feared that the work is too much of a medley, has too little of constructive art about it, is too conspicuously wanting in plot, too desultory altogether, to take that tenacious hold of a reader which is frequently taken by a morally worthless romance; but, if it be read piecemeal and in a leisurely manner, it is not unlikely to make not only a favourable but also a deep impression. Sometimes, not to say nearly always, the author overdoes things; and, in the last volume, the scene in which the child is the chief speaker, and which might have been simple, pretty, and touching, is an instance of this overstraining, until p and b are not only interchangeable but interchanged, and pathos is transmuted into bathos. Moreover, the whole composition is pervaded by an affectation of mysterious, supernatural influences: and though expectation may at first be keenly awakened thereby, the effect soon wears off, when nothing particular occurs, and is succeeded by a sense of bewilderment. There is a puma, Lais by name, kept by the "ambassador" as other people keep a cat, and really, as she seems to be chiefly required for apostrophising, he might as well have kept the more domestic animal, whose motions and looks would have served the author almost equally well for descriptive purposes. Besides, readers are far more likely to know something about cats and to understand their habits; but, on the other hand, pumas certainly are more imposing and more suggestive of something tremendous in the future, even if the future remains unrevealed. There is also a human being who is a cause of some perplexity: he bears the title of Monsignore, and though from the sequel it is evident that he is at the time neither a Bishop nor a Cardinal, any priest, it is believed, may hold that title. However, suffice it to say that there is good reading to be found in many parts of the volumes, and that the opening chapters recall the descriptive manner—incisive, piquant, witty, and cynical—of him who wrote "The Member for Paris."

THEATRES.

Mr. Irving's annual benefit on Friday and Saturday, last week, attracted large and brilliant audiences to the Lyceum. When the third act of "Hamlet" had concluded on Friday, Mr. Irving came forward and delivered an address, retiring amid the hearty plaudits of the spectators. Miss Helen Terry and Mr. Forrester were called before the curtain to receive the gratulations of the audience. Mr. Irving's benefit was resumed the next evening, the last of the season, when he appeared as Eugene Aram and Jeremy Diddler, Miss Helen Terry taking the part of Ruth Meadows in "Eugene Aram." Mr. Irving was received with the utmost enthusiasm by a densely crowded house, and was repeatedly called before the curtain. In a few simple and cordial words he expressed his acknowledgment of the kindness which he had met with. He announced that the season had been a distinct success, and that since the opening, on Dec. 30, the large sum of £36,000 had been taken at the doors. Mr. Irving also stated that he intended to reopen the theatre on Saturday, Sept. 20. "The lesson I have learned (he continued) is that frequent change in a theatre is a desirable element—an element gratefully accepted by the public, and perhaps even more gratefully by the actors; and during the coming time I shall endeavour to put before you such pieces as I believe you desire, and which will give you pleasure. For a week or two after our opening we shall play 'Hamlet' once during the week, and that will be continued as long as you come to see it. That this is not a rash resolve you will believe when I tell you that during the past seven months we have acted 'Hamlet' 108 times, and each time to an overflowing house. During the first week of my campaign I shall present to you Colman's play of the 'Iron Chest,' in which I shall have the temerity to attempt a celebrated character of Edmund Kean's—Sir Edward Mortimer. This play I shall produce with much of the old music; and I shall try to show you what our forefathers delighted in. With this play I shall occasionally revive some of your old favourites, and the next novelty will be the 'Gamester,' in which Miss Ellen Terry and myself will have the honour of appearing before you as Mr. and Mrs. Beverley, who were also great favourites with our forefathers. To this I hope to add the 'Stranger,' and to give time for the preparation of one of our master's masterplays—'Coriolanus'—in the production of which I shall have the invaluable benefit of the research of that gifted painter Mr. Alma-Tadema. Of other kinds of works I have a store, and two original plays ready, one of which has already excited much interest—I mean Mr. Frank Marshall's drama founded on the romantic and pathetic story of Robert Emmet. Another is a play by Mr. Wills, based on the history of Rienzi." A supper was afterwards given to Mr. Irving.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed closed their season last Saturday, and go into the provinces to give a series of performances.

It is announced that Mr. R. D'Oyly Carte has assumed the sole management of the Opéra Comique. "H.M.S. Pinafore," with the original cast—which has now nearly reached its 400th performance at this theatre—is to be continued nightly.

This (Saturday) evening, Tom Taylor's drama "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" will be produced at the Adelphi.

Mr. George Buckland is appearing at the Polytechnic in a new entertainment written by Mr. F. C. Burnand, and in which Professor Pepper's Metempsychosis is introduced.

THE LATE MR. C. LANDSEER, R.A.

The funeral of this veteran artist, who held, during more than twenty years, the Keeper's office at the Royal Academy, took place in Highgate Cemetery on Saturday last. His more celebrated younger brother, the late Sir Edwin Landseer, who declined the Presidency of the Academy, quite overshadowed the reputation of Charles Landseer. But the latter was a good painter of English historical subjects; and, though he could not, like Sir Edwin, make dogs and deer more living in characteristic expression than the real animals, it is thought he could do horses nearly as well as Sir Edwin. He was almost eighty years of age. The surviving brother, Mr. Thomas Landseer, is an engraver, and is an Associate of the Royal Academy.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. C. Watkins, of Torriano-avenue, Camden-road.

Four miners have been fined at Barnsley for offences endangering lives in mines—one for injuring his safety-lamp, one for working without proper props, and two for carrying tobacco-pipes into a pit where a thousand men are employed and only safety-lamps are allowed.

The new bridge which spans the River Wear at Sunderland was last week tested in the presence of the Board of Trade inspector. Fourteen engines, weighing together upwards of five hundred tons, steamed conjointly across the bridge, which consists of a single span of 300 ft., at a clear height above high water of 80 ft. The bowstring girders are 42 ft. deep in the centre, and are supported by abutments.

EIGHT PER CENT RAILWAY DEBENTURES of £100 each for £90, redeemable at par by annual drawings. Interest payable half-yearly in London.

AN ENGLISH COMPANY has PURCHASED the well-known SAN PETE COAL-FIELD and the CHARTER and PROPERTY of the SAN PETE VALLEY RAILWAY, situated in Utah, U.S.A.
Estimated value of the Property, including the Railway about to be completed, £512,630.
This vast deposit of bituminous coal has been inspected and most favourably reported upon by Mr. Isaac Shone, C. and M.E., F.G.S., &c., Mayor of Wrexham, and Mineral Surveyor to the Duke of Westminster.
The titles to the properties have been examined and approved on behalf of the Company by eminent English and American counsel, and the Company's London solicitor has also visited the property.
The control of the management is in English hands.
Estimated annual earnings of the Company, £140,490, or more than seven times the amount required for the interest and sinking fund.
The fine climate, flourishing industry, large mineral and agricultural resources, and rapidly increasing population of Western America renders it an excellent field for safe and lucrative investment, provided that all operations are strictly controlled by English companies formed on a sound basis.

EXTRACT from the Governor's Message to the Legislative Assembly of Utah, 1878:—
"Already attention is being directed to the vast coal-fields of the San Pete County, where are to be found immense veins of bituminous coal of superior quality for coking and ordinary uses.
"The day appears not far distant when these mines will furnish fuel for the smelting of our ores, at a cost probably of one fourth the money now paid for Pennsylvanian coke."

EIGHT PER CENT RAILWAY DEBENTURES of £100 each, at £90.—Issue of £150,000 Eight per Cent First Mortgage Railway Debentures, secured on the SAN PETE VALLEY RAILROAD, and in addition on all the Freehold Lands and Property of the CENTRAL PACIFIC COAL and COKE COMPANY (Limited), in Bonds of £100; issue price, £90 each; redeemable at £100 by annual drawings, commencing in 1882. Interest payable half-yearly in London, by Coupons attached to the Debentures, holders having the right to exchange their Debentures into fully paid-up shares at par.

Payment in full may be made on allotment, from which date interest will accrue.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.
These Debenture Bonds will be a first mortgage upon the San Pete Valley Railway, and upon the whole of the Company's Freehold Property, consisting of 60,000 acres of coal lands, together with the buildings and plant thereon, valued at £312,630.
The San Pete Valley Railway, from the mines to the junction of the Utah Southern Railroad, will be 30 miles in length, and will connect the coal-mines and coke works with the entire railway system of the Western states. This will enable the coal and coke to be supplied to the numerous smelting and other works connected with the vast mining operations of the country.
These works consume large quantities of fuel, which is at present obtained mainly from Pennsylvania, a distance of 2,250 miles, at a freight cost of 25 dols. per ton, or from England at about the same rate; whereas the most important of these works are within 150 miles of the Company's property.
The estimated net earnings of the Company are as follows:—

From the San Pete Valley Railway	£24,850
From the sale of coal and coke	115,640
	£140,490

Whereas the interest and sinking fund upon these Debentures will together only require £19,500 per annum.
The capital now to be raised will be applied for the purposes of the Railway, and for completing and equipping the same, no promotion-money being paid.
Each Debenture will carry ten votes at the general meetings of the Company, and One Hundred Thousand Pounds of the Shares have been vested by the Vendors in the Trustees of the Debenture-holders until the completion of the contract, thus giving the Debenture-holders and their Trustees a majority of the votes.
Prospectuses, forms of application, maps, plans, and reports, and all further information may be obtained from the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company; and from Messrs. Walther and Co., No. 17, Charles-street, St. James's, S.W.
Applications for Debentures may be made in writing, in the following words:—
To the Directors of the Central Pacific Coal and Coke Company (Limited), Moorgate-street Chambers, London, E.C.
GENTLEMEN,—I request that you will allot to me Debentures of the above issue, in respect of which I undertake to pay £10 for every £100 of Debentures; and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any less amount that may be allotted to me, subject to the conditions contained in the prospectus dated 9th July, 1879. I enclose cheque for £ , being £5 on each Debenture applied for.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ABBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. PEEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

HOFF F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

In 1833 an eccentric person, calling himself Sir William Courtney, appeared at Canterbury and attracted much attention by his half-crazed appearance and his frequent harangues on the grievances of the poor. He presented himself as a candidate to represent the city of Canterbury in Parliament, but this ambition was frustrated by his being tried and found guilty of perjury, an offence he had committed on behalf of some smugglers on the Kentish coast. He was sentenced to imprisonment and transportation; but, being proved insane, the sentence was commuted, and he was confined in a lunatic asylum. Here he remained four years, and was then liberated under the belief that he was restored to a rational state He was, however, madder than ever, having while in confinement brooded over his supposed wrongs and the sufferings of the oppressed poor until he fancied himself a prophet and a deliverer sent from heaven. With the cunning of madness he counterfeited sanity, and thus was able to resume what he considered his prophetic mission. He harangued about the new poor law, promised cheap bread to all who would follow him, and on May 29, 1838, he gathered together a band of about twenty men, with whom he marched from one place to another, proclaiming that he would make May 29 more memorable than it ever had been in connection with the restoration of Charles II. This went on for a day or two, when a farmer, named Curtis, having his field-work stopped by the leading away of his men, went to a magistrate and obtained a warrant to apprehend them. In an attempt to execute this warrant a constable was killed by Courtney, who now broke into a rhapsody of exultation, declared that a second Gideon was come to slay the ungodly, and that all should perish who opposed the prophet. With outstretched sword he cried, "I am the only Saviour of you all. You need not fear, for I will bring you through all." Courtney had now proclaimed to his followers that he was no other than Jesus Christ returned to earth, and that they were safer with him than if they were in their beds; therefore they must resist the soldiers, and they were sure of victory. In the mean time a hundred men of the 45th Regiment, headed by Lieutenant Bennett, surrounded Bossenden Wood. Accompanied by the civil magistrates, they advanced to close round the rioters, when Courtney fired at the young Lieutenant commanding the party, and shot him dead. The next minute the prophet himself was slain by a soldier, who covered him with his musket as he fired at Lieutenant Bennett. Then ensued a hand-to-hand fight, which resulted in the death of seven of the rioters and one constable, besides several persons seriously wounded. The excitement had now become so general, and the menaces of Courtney and his armed party so alarming, that the magistrates resolved on the instant capture of this dangerous maniac and his ignorant followers. They came up with the rioters at a place called the Osier Bed, where Courtney's men threatened the magistrates and constables with bludgeons and fire-arms. After firing his pistol at one of the party who attempted to arrest him, Courtney and his men broke away to Bossenden Wood, and the magistrates, seeing no other resource, sent at once for a detachment of the 45th Regiment from Canterbury Barracks.

THE DREADFUL RIOT AND LOSS OF LIFE AT BOSSENDEN WOOD, EAST KENT.
From the "Weekly Chronicle," June 10, 1838.

The illustrations of these riots in the Weekly Chronicle June 10, 1838, consist of the following:—

1. "Courtney with his troops leaving Bossenden Farm."
2. "The death of Lieutenant Bennett. Courtney in the act of exhorting his men to advance."
3. "Interior of the Red Lion stables, with the bodies as they were laid out after the conflict."

Courtney, whose real name was John Thom, was undoubtedly mad. He never could have found followers, except among the most degraded and ignorant; and it is hoped he did better service to his countrymen than he ever dreamt of by drawing attention to the dreadful evils arising from the want of education among the rural population. Most of his followers could neither read nor write, and were so totally unacquainted with the simplest truths of Christianity that they believed him when he asserted that he was Gideon, Samson, and Jesus Christ all in one, and that he had descended from heaven to redress the wrongs of the poor, but more especially to reduce the price of bread!

THE REMOVAL AND DELIVERY OF THE REMAINS OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON BY THE GOVERNOR OF ST. HELENA TO THE PRINCE DE JOINVILLE, ON THE 16TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1840.
From the "Magnet," Jan. 11, 1841.

The Weekly Chronicle illustrated the coronation of Queen Victoria by a view of "The interior of the Abbey at the moment of Her Majesty assuming the Crown," and a full-page engraving of the Coronation Procession. Two pages of engravings were given on the occasion of the Queen's marriage; and on Nov. 1, 1841, a large "view of the Tower of London as it appeared on fire on the morning of Sunday, the 31st ult., from a drawing by a distinguished artist." On Jan. 29, 1842, the same paper illustrated the christening of the Prince of Wales, with its attendant ceremonies and festivities; and later in the same year were published the last of its illustrations, relating to the employment of women and children in coal mines.

The Observer, Bell's Life, and the Weekly Chronicle, which during more than twenty years had been the chief representatives of pictorial journalism, gradually abandoned the practice of giving illustrations after the Illustrated London News was established. Two or three other newspapers occasionally published engravings, but they were very few, and appeared at long intervals. The Sunday Times illustrated the trial of Thurtell for the murder of Mr. Weare, and on Nov. 2, 1834, it published several engravings of the destruction of the Houses of Parliament, two of which, representing the ruins, are of sufficient interest to introduce here.

The Champion of Nov. 13, 1836, has an engraving of the interior of a cotton factory; and the Weekly Herald in the same year issued two engravings illustrating the story of Wat Tyler:—"1. Workshop scene; Wat Tyler knocking the Tyrant Tax-gather's brains out;" the principal characters equipped in boots, buckles, and belts, in true theatrical style. 2. "Smithfield scene; the assassin Walworth treacherously murdering the brave, but too confiding, Wat Tyler." The same paper also issued this year a large view of St. Peter's, Rome. The Magnet, a paper started in 1837, illustrated the proclamation of Queen Victoria, William IV. lying in state, the Canadian Rebellion, burning of the Royal Exchange, Coronation of Queen Victoria, and on Jan. 4, 1841, the removal of the remains of Napoleon I. from St. Helena. There are two engravings of this interesting historical event. The first is entitled "A correct view, taken on the spot, of the interior of the Tent at St. Helena, after the disinterment of the body of Napoleon, at the instant of the removal of the lid from the coffin; the remains of the Emperor appearing (as one of the spectators remarked) "as if he were asleep." I have copied the second cut, which represents the embarkation of the body, and is one of the last examples of pictorial journalism before the birth of the Illustrated London News. M. J.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO GRIMSBY.

The promising commercial seaport of Great Grimsby, on the North Lincolnshire coast, has within thirty years been furnished, at a cost of nearly two millions sterling, with a series of commodious docks. These and other local improvements are mainly due to the Directors of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, whose former Chairman, the late Earl of Yarborough, had once, as Lord Worsley, sat in the House of Commons for this borough. The late Prince Consort, in April, 1849, laid the foundation stone of the Royal Dock; and in October, 1854, the Queen and her husband, with her three elder children, visited the place in the Royal yacht.

The Countess Dowager of Yarborough was last week the hostess of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales at her mansion of Brocklesby Hall, about ten miles from Grimsby. Her Ladyship was assisted in entertaining these illustrious guests by her son, the present Earl, who is not yet quite of age. The town of Grimsby was to be visited by the Prince and Princess upon a two-fold special occasion. Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., Chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, with which he has from the first been actively connected, had given a statue of the late Prince Consort. This was to be unveiled and made public by the hand of the Prince of Wales. There was also a new dock to be opened, the Union Dock, which the same railway company has constructed, at a cost of £258,000, to join the Royal Dock with the old dock of 1801. These docks, with two graving docks and those for fishing-vessels, excavated from the muddy south shore of the Humber, comprise altogether seventy-one acres of space; but a timber dock and others are now projected. The Albert Memorial statue will serve as a monument, not only of British loyal regard for the exemplary character of the Queen's lamented Consort, but likewise of the inauguration of the Grimsby Docks. It is a bronze figure, of heroic size, a replica of that which Mr. Theed designed for her Majesty to erect at Coburg. The Prince is represented in the Garter robes, standing with a sceptre in the left hand, pointing with his right to a scroll beneath. This statue has been erected by Sir E. Watkin, in a small ornamental garden, close to the Dock station for railway passengers, in Cleethorpe-road, in front of the Royal Hotel.

The Prince and Princess, with Lady Yarborough and other friends, came from Brocklesby Hall shortly after noon on Tuesday week. In spite of windy and rainy weather, Grimsby tried to be gay; flags were hung out to soak, if not to flutter, at the station, in the streets, and on masts of vessels in the docks. The Chairman and Directors of the railway, and the Mayor and Town Clerk of the town, met their Royal Highnesses on alighting from the train; also Mr. H. Smyth, Provincial Grand Master of Freemasons, who there presented an address. A procession of twenty carrriages went to the Old Dock, which has been re-named the Alexandra, in honour of the Princess. Their Royal Highnesses went on board the steam-boat Manchester, belonging to the railway company. Here the Mayor of Great Grimsby presented the address from its municipal body. The Prince replied handsomely, and the vessel passed, with a salute of guns and much cheering, through the Union Dock to the Royal Dock. So the Union Dock was opened. They landed on the east side of the Royal Dock, and walked to the statue, which was unveiled by the Prince drawing a cord and letting the curtain drop.

There was a luncheon, for three or four hundred guests of the railway company, in a beautiful tent, richly decorated and carpeted, behind the Royal Hotel. At table here, Sir E. Watkin, in the chair, had the Prince on his right hand and the Princess on his left. The toasts and speeches were of a gratifying character. The Prince, returning thanks when the company had drunk to the health of himself and of the Princess, proposed that of Sir E. Watkin, "the chairman of four great railways in this country, and connected with one across the Atlantic." The Earl of Yarborough spoke for his mother.

THE BROMPTON CONSUMPTION HOSPITAL.

Thirty-five years ago the late Prince Consort laid the foundation-stone of the first wing of that well-known building at Brompton, the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest. His son, the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Princess, has recently attended there to perform a similar act, which was recorded in our last. The new building, of which he laid the first stone on Thursday, the 17th ult., is to rise on the opposite site of the Fulham-road, but will be connected by an underground passage with the main hospital. Its designed front is shown in our Illustration; the architect is Mr. T. H. Wyatt. The governors, as was explained by Lord Derby, the president, and by Sir Philip Rose, the honorary secretary, have resolved to expend in this addition to the hospital a large amount of funded capital derived from recent gifts or bequests. Some of our readers may remember the strange history of the eccentric old maiden ladies who owned the shut-up houses at the corner of Stamford-street, Blackfriars. A hundred thousand pounds of the surviving sister's hoarded money was left to this deserving medical charity. Hence the projected "Extension," which will accommodate 137 additional in-patients, and will also comprise a much more convenient place than there is now for receiving the out-patients. It will further include a music-room for the entertainment of weary inmates who are shut up in the Hospital through the long winter months. The maintenance of this increased establishment when full of patients will add £10,000 a year to the ordinary expenditure, while the present income of the Hospital must be reduced by the loss of interest on the capital now to be used for building. Annual subscribers are, therefore, invited to furnish the needful support. This beneficent Institution, since 1844, has done good, or good has been attempted by its means, to 27,000 in-patients and nearly 250,000 out-patients. Consumption is the perilous malady that besets industrial life in London, and the Brompton Hospital is of peculiar service to contend with that sadly wasting disease.

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

The National Rifle Association meeting on Wimbledon-common was brought to a close on Monday. The prizes were presented to successful competitors in the different matches by her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught on Saturday evening. This ceremony took place on a platform in front of the Council Tent. The Duke and Duchess of Teck were present. Their Royal Highnesses were received by Earl and Countess Wharncliffe, and by the council and officers of the Association. The winning marksmen, or representatives of the winning teams, came up as they were called to receive their prizes. The Elcho Challenge Shield having been won by the London Scottish, one of their eight came to carry it off. They had made a score eleven points above that of the London Irish. The Ashburton Shield was won by Harrow School; and Private Foulkes, of that school, won the Spencer Cup. The last match, on Saturday, was between Hussars and Dragoon Guards; it was won by the 5th Dragoons.

The winner of the Queen's Prize of £250, with the gold medal and championship badge of the National Rifle Association, deserves to have his portrait in our Journal. He is Mr. George Taylor, a young Lancashire man, twenty-six years of age, living at the iron manufacturing town of St. Helen's, near Liverpool, and employed as a fitter in the Bold Ironworks. He has the rank of Corporal in the B company (Captain McTear's) of the 47th Lancashire Rifle Volunteers, to which he has belonged eight years. Sergeant F. J. West, of the same corps, was at Wimbledon with him; he and other Lancashire men, when the total scores of the different competitors were announced on Tuesday week, carried Taylor on their shoulders in triumph to the council-tent. The gold badge was there pinned to his sleeve by Lord Wharncliffe, the president, and he was chaired round the camp, with a band playing "See the Conquering Hero," and with frequent greetings and quaffings of the "loving cup." Corporal Taylor received due honours in his own county on his return to St. Helen's last Monday. The score he made was 83 in the total, nine points above any of the other shooters, and five more than the winning score of last year. He got 28 points scored at the 800 yards' range, 27 at the 900 yards', and 28 at the 1000 yards', winning a badge and prize in the first stage of the shooting, as well as the great prize of the year in its final result.

FINE ARTS.

The Exhibition of the Royal Academy has been open every evening this week from 7.30 to 10.30 at the charge of sixpence admission and sixpence catalogue; and it will also be open the whole of the Bank Holiday, Monday next, from 8 a.m. to 10.30 p.m., at the same charge. The exhibition will then close.

The Grosvenor Gallery was opened on Sunday evening last by permission of Sir Coutts Lindsay, under the auspices of the "Sunday Society," when there were 500 admissions. To-morrow (Sunday) the gallery will again be open free by tickets, obtainable by addressing a stamped envelope for reply to the secretary, 19, Charing-cross. A special catalogue is published by the society (price 4d.), to be obtained before Sunday, as no catalogues will then be sold. The gallery will also be open on Monday (Bank Holiday), and close for the season in the evening.—The ensuing Winter Exhibition at this gallery is to consist of water-colour drawings by living artists, the intention being to complete the series of exhibitions illustrative of the history of the art in this country. Unusual difficulties will attend the formation of this exhibition, competing, as it will do, with the exhibition of the two societies and the Dudley Gallery.

Owing to the necessity of making reparations to the roof, the pictures in the gallery of the Crystal Palace are about to be displaced. Artists may have their works returned by giving notice, or they may allow them to remain to be re-hung for the remainder of the season, and works will be received to replace those sold.

Maclise's large oil-picture, "The Marriage of Strongbow," which was recently sold at Messrs. Christie's for £750, was purchased by a distinguished patron of art, and has been presented to the National Gallery of Ireland.

Mrs. Butler (Miss Thompson, of the "Roll Call") has received commissions from the Queen to paint a representation of the defence of Rorke's Drift, and a picture portraying an incident in the late Afghan war.

An Art-Treasures Exhibition was opened on the 24th ult., at Darwen, by the Marquis of Hartington, who referred to the magnificent school in which they were assembled as a proof that voluntaryists, who had erected it and were anxious to have a school board formed, were themselves willing to make sacrifice for the object they had at heart. In the matter of art-education we had still much to do to overtake Continental countries, but he hoped that in time the speeches which had been made on this subject would bear fruit.

Mr. Martin Colnaghi, of the Haymarket, has published a reproduction in photo-gravure of the picture by Mr. George Earl of "The Polo Match." Irrespective of the interest of the picture to the Polo Club and its friends, and the admirers of the exciting and dangerous game, the process employed for its reproduction, of which this is the largest and best example we have seen in this country, is evidently destined to compete severely with the Woodbury type and similar English processes, and is well calculated to supersede engraving for many purposes, especially where autographic accuracy is desirable, as in the reproduction of works of art.

The first conversazione of the Institute of Art was held on Thursday week, at the gallery in Conduit-street. There was a fine collection of oil and water-colour paintings, painting on china, crewel-work, embroidery, lace, and other works of art executed by ladies. Mr. Pfoundes, who has recently returned from Japan, exhibited and explained his splendid collection of Japanese sketches and curiosities.

Signor Lombardi is exhibiting various samples of his Poikilographic Paintings—or, to speak more accurately, his transparent photographs with colouring applied at the back—in the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. We have already described the process. In principle it differs little from other processes invented in Germany and France. Very probably poikilography will prove popular, for many people will prefer coloured photography, however false in its application and destructive of the genuineness and value of photography. And it must be admitted that by this new process the mode in which the colour is added is much less objectionable than when it is applied to the face of the photograph; for, in the former case, the photograph remains intact, though modified necessarily without scientific accuracy analogous to that which renders photography invaluable for its veracity and trustworthiness; whilst in the latter case the photographic substratum is necessarily obscured, falsified, and destroyed. At the same time, the mischief is only one of degree. Photography and art are so essentially distinct that any attempt to unite the two is as illogical as it is tasteless. We observe that some of the examples at the Egyptian Hall are painted opaquely in front, and do not therefore carry out the process legitimately.

Mr. Eli Johnson has been commissioned to execute a bust of Mr. George Palmer, M.P., in marble.

The committee of the Professor Smyth Memorial Fund have commissioned Mr. Hooke, of Manchester, to paint a portrait of the late Professor Smyth, M.P., to be placed in the Magee College, Londonderry.

It is reported that the late Mr. Charles Landseer has left £10,000 to the Royal Academy. At the rate at which the Academy is receiving bequests, and reckoning also its other ordinary sources of income from admissions, &c., it must be the richest self-elective body in England, if we except some of the City Companies.

An influential committee has been formed to erect a statue to the memory of John Knox in Edinburgh. Strange to say, no monument or cenotaph has been hitherto raised to the great Reformer in the Northern capital. It is proposed that a suggestion of the late editor of Knox's works, Dr. David Laing, should be carried out, and for which Dr. Laing desired to contribute £100, viz.—that a statue of the Reformer should be erected in the open space of Parliament-square, near the spot where his remains were buried, and adjoining that church—St. Giles's Cathedral—in which he eloquently preached. Scotsmen in the colonies, India, and America are invited to contribute. The secretaries are James Meldrum, Esq., Raeburn House, 32, York-place, Edinburgh, and the Rev. Dr. Rogers, Grampian Lodge, Forest-hill, S.E.

It is proposed to hold an exhibition of ecclesiastical art in London (the Albert Hall being named for the purpose) during May and June, 1880. The exhibition will be open to British and foreign art, and will comprise a loan collection of mediæval and modern ecclesiastical art, a division for architects, artists, and others who exhibit original work, and another for works of manufacturers.

An exhibition of the national and colonial industry of Holland is opened at Arnheim, and will remain open till Oct. 15. Judging from photographs of the building and its arrangements, which include a Javanese orchestra contributed by a Javanese Prince, the exhibition should be highly attractive and instructive to all interested in the multifarious products and various peculiar industries and machinery of Holland and her great dependencies and colonies.

The three fine pictures by M. Alexandre Cabanal, which were last year at the Great Exhibition at Paris, have been placed in the left transept of the Church of Sainte Geneviève (Panthéon).

The French Government has purchased at the Salon this year sixty-three paintings and thirty-one works of sculpture. Among the best-known works bought are the "Naissance de Vénus," by Bouguereau; the "Emmurés de Carcassone," by J. P. Laurens; "L'Appel des Girondins," by F. Flameng; the large triptych of "Saint Cuthbert," by Greuse; "Etienne Marcel," by Mélingue; "Saint Isidor," by Merson; "Christ Mort," by Henner; and of sculpture, the "Génie Gardant le Secret de la Tombe," by Marceaux.

The French Water-Colour Exhibition has been so successfull that it is to be reopened in November.

The teaching of drawing in Paris as a national charge has been determined upon. 153 schools are to be established for boys, 38 for girls, 44 classes for adults—four schools for men and four for women. Lectures on Art are also to be supplied.

The Administration of the Fine Arts in Paris is about to have casts taken of all the Gallo-Roman monuments and other antiquities of this period that have been found in France, and that are preserved in the Cluny Museum.

The first prize of the Concours de Rome, which has just taken place at Paris, was, on Saturday last, awarded to M. Alfred Brantot, a pupil of M. Bouguereau.

Two hundred pounds damages were given yesterday week, at the Surrey Assizes, in an action for breach of promise of marriage brought by the daughter of a brewer at Gomershall against Mr. Charles Wright, who had assisted her father in his business. Lord Coleridge, in summing up, said that there did not appear to be any doubt that the defendant had made a promise of marriage to the plaintiff, and that he had broken that promise without any ground or cause.

Catherine Webster, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Thomas, at Richmond, was hanged on Tuesday in Wandsworth House of Correction. She had previously made a confession, in which she acknowledges that she alone was guilty of the crime, all the persons whom she had implicated in previous statements being entirely innocent. The murder, according to this last confession, was unpremeditated, and was committed during an altercation. It was only after she saw that the assault on her mistress had been fatal that the idea entered her mind to endeavour to get rid of the body.

The Extra Supplement.

"SPRING."

The tender prettiness of the Artist's fancy in this picture of a young girl, who has climbed by a ladder to act the part of kind foster-mother to the unfledged birdlings in their nest aloft, up the blossoming tree, cannot fail to please our lady friends and children. Mrs Staples has here done enough to recommend her own work in the esteem of a pure and gentle mind. It seems a truly graceful and feminine action that employs the adventurous maiden on her elevated perch. We may suppose that she has been told by her brothers, or by the gardener, how the parent birds were killed or driven from their nest; and she has resolved to supply the need of these little infant creatures with her own hand. It is to be hoped they will know their sweet benefactress as they grow up and learn to fly, and will often hover about her head, with grateful chirrup and twitter, as she strolls in her father's grounds.

THE SASSOON STATUE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES AT BOMBAY.

The eminent Jewish family and commercial firm of the Sassoons are well known in great trading cities, from Hong-Kong and Shanghai to London, Manchester, and Liverpool: but their home is Bombay, where the founder of their prosperity settled above forty years ago to open the trade of the Persian Gulf. That city has been endowed by the Sassoons with many public gifts—the Mechanics' Institute, the Reformatory and Industrial School, the Sassoon Dock, a Clock-tower in the Victoria Gardens, a marble Statue of the late Prince Consort, an Organ in the Townhall, and large donations to the Sailors' Home and to the Elphinstone High School. At Poona, in the Deccan, no great distance from Bombay, the Sassoon General Hospital, founded in 1863 by the late Mr. David Sassoon, is another monument of their open-handed benevolence. The knighthood conferred upon Sir Albert Sassoon in 1872, and the freedom of the city of London soon afterwards voted him at Guildhall, were honours that he personally deserved. His most recent act of munificence at Bombay was that of presenting to the city, at a cost of £10,000, Mr. J. E. Boehm's colossal equestrian statue of the Prince of Wales, as a memorial of the late visit of his Royal Highness to India. Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, who accompanied the tour of the Prince of Wales three or four years since, was again at Bombay, returning from the Afghan campaign, on June 26, when the commemorative statue was unveiled. The ceremony was performed by Sir Richard Temple, Governor of Bombay, in the presence of most of the principal European officials and other residents at Bombay, and the leading merchants and bankers, Jews, Christians, and Parsees. In the absence of Sir Albert Sassoon, his brother, Mr. Solomon David Sassoon, addressed the Governor, and invited him to unveil the statue. This was done by cutting a silk cord with a gold-handled knife. The design of the statue is quite familiar to us in Europe, since the plaster-cast was conspicuous in front of the Indian Court at the Paris Exhibition last year. It stands in bronze at Bombay upon a granite pedestal 14 ft. 6 in. high, the group of sculpture, horse and man, rising 12 ft. 6 in. from the pedestal. The site where it is erected is the open space at the south end of the Fort, at the top of the Apollo Pier-road, near the Dockyard and Sailors' Home. The scene at the unveiling ceremony was of an interesting character, but its pleasantness was marred by a violent rain-storm during nearly the whole time. Our Artist's Sketch shows the statue when Sir Richard Temple had just severed the cord and let the curtain fall. We have mentioned the Sassoon "General" Hospital at Poona, a merit of which, as likewise of the Elphinstone General Hospital at Bombay, is the equal admission of afflicted persons of all classes, races, and religions. An Illustration of this laudable spirit of true charity, which seems to belong to the Good Jew, as well as to the Good Samaritan and the Good Christian, is presented in our Artist's Second Sketch. It shows the medical and surgical gentlemen, in the out-patients' ward, or dispensary, attending freely to all, Hindoo or Mohammedan, or of whatever creed or nation, who come to seek the help of beneficent European science.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

We gave last week a summary of the proceedings of the season which closed on Saturday, and a few lines will now suffice to complete our record. To the brief notice then given of the special performance in aid of the sufferers by the inundations in Italy and the eruption of Mount Etna may now be added a word or two as to the details of the programme. These comprised the overture and the scene of the meeting of the cantons from "Guglielmo Tell" (with Signor Corsi as Arnoldo, Signor Vidal as Walter, and M. Maurel as Tell), the trio of doctors from "Crispino e la Comare" (supported by Signori Ciampi, Capponi, and Scolara), part of the third act of "Un Ballo in Maschera" (Amelia, Mdlle. Mantilla; Renato, M. Maurel), the scene in the palace from "Rigoletto" (Gilda, Mdlle. Valleria; the Duke, Signor Nouvelli; and Rigoletto, Signor Graziani), the fourth act of "La Favorita" (Leonora, Madame Scalchi, Fernando, Signor Gayarré, and Baldassare, Signor Silvestri); a Ballet Divertissement, supported by Mdlle. Zucchi and the Mdlles Renters; a part of the fourth act of "Faust" (with Signor I. Corsi as Faust, M. Gailhard as Mefistofele, and Signor Cotogni as Valentino), and the National Anthem. After the selection from "Guglielmo Tell" a piece composed by Madame Adelina Patti was performed by the orchestra and a supplemental military band placed on the stage. It was entitled "Fior di Primavera," and met with anything but a favourable reception. It is, indeed, nothing more than a trifling waltz of the most commonplace kind. Madame Patti will do well to limit her attention to that walk of executive art in which she has scarcely a rival.

Thursday week was appropriated to the benefit of Madame Patti, who repeated one of her most charming performances, as Rosina in "Il Barbiere," the cast of which was altogether similar to that of last month. The reception of Madame Patti—after some slight manifestation from a small (Italian?) clique at the beginning of the opera—was of the usual triumphant kind, including numerous recalls and bouquets. Her aria introduced in the Lesson-scene was the waltz from Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette," the encore of which was replied to by singing "Within a mile o' Edinbro' town," a second encore having been answered by giving "Home, sweet home."

The final performance of the season, on Saturday, consisted of "L'Etoile du Nord," Madame Patti having again sustained the principal character, that of Caterina, in which her brilliant vocalisation was admirably manifested. Indeed, the great vocalist has scarcely ever sung more finely than on the two occasions now referred to. The other principal characters on Saturday were efficiently sustained by Mdlle. Valleria (Prascovia), M. Maurel (Pietro), Signor Nouvelli (Danilowitz), Signor Ciampi (Gritzenko), and Signor Capponi (Rainaldo).

With the National Anthem, played after the opera, the house closed—to be reopened on Aug. 9 by Messrs. Gatti, for Promenade Concerts, with Mr. Arthur Sullivan and Mr. Alfred Cellier as conductors.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The production, for the first time in the new building, of Donizetti's "Linda di Chamouni," took place on Thursday week, when Madame Gerster sustained the character of the heroine with great success. Her exceptionally high range of voice, and brilliant and finished execution, were finely displayed in the bravura aria, "O luce di quest' anima" (encored); and in the duets with Linda's father, Antonio, her lover (Carlo); and Pierotto; the closing scene with Carlo having offered a special manifestation of Madame Gerster's cultivated vocalisation. Madame Trebelli's fine voice and good method gave great effect (as in past performances of the opera) to the music of Pierotto; Signor Gaslassi sang the music of Antonio with excellent dramatic feeling; Signor Frapolli was a very acceptable Carlo, and Herr Behrens gave the music of the Prefect impressively. This week was chiefly appropriated to benefits—that of Mdlle. Minnie Hauk having been announced for Monday (in "Carmen"), of Madame Gerster for Tuesday (in "Il Talismano"), of Signor Campanini on Wednesday (in "Aida"), and of Mr. Mapleson, the lessee, this (Saturday) evening, when the extra performances will terminate with the same opera.

Balfe's posthumous work was given on Tuesday, for the only time this season, and was received with the same special marks of favour as on its first production, in 1874, and in subsequent repetitions. The cast was nearly identical with that of last year; and Madame Gerster's brilliant singing as Edith Plantagenet again, as then, produced a great effect, as did the excellent performance of Madame Marie Roze as the Queen; the other principal characters having been efficiently filled, as before, by Signor Campanini (Sir Kenneth), Signor Galassi (Richard Cœur de Lion), and Signor Del Puente (Nectabanus); with Signori Rinaldini, Franceschi, Grazzi, and Pyatt in subordinate parts. All the popular pieces in the opera were received with great applause, several being encored.

Promenade concerts are also to be given at this theatre—commencing on Aug. 9—conducted by Signor Arditi.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A concert and operatic performances took place at St. George's Hall on Thursday week, when the medals and diplomas recently awarded to the students were distributed by Sir Julius Benedict. There were ten gold and fifty-two silver medals, besides three medals presented by the Society for the Encouragement of Arts.

The concert comprised some clever performances by Master T. Pearsall (violin), Misses E. K. Russell and F. Waud (pianoforte), and Misses Tiffin and Maclean (vocalists).

Then came Grisar's pretty operetta "The Disguise," in which Miss Rosa Leo, who was associated with Signor G. Garcia, manifested much talent, appearing quite at home on the boards.

In the version of "Le Maçon," an early opera by Auber, there is much pleasing and graceful music. The text has been well rendered into English by Mrs. Henry Wilde; and the performance was ably supported by Miss Webster, as the heroine, Henriette; Miss Carreras, as Irma; Miss M. Turner, as Zobeide; Mr. Burgon, as Usbeck; Mr. Bromell, as Rica; Mr. H. Kearton, as Roger; Mr. De Meric, as Léon de Merinville, and Mr. Isidore de Lara, as Baptiste—members of Signor Gustave Garcia's dramatic class. Dr. Wylde, the Principal of the college, conducted most efficiently.

The proceedings were of a most satisfactory kind, as exemplifying the progress of the students under the system of tuition pursued by the eminent professors at the London Academy of Music.

The Bank Holiday will be celebrated by a concert at the Royal Albert Hall, supported by several of the principal artists of Her Majesty's Theatre, with Sir J. Benedict as conductor. On the same day there will be musical performances at the Crystal Palace and the Alexandra Palace.

At a meeting of the committee of the Birmingham Triennial Musical Festival held last Saturday it was reported that the arrangements for the festival were in so forward a state as to leave no cause for anxiety regarding their completion by the appointed time. Herr Max Bruch and M. Saint-Saëns, the composers of the new cantatas, have undertaken to visit this country before the festival, so as to attend the rehearsals. Arrangements had been made with the following solo vocalists—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Etelka Gerster, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Maas, Mr. Santley, and Herr Henschel.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN AUGUST.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon and Jupiter rise nearly together on the evening of the 4th, and remain near each other throughout the night. From the time of Moon rising on the 7th she is near and to the left of Saturn throughout the night. She is also near to and on the left of Mars from the time of rising throughout the night. On the 18th she is near Mercury; on the 20th she is near Venus; and on the 31st a second time near Jupiter, being to the right of the planet in the early evening hours; the nearest approach will be about 10h, when the planet will be a little south of the Moon, and after this time the Moon will move to the left of the planet. She is nearest the Earth on the 22nd, and at her greatest distance on the 9th. Her phases or times of change are:—

Full Moon	on the	2nd	at 12 minutes	after	7h.	in the morning.
Last Quarter	,,	10th	,, 9	,,	2	,, morning.
New Moon	,,	17th	,, 11	,,	8	,, afternoon.
First Quarter	,,	24th	,, 12	,,	3	,, afternoon.
Full Moon	,,	31st	,, 58	,,	6	,, afternoon.

Mercury is badly situated for observation. He sets on the 4th at 8h. 16m., or 35 minutes after the Sun; and on the 15th Mercury and the Sun set nearly together; and from this time to Oct. 2 he sets in daylight. On the 25th the Sun and Mercury rise nearly at the same time; and on the 29th the planet rises about 41 minutes before the Sun. He is stationary among the stars on the 9th, near the Moon on the 18th, and in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 24th.

Venus is an evening star, setting on the 1st at 9h. 4m., or 1h. 18m. after the Sun; this interval decreases to 1h. 3m. by the 9th, to 41 minutes by the 19th, and to 16 minutes by the 29th, on which day she sets at 7h. 9m. p.m. She is at her greatest brilliancy on the 19th, near the Moon on the 20th, and stationary among the stars on the last day of the month.

Mars rises on the 8th at 10h. 15m. p.m., on the 18th at 9h. 47m. p.m., and on the 28th at 9h. 18m. p.m., and is visible afterwards throughout the night. He is near the Moon on the 9th; he is due south on the 1st at 5h. 37m. a.m., on the 15th at 5h. 12m. a.m., and on the last day at 4h. 38m. a.m.

Jupiter rises on the 8th at 8h. 23m. p.m., or 49 minutes after the Sun; on the 18th at 7h. 42m. p.m.; and on the last day he rises very nearly at the same time as the Sun sets, and from this day he rises in daylight, or before the Sun sets. He is near the Moon on the 4th, and again on the last day, and in opposition to the Sun on the last day. He is due south on the 1st at 2h. 16m. a.m., on the 15th at 1h. 15m. a.m., and on the last day at 0h 5m. a.m.

Saturn rises on the 8th at 9h. 29m. p.m., on the 18th at 8h. 49m. p.m., on the 28th at 8h. 9m p.m., or 1h. 14m. after sunset, and is visible throughout the night after these times. He is near the Moon on the 7th. He is due south on the 1st at 4h. 24m. a.m., on the 15th at 3h. 29m. a.m., and on the last day at 2h. 23m. a.m.

OBITUARY.

SIR C. T. STYLE, BART.

Sir Thomas Charles Style, eighth Baronet, died on the 23rd ult. at his residence, 102, Sydney-place, Bath. He was born Aug. 23, 1797, the second son of Sir Charles Style, sixth Baronet, by Camilla, his wife, eldest daughter of James Whatman, Esq., of Vinters, Kent, and succeeded to the title at the decease of his brother, Sir Thomas, the seventh Baronet, in November, 1813. He married, in 1822, Isabella, daughter of Sir George Cayley, Baronet, of Brompton County, York, and had a daughter, Emma, who died in August, 1834. Sir Charles was a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Donegal, and served as High Sheriff in 1824. In 1837 he was returned to Parliament by Scarborough, and retired in 1841. In politics he was a stanch Liberal, and was always ready to take part in the political contests of Bath, in which city he had been for the last nineteen years a constant resident. This family was descended from Sir John Style, an eminent diplomatist in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII., whose son, Sir Humphrey Style, was Sheriff of Kent in the thirty-fifth of Henry VIII., and whose great-grandson, Thomas Style, Esq., of Wateringbury, Kent, was created a Baron April 21, 1627, by King Charles I. By his decease without issue, the baronetcy, created in 1627, devolves on his cousin, now Sir William Henry Marsham Style, ninth Baronet, of Glenmore, county Donegal, J.P. and D.L., who is married to the Hon. Rosamond Marian, daughter of the late Lord Tredegar.

THE DOWAGER LADY CARRINGTON.

The Right Honourable Charlotte Augusta Annabella, Dowager Lady Carrington, died on the 26th ult. at her residence in Berkeley-square. Her Ladyship, who was born in 1815, was the youngest daughter of Peter Robert, nineteenth Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and second Lord Gwydyr, by the Hon. Clementina Sarah Drummond, his wife, daughter and sole heiress of James, first Lord Perth, and was consequently sister of the late Lord Willoughby de Eresby. At that nobleman's decease the very ancient title of Willoughby de Eresby, the sixth on the roll of baronies, fell into abeyance between his sisters, the Dowager Lady Aveland and the Dowager Lady Carrington, the lady whose death we record; and it so remained until called out in 1871, in favour of the elder, who is now Baroness de Eresby in her own right. Lady Carrington was married, as his second wife, Aug. 10, 1840, to Robert John, second Lord Carrington, by whom she was mother of the present Lord Carrington; of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon W. H. P. Carington, M.P.; of the Hon. R. C. G. Carington, Grenadier Guards; of the Hon. Mrs. Campbell, of Blythswood, and of Lady Petersham.

LORD JERVISWOODE.

The Hon. Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswoode, late one of the Lords Justiciaries of the Court of Session in Scotland, died at his residence, Dryburgh House, near St. Boswell's, on the 23rd ult. He was born Nov. 3, 1804, the second son of George Baillie, Esq., of Mellerstain and Jerviswoode, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Sir James Pringle, Bart., of Stichill, and was brother of George Baillie Hamilton, who succeeded to the Earldom of Haddington in 1858. Lord Jerviswoode was called to the Scottish Bar in 1830, and held the post of Advocate Depute in 1844, 1846, and 1852. In 1853 he became Sheriff of Stirlingshire, in 1858 was appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland, and in the same year was advanced to be Lord Advocate. In 1859 he sat in Parliament as Member for Linlithgowshire for a few months, until constituted a Judge of the Court of Session in Scotland, when he took the title of Lord Jerviswoode. In 1862 he was advanced to be a Lord Justiciary, and retired on a pension in 1874. In 1859 he had been given the rank of an Earl's younger son. Lord Jerviswoode married, Dec. 27, 1831, Anne, third daughter of Hugh, Lord Polwarth, and leaves one son and two daughters.

HON. E. V. WYATT-EDGELL.

The Hon. Edmund Verney Wyatt-Edgell, of Stanford Hall, in the county of Leicester, Captain 17th Lancers, was killed in action, near Ulundi, aged thirty-three. He was the eldest son of the Rev. Edgell Wyatt-Edgell and the Baroness Braye. It was only on May 13 last that by the death of his aunt, the Hon. Maria Otway Cave, the abeyance of the ancient barony of Braye was terminated, and that the gallant officer whose death we record became heir-apparent to that title (now held by his mother), and possessor of the family estate at Stanford Hall. He was born Aug. 16, 1845, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and entered the 17th Lancers in 1866. He had just qualified himself for admission to the Staff College when, the war breaking out in Afghanistan, he volunteered for service there, but his offer was not accepted. Soon after, his regiment being ordered to Zululand, he proceeded to South Africa, and met a soldier's death at the head of his troop near Ulundi. His only surviving brother, the Hon. Alfred Thomas Townshend Wyatt-Edgell becomes heir-apparent of the barony of Braye.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Vice-Admiral Henry Story, on the 22nd ult., at Avranches.

John Henry Heigham, J.P. and D.L., Esq., of Hunston Hall, Suffolk, on the 22nd ult.

The Rev. Wareyn William Darby, Rector of Shottisham, Suffolk, on the 21st ult., at Torquay, aged thirty-eight.

Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Campbell Garden, Bengal Infantry, June 20, at Barrackpore, aged forty-two.

Jane Constance, Lady Parker, wife of Sir William Biddulph Parker, Bart., of Shenstone Lodge, Lichfield, on the 20th ult., at Belmont Castle, Perthshire. Her Ladyship was the only daughter of the late Sir Theophilus Biddulph, Bart., and was married to Sir William in 1855.

Jane Bottral, Lady Jephson, wife of Sir James Saumarez Jephson, Bart., Commander R.N., on the 20th ult., at Albany Villas, West Brighton, aged sixty-five. Lady Jephson was twice married—first to Dr. Perstow, 13th Dragoons; and secondly, in 1871, to Sir James Jephson.

Major the Hon. R. Hare, R.A., at Boulogne-sur-Mer, aged forty-one, unmarried. He was the third son of William, second Earl of Listowel, by Maria Augusta, his wife, daughter of the late Vice-Admiral William Windham, of Felbrigge Hall, Norfolk, and widow of George T. Wyndham, Esq., of Cromer Hall, Norfolk.

Mr. James Spowers, one of the proprietors and also the general manager of the Melbourne Argus. The Argus says:—

"Although Mr. Spowers did not become an actual proprietor of the paper until the death of Mr. Allan Spowers, in 1877, and did not assume the general managership until the beginning of 1878, he had acted as his brother's representative for many years. During his connection with the paper he had gained, not merely the respect and esteem, but the affection of every one in the establishment."

General Richard John Stotherd, Senior Colonel Commandant Royal Engineers, on the 24th ult., at Alma Villa, Southsea, aged eighty-two. He was son of Colonel Stotherd, of Fulbridge, Maldon, and was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He was many years employed on the Ordnance Survey, Ireland, and afterwards as instructor at Woolwich, and became full General in 1872.

John Sharp, Esq., on the 19th ult., at The Hermitage, near Lancaster. He was eldest son of the late William Sharp, Esq., J.P., of Linden Hall, Lancashire, by Jane, his wife, only child of William Taylor, Esq., of Borwick Lodge, by Jane, his wife, daughter and coheir of Henry Parkinson, Esq., of Woodacre Hall. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Brown, Esq., and leaves five sons and one daughter.

Maria Elizabeth Lady Pilkington, at her residence, Catsfield Place, Sussex, on the 25th ult., aged ninety-three. This lady was the only daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Vicary Gibbs, by his wife, Frances Cerjat Kenneth Mackenzie, of Seaforth, and sister of Francis, late Lord Seaforth. Lady Pilkington married, in 1808, General Sir Andrew Pilkington, K.C.B., who died in 1853. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. Burrell Hayley and Mrs. Lee.

Sir Edward Deas Thomson, K.C.M.G., C.B., who emigrated to New South Wales in 1828, and filled many important public offices in that colony. He had been a member of the Legislative Council since 1837, and was Vice-President of that body in 1856-7. From 1837 to 1856 he was Colonial Secretary and Registrar of Records for the colony. He was appointed a member of the Senate of the Sydney University in 1850, Vice-Chancellor in 1862, and Chancellor in 1865.

John Berney Ladbrooke, Esq., a landscape-painter of the Norwich school, whose works are well known in his own county. The deceased was born in 1803, and was a son of Robert Ladbrooke, painter and drawing-master, of Norwich, and a nephew of John Crome ("Old Crome"), whose pupil he became after having received rudimentary instructions from his father, and whose influence was to be traced in many of his pictures. He excelled in the representation of woodland scenery.

John Thomas Lowe, Esq., her Britannic Majesty's Consul, at the Consulate, Civita Vecchia, Italy, on the 16th ult. The deceased gentleman was twice married—first, to Janet (Jessie), fourth daughter of the late William Macbean, Esq., of Leghorn, Italy, by whom he had five sons and one daughter, of whom four sons survive. His second wife, who survives him, is Susanna Laura, eldest daughter of the late Colonel William George Beck, K.L.S., of Overton-road, Brixton, by whom he had one daughter, who died in infancy.

Jeffry Francis Prendergast, Esq., of the Villa Bianca, Bath, on the 22nd ult., at his residence on Bathwick-hill, in his eighty-first year. He was eldest son of the late Francis Prendergast, Esq., of Dublin, Registrar of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, and nephew of General Sir Jeffry Prendergast, H.E.I.C.S., descended from a younger branch of the ancient family of Prendergast, of Newcastle, in the county of Tipperary, represented in the senior line by Viscount Gort. Of Mr. Prendergast's half-brothers, the eldest, John P. Prendergast, of the Irish Bar, is the well-known and able author of the "Cromwellian Settlement."

Vice-Admiral Henry Alexander Story, in his sixty-seventh year. He entered the Royal Naval College in December, 1826, embarked in December, 1828, as midshipman on board the Madagascar in the Mediterranean, served afterwards in the West Indies and in the Mediterranean, and in 1839, as Lieutenant, was appointed to the Druid, from which ship, after participating in the earlier operations of the war in China, he was invalided early in 1841. He was advanced to the rank of Commander Nov. 9, 1846; was Inspecting-Commander in the Coastguard at Dartmouth from February, 1850, until August, 1854; and subsequently served in the Baltic until the close of the Russian war. He became retired Captain in 1864, Rear-Admiral in 1873, and Vice-Admiral in 1878.

The Hon. Captain William Langdon, R.N., in Tasmania, on May 23, at the age of eighty-eight years. For nearly fifty years he was a resident in the colony of Tasmania, where he held considerable property, partly granted by Government for his naval services. He was a member of the Legislative Council. He held his commission as a naval officer under four Sovereigns, having entered the Royal Navy in 1803, at the age of twelve years. He fought in several actions of the old French and American wars, and was wounded at Corunna in 1809. Captain Langdon's eldest daughter is the present Dowager Lady Roberts; and his youngest son, Lieutenant F. G. C. Langdon, R.N., is now serving in her Majesty's ship Pegasus, on the China station.

The polling at Ennis took place on Saturday, and resulted in the return of Mr. Finegan by a small majority. The numbers were:—Finegan (Nationalist), 83; O'Brien (Home Ruler), 77; Wilson Fitzgerald (Conservative), 54.

Admiral Farquhar distributed the prizes won by cadets on board the Britannia, at Dartmouth, on Thursday week, when the Midsummer term of instruction was brought to a close. Princes Albert Victor and George are two of the cadets who have satisfactorily passed their examination, and leave the ship.

The Northumberland Agricultural Society's Show was held at Berwick on Thursday week, and was a great success, about 15,000 persons being present, including the Duke of Bedford, Earl Percy, M.P., Sir Matthew White Ridley, M.P., Sir D. C. Marjoribanks, M.P., Captain Milne Holme, M.P., the Sheriff of Northumberland, and the Mayor of Berwick. The entries, which numbered over a thousand, included many of the shorthorn cattle present at the Royal Agricultural Show. In sheep, Miss Stark Millenchan, Kelso, with her border Leicesters, beat the prize-winners at the Royal Agricultural Show, belonging to Mr. Tweedie, Forest Catterick. In the Cheviots, Mr. Elliot Hindhope, Jedburgh, carried all before him. There was a large show of implements.

The report in connection with the Nightingale Fund for the year 1878 states that twenty-four probationer-nurses had completed their training in the school at St. Thomas's Hospital and received appointments. Independently of these, there were thirty nurses remaining in the school. The general course of training included a series of lectures on medical subjects by Dr. Bristowe, F.R.S., and a series of lectures by Dr. Bernays on elementary chemical subjects. Mr. Crofts gave clinical lectures, special demonstrations on bandaging, and lectures on anatomy. The probationers' powers were tested at the bedside, and once a month they had to record a detailed account of their day's work. The balance-sheet shows that after meeting the year's expenses a sum of £1486 9s. 10d. remained to the credit of the fund.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

G W M (Manchester).—Your last problem in two moves with the B at K R sq and the Knight's Pawn unmoved is an impossible position.

E M (Engelberg).—See the note to No. 1848 below. If you should have a tedious quarter of an hour on your travels that problem may still serve to beguile it.

J H (Barnsley).—It is not necessary to send a diagram of the problem with the solution. Yours of No. 1847 is wrong.

E T (Bath).—Thanks for your obliging letter.

Paolo Bel.—Copies of Mr. Gossip's book can be obtained only from the Rev. C. E. Ranken, St. Ronan's, Malvern. We do not know the price.

S J A R (Battersea).—Perhaps the notice given below may have the desired effect.

C S C (Worthing).—If you desire the game to be examined you must adhere to the notation in common use. Yours is not new, it is newfangled.

D W K (Dieppe).—End games are not suitable to this column, and yours is not original. Compare it with the following:—White: K at K R sq; B at K B sq. Black: K at K Kt sq; Rooks at K Kt 2nd and Q Kt 7th. The positions are precisely the same; but Black can win with or without the move. There is no draw by the stalemate or perpetual check, as you suppose, if Black play the King across to Q Kt 2nd.

M O'H (Dublin).—You will find the information you require about London Chess Clubs in "Dickens's Dictionary of London," which can be obtained through any bookseller. Thanks for the old copy of the Madras paper; it is very interesting.

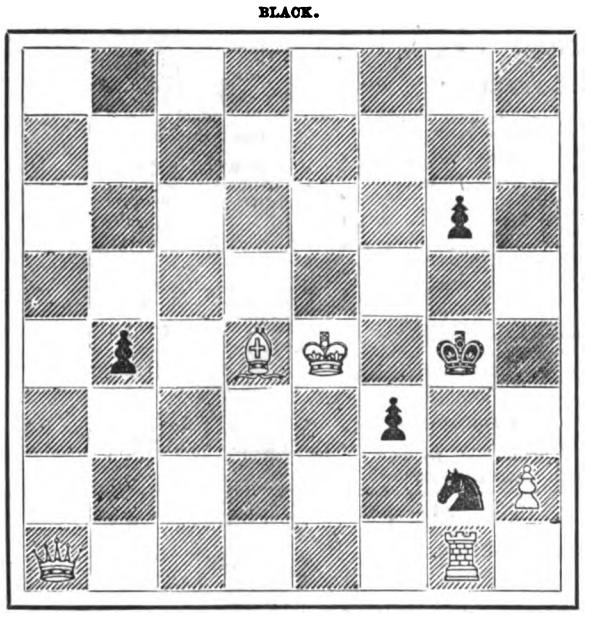
Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1848 received from W S Leest, Julia Short, W Leeson, C E, Norman Rumbelow, Lulu, Alfyn, Helen Lee, C S Coxe, F R Jeffrey, H Barrett, G L Mayne, D W Kell, R Ingersoll, H Langford, E Elsbury, T Greenbank, S Farrant, S Western, M O'Halloran, G Fosbrooke, D Templeton, R Arnold, B L Dyke, A Tremaine, Kitten, R Turner, N Cator, L Sharswood, W Warren, Ben Nevis, R Gray, Little Woman in White, T Barrington, An Old Hand, T Story, Hereward, Alpha, W S B, J W W, J A Brown, Ryecroft, P le Page, Copiapino, and L S D.

Note.—This difficult problem has baffled the efforts of a large number of our regular solvers from whom we have received proposed solutions by way of 1. Kt to Q 4th and 1. Kt to Q 8th. They all overlook, however, that B ack has a good reply to either of these moves in 1. K to K 5th. The answer to 1. Kt to Q B 7th (ch), is 1. Kt takes Kt; and if White play 1. K takes Kt, Black's defences are too numerous for special mention.



Solution of Problem No. 1847.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Q 7th	Any move.
2. Mates accordingly.

By Moz (Manchester).

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game played at Simpson's Divan between the Rev. G. A. Macdonnell and Mr. Blackburne.

(King's Bishop's Pawn Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
1. P to K B 4th	P to K 4th
2. P takes P	P to Q 3rd
3. P takes P	B takes P
4. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
5. P to Q 3rd

The best continuation here is 5. P to Q 4th, a move that is equally effective if Black play the Kt to B 3rd on the fourth move.

5.	Kt to Kt 5th
6. B to Kt 5th	P to K B 3rd
7. B to B sq	Kt to B 3rd
8. Kt to B 3rd	B to K B 4th
9. P to K 3rd

The timidity implied in this move is by no means characteristic of White's play. The Pawn might have been advanced to Q 4th with advantage.

9.	Q to K 2nd
10. Q to K 2nd	Castles Q R
11. B to Q 2nd	K R to K sq

The weakness of White's ninth move is now apparent, for Black has gained valuable time while developing this assault upon the King's Pawn.

12. P to K 4th	Q to B 2nd
13. Castles

He had an alternative move here in 13. Kt to Q sq, and, although it is a strategic movement to the rear, it appears to be safer then castling.

13.	B to Q B 4th
14. B to K sq	Kt to K 6th

Black has prepared the ground for this combination with great skill and foresight. Should White now capture the Bishop, there follows:—

15.	Kt takes P (at B 4th)
16. Kt to K 4th	Q takes R P
17. P to B 3rd	B to K 6th (ch)
18. K to B 2nd	R takes Kt, and White cannot take the Rook because of Q to R 4th (ch), &c.

15. R to Q 2nd	Kt to Q 5th
16. Kt takes Kt

16. Q takes Kt does not look very satisfactory. Nevertheless, it is better than the move in the text. Suppose—

16. Q takes Kt	Kt to Kt 6th (ch)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
17. B P takes Kt	B takes Q
18. P takes B	B takes R (ch)

19. B takes B, and White has four minor pieces for his Queen and Rook.

16.	B takes Kt
17. Kt to Kt sq	B to Kt 5th
18. Q to B 2nd	Kt to Q 8th

Threatening the Queen as well as mate on the move. All this is part of the admirable combination beginning in 14. Kt to K 6th.

19. Q takes B

Obviously his best course, although the Queen is lost for two minor pieces.

19.	R takes Q
20. P to K R 3rd	B to R 4th
21. P to K Kt 4th	Kt takes P
22. K takes Kt	B to Kt 3rd
23. P to B 3rd	R to R 5th
24. K to R sq	R to K 3rd
25. K R to R 2nd	R to Kt 3rd
26. P to B 4th

Necessary to prevent the Queen being played to Q Kt 8th, a move to which White would have had no satisfactory answer.

26.	Q to K 2nd
27. R to Q B 2nd	B to K sq
28. K R to K 2nd	Q to K 4th (ch)
29. B to B 3rd	Q to Kt 6th
30. R to K sq	K R to R 3rd
31. P to Q 4th	P to Q B 4th
32. P to Q 5th	B to Kt 3rd
33. K R to K 2nd	Q to B 6th
34. B to K Kt 2nd	R takes P (ch)

White has struggled gallantly to concentrate his forces in defence of the beleaguered Q R P, but Black's skilful manœuvres now result in a series of exchanges that carry the victory. The game throughout is a fine example of Mr. Blackburne's play.

35. R takes R	Q takes R
36. B to R 5th	Q takes B P
37. B to K B 3rd	Q to Q 5th (ch)
38. B to B 3rd	R takes R (ch)
39. K takes R	Q to Q 6th,

and White resigned.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

Two games have been played in the match between Messrs. Potter and Mason since our last report, and one of them was won by the English amateur, the other standing adjourned as we go to press. In the game won by Mr. Potter, which was the twelfth in the match, that gentleman was first player, and choose the King's Knight's opening, to which Mr. Mason opposed the old lines of the "Petroff defence," posting his King's Bishop at Queen's 3rd, instead of the now recognised move of 6. B to K 2nd. Throughout the opening both players appeared desirous of avoiding drawn positions, and at the fourteenth move Mr. Potter "waltzed in," as our American cousins say, by sacrificing one of his Bishops for a Pawn. The piece turned out to be a Greek gift, for the attack soon after broke through the defence, winning in twenty-eight moves. This game, which is one of the most interesting that has yet occurred in the match, will be published in our next issue. The score now stands:—Mr. Potter, 3; Mr. Mason, 2; drawn games, 7; and one game unfinished. The thirteenth game was begun at the Divan on the 26th ult., and, after four hours' play, was adjourned, the position being then critical for both sides.

The summer drills at Aldershott terminated on Thursday week, when the Duke of Cambridge held an inspection of about 9000 troops in the Long Valley.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated March 11, 1872) with a codicil (dated Dec. 23, 1876) of the Right Hon. John Laird Mair, Baron Lawrence, P.C., G.C.B., and G.C.S.I., late of No 23, Queen's-gate-gardens, who died on June 27 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by the Right Hon. Harriette Catherine, Dowager Baroness Lawrence, the widow, John Hamilton, Lord Lawrence, and the Hon. Henry Arnold Lawrence, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator settles his real estate at Pimlico and elsewhere upon his eldest son, and bequeaths pecuniary legacies to all his children, and annuities to his sisters. A sum of £50,000 is left upon trust for his wife for life, and then for the person who shall be entitled to his real estate. The residue of the personalty he gives to his wife absolutely.

The will (dated June 11, 1876) of his Excellency General the Marquis Alfonso Ferrero La Marmora, late of Florence, who died on Jan. 5, 1878, was proved in London on the 15th ult., the personal estate in England being sworn under a nominal sum. The testator leaves to Pia Casa di Lavora (workhouse), Florence, the reversion to his house, No. 1, Via Venezia, on condition that they pay four shares of 5000 lire each towards the Duomo of the Santa Maria Del Fiore; the usufruct of his capital of 2,000,000 lire, invested in the shares of the National Bank of Italy and the Italian Five per Cent Consols, he gives to his nephew, the Marquis Tommaso Ferrero De la Marmora, Prince of Masserano, for life, and if he dies without issue, when his family will become extinct, the said shares in the National Bank of Italy are given for the relief of the poor of the commune of Biella; and the annual income, amounting to 50,000 lire, of the said Italian Consols is to be applied for the relief of the poor of the commune of Turin. Subject to the foregoing and a few other bequests, the testator appoints his said nephew his universal heir.

The will (dated Jan. 3, 1879) of Mr. Alexander Howell Jenkins, late of No. 17, Hyde Park-gardens, who died on April 29 last, at Folkestone, was proved on the 12th ult. by William Fry Buchanan and Charles Griffith Smith, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £180,000. Among other bequests, the testator bequeaths £80,000 railway stock upon trust for his wife for life; £10,000 each upon trust for his nieces Clara Jane Brown and Mrs. Lucretia Jenkins Brock, and £10,000 upon trust for the children of his late niece Clara Elizabeth Scott. The residue he leaves upon trust for his nephew, William Henry Phillips Jenkins.

The will (dated Nov. 2, 1876) with two codicils (dated April 1, 1878, and Feb. 26, 1879) of Mr. Benjamin Bagnall, late of Timperley House, in the parish of Lillington, Warwickshire, who died on May 12 last, was proved on the 2nd ult. by Robert Hodgkinson and William Hawkins, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Mary Maria Bagnall, in addition to other bequests, an annuity of £2000 during life or widowhood, to his sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Hobday, his nephew, William M. Hobday, and his niece, Mary E. Braybrooke, £500 per annum each, and there are additional bequests to the two latter on the death of Mrs. Hobday; to his son, Benjamin Bagnall, an annuity of £1200, to be increased by £2000 per annum on the death or marriage again of Mrs. Bagnall; and some other legacies. The residue of his property is to be held upon trust for his said son for life, and then for his children.

The will (dated April 6, 1869) of Mr. David Anderson Blane, late of Foliejon Park, Berks, and of No. 21, Princes-gardens, Kensington, who died on June 17 last, was proved on the 12th ult. by Thomas Law Blane, the brother, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator devises his freehold and copyhold estates in the parishes of Winkfield and Bray, Berks, and all other his real estate, to his said brother Thomas Law Blane, and he bequeaths an annuity of £500 to his brother George, one year's wages to each of his domestic servants, and the residue of his personal estate to his brother Gilbert James Blane.

The will (dated July 8, 1874) with a codicil (dated Oct. 26, 1875) of Mr. Ralph Anstruther Earle, late of No. 27, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, who died on June 10 last, at Soden, Nassau, Germany, was proved on the 8th ult. by Charles William Earle, the brother, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths £500 to Edith, Lady Lytton; and one or two other legacies. The residue of his property he gives to his said brother.

The will (dated March 3, 1879) of Mr. John Frederick Boyes, late of No. 10, St. James's-terrace, Harrow-road, who died on May 26 last, was proved on the 10th ult by Mrs. Charlotte Augusta Cobourg Boyes, the widow, the Rev. William Johnson Burgess, and Captain Boughey Burgess, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testator leaves all his pictures by Huysman, Morland, Wynstranck, Stubbs, and Barrett to the trustees of the Taylor Institution, Oxford, and a suitable inscription is to be placed on the frame of each. After the death of his wife he gives £500 each to the Governess's Benevolent Institution and the London Female Preventive Reformatory Institution, Euston-road; £200 each to Emmanuel Church District Visiting Society, the Ragged School and Refuge, Edgware-road, the Anti-Vivisection Society, Victoria-street, Westminster, the Church Missionary Society, the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, and the Religious Tract Society; and £100 each to the Home for Female Orphans, St. John's-wood, and the City Mission.

Mr. E. W. Norfolk, of the Local Government Board, was on Tuesday elected secretary of the Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society of London, in the room of Mr. H. R. Sharman, who held the position for the last seven years, and who resigned on receiving a more important appointment.—The chairman announced that Mr. Seager Hunt of the firm of Messrs. Seager, Evans, and Co., has consented to preside at the next anniversary dinner of the society.

Colonel Gordon, R.E., commanding the Royal Engineers in the Home district, held last Saturday the official inspection of the Tower Hamlets Volunteer Engineer Corps.—On the same day the Eton College Volunteers were officially inspected by Colonel Baines, of the Oxford district, in the presence of a large assemblage of Etonians and spectators. The corps and band, nearly 300 strong, consisting of noblemen and gentlemen students, were commanded by Major E. Warre. The prizes won by the battalion were afterwards presented, the Peek Cup to Mr. Freemantle, of the D company, and the Bathurst Cup to Captain Durnford's C company.

The arrivals of live stock at Liverpool last week from the United States and Canada, notwithstanding the recent scheduling of the sheep under the Foreign Animals Act, which requires that they shall be slaughtered at the port of debarkation, were about the largest that have arrived in one week this season. The previous week was also large, but last week there were about 1000 head of cattle and 1000 head of sheep above the figures of the former period. The quantity of fresh meat was much below the previous week, being only 2540 quarters of beef and 625 carcases of mutton, against 3990 quarters of beef and 978 carcases of mutton the week before.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."
DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."
LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."
JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."
DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.
SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON.

BILIOUS ATTACKS.—In bilious people, and what are called bilious attacks, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when it is unable to do so sick headache is produced by a retention of bile in the blood. ENO'S FRUIT SALT exercises a simple but special action on the liver, by which the secretion of bile is regulated. In deficiency, therefore, of the excretive powers of the liver into the intestines, biliousness is caused, and, as a natural consequence, great sluggishness of the body and apathy of mind. In any case where the liver is sluggish ENO'S FRUIT SALT will increase its action by natural means, and thus prevent what is termed "the blues."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woe is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the CAPSULE is MARKED "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY AT ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S PATENT.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1879.

The Afghan War being over, a Treaty of Peace signed, and friendly relations established between the Viceroy of India and the Ameer, it is but in accordance with immemorial custom that the Officers and Troops employed in conducting military operations should receive the thanks of Parliament. On what ground it is that such an honour has been usually reserved exclusively for those who execute the will of the State by dint of fighting, we need not now curiously inquire. Probably it is because in such a case life is risked, and, alas! too often sacrificed, in achieving the purposes which are thus carried into effect. The compensations offered to the soldier, whether pecuniary or political, are by no means so great as to render them supremely attractive, and hence, when he has successfully and zealously accomplished the will of the nation by patience, perseverance, and endurance, he is entitled to such marks of approbation and gratitude as it lies within the power of the country to bestow. Happily, her Majesty's Army, whether at home or in India, whether composed of British or of Native troops, is not a political body. It goes where it is sent. It does what it is required to do. It is no part of its duty, or its habits, to ask the reasons which, in the view of the Statesman, justify, or fail to justify, the particular mission upon which it is sent. If it were otherwise—if the Army were to constitute itself judge of the causes which it either defends or aggressively promotes, the liberty of the subject would be in a position of sufferance merely, always exposed to the caprices and the encroachments of military ambition. And because this is so, because civil polity is ascendant over martial organisation, and law claims a place above the sword, it is not only possible but it is right that the Nation should judge of the service rendered to it by its Army, quite irrespectively of what the object of that service may have been, and solely on military grounds.

There has been, as we know, great difference of opinion with regard to the policy of the Afghan War. It has, indeed, received the sanction of large majorities in both Houses of Parliament. It has also been protested against by considerable minorities. Why it was entered upon at all, what was its necessity, what results may be fairly expected from it, whether even they will be worth their cost, are still matters of debate among us. But the vote of thanks proposed on Monday last to the Viceroy of India and the officers and men who acted under him were purely non-political. They were moved, of course, by prominent Members of the Government; but they were seconded in both Houses by the Leaders of the Opposition. They involved no party consideration; they represented what was due from the nation to that organised section of it of which it makes use when it determines to overbear force by force. In principle, the act has always been regarded as appropriate and decorous. We may send our servant upon a foolish errand; but if he does his part well he has earned thanks, whatever may be the unwisdom of the task upon which he was employed. That is our affair. It cannot be denied that the Afghan War was one demanding great military qualities. The shadow of a former disaster fell across the whole path of the invasion. The territory to be taken possession of is one of the most rugged on the face of the earth. Almost every step of it presents difficulties of which warlike tribes may take advantage for the defence of their soil. That these difficulties were overcome without much serious fighting, and that communications were fairly kept up between the van of our three columns of attack and the base of their supplies, or, if not, that the defect was speedily rectified, speaks something of the wisdom—or shall we call it the military sagacity—with which the campaign was planned, and the steadiness with which it was conducted. Not much glory was reaped, it is true, save such glory as may be associated with incessant exposure to peril, with cheerful endurance of physical hardships, and with the strictest maintenance of discipline under strong temptations to neglect it. In a word, the Army which entered Afghanistan behaved itself well and deserves well now that it has fulfilled the mission upon which it was employed.

We do not mean to say that none of the details of the Afghan War are open to adverse criticism. It is seldom, indeed, that this can be said of any military expedition, however highly successful or however rapidly accomplished. There have been matters of fact which we are told by military critics reflect no credit on those who were responsible for their occurrence. The serious loss which happened to the 10th Hussars in crossing a dangerous ford of the River Cabul in darkness can, perhaps, hardly be classed among the unavoidable exigencies of war, nor can the break down of the Commissariat in the Bolan Pass, nor the order which exposed our returning Forces to the fierce attack of cholera in the middle of the hot season. These, however, must be regarded as exceptional incidents which unhappily characterise more or less every campaign. They belong to that category of misfortunes which may, or may not, be justly described as blunders. But, on the whole, there can be little doubt that the invasion of Afghanistan was, so far as military operations are concerned, ably as well as gallantly conducted and achieved. We do not grudge our soldiers their meed of praise, nor our officers the laurels they have won. We only hope that the final results of their valour may conduce to the safety, the tranquillity, and the ultimate prosperity of her Majesty's Indian subjects.

It is to be regretted that the manner in which this question was put before the Houses of Parliament should have done anything to detract from the unanimity which ought to mark votes of thanks. No sufficient notice was given of the intention of the Government to admit of ample consideration. The despatches upon which all discussion should have proceeded were, we will not say withheld, but were not laid upon the Table of either House. This helter-skelter mode of treating so large and solemn a question is not respectful, we submit, to the nation which Parliament represents. We need not impute any intentional slight to those who had the ordering of this business. It belongs rather, we suppose, to that laxity of practice of which the country has had to complain more than once of late. It indicates indifferent leadership and, to some extent at least, carelessness in regard to the observance of those forms which are so vitally associated with the authority of Parliamentary institutions. In other respect, precedents have been followed—that is, such precedents as relate to the national recognition of military success in Indian warfare.

Pike, who knelt to receive them. The Duchess said: "Colonel Bagnell, I have very great pleasure in presenting these colours to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 12th Regiment, and in doing so I am persuaded that I am confiding them to safe custody, and placing them in the hands of those who will defend them, if called upon, with honour and distinction; and I am proud to have the honour of performing the ceremony." Colonel Bagnell replied on behalf of both officers and men. After the ceremony the Duke and Duchess crossed to Osborne. The Duchess has given a donation of £25 towards the funds of the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army, Roehampton. Her Royal Highness has consented to open the bazaar which is to be held at Brighton on Nov. 4 and 5 in aid of the funds of the school.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES

Lord Edmund Bernard Talbot, 11th Hussars, second and youngest son of Henry Granville, seventeenth Duke of Norfolk, was married to the Hon. Mary Caroline Bertie, eldest daughter of Lord Norreys, on Tuesday, at the Church of the Oratory, Brompton. The bridegroom's cousin, the Hon. Francis Howard, acted as best man. The bride was given away by her father. Her bridesmaids were the Hon. Josephine and the Hon. Cecil Bertie, her sisters; Lady Margaret Howard, sister of the bridegroom; Lady Margaret Stuart and the Hon. Winifred Howard, cousins of the bridegroom; Lady Emily Cadogan and the Hon. Kathleen O'Hagan, cousins of the bride; Miss Minna Hope, Miss Theresa Hope, and Miss Josephine Hope. The bride's dress was of white duchesse satin, trimmed with Brussels lace and bouquets of orange-blossom; she wore a large Brussels lace veil. Her jewels were a diamond necklace, the gift of the Duke of Norfolk, and diamond bracelets, with diamond sprays and stars worn in the hair, the gift of Lord Edmund Talbot. The bridesmaids were dressed alike in petticoats of cream-coloured cashmere, with Pekin bodices trimmed with old lace, and Gainsborough hats with feathers to correspond. They also each wore a pearl arrow—with "May" in diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom. The Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster and the Rev. Father W. T. Gordon officiated. The wedding party reassembled at Lord Norrey's house in Eaton-place for breakfast. Lord Edmund and his bride took their departure for Slindon Cottage, Sussex, where they intend passing their honeymoon. Her Ladyship's travelling costume was of cream cashmere and silk; hat to match, trimmed with daisies.

The marriage of the Hon. Francis John Pakenham, her Majesty's Minister Resident to the Republic of Chili, to Caroline Matilda, seventh daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Henry Ward, of Killinchy, county Down, was solemnised on the 29th ult., at the parish church, Bangor, county Down, Ireland. The marriage service was performed by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore, the Ven. the Archdeacon of Dromore, the Rev. T. Blackwood Price, and the Rev. E. Maguire. The bridesmaids were Miss Alice Harriette Cromie Lyle, Miss Anne Henrietta Chichester, and Miss Ethel Blackwood Price, nieces of the bride. After the ceremony the relatives of both families were entertained at a dejeûner at Bangor Castle, the residence of Mr. R. E. Ward. The pen used in signing the marriage settlements was that used by the Ambassadors and Plenipotentiaries in the signature of the Treaty of Vienna of 1815.

Marriages are arranged to take place between Viscount Coke and the Hon. Alice White, second daughter of Lord and Lady Annaly; and between the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Peel, K.C.B., of Hampton, Warwickshire, and Miss Janet Pleydell Bouverie, second daughter, and between the Hon. Alister Campbell, Scots Guards, and Miss Constance P. Bouverie, fourth daughter of Mr. Philip Pleydell Bouverie, of Brymon, Somersetshire.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The series of extra performances, at reduced prices, terminated last Saturday evening, when "Aïda" was given, for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson, the lessee. As the cast was nearly identical with that of recent occasions, slight comment will suffice. Again Mdlle. Kellogg, Madame Trebelli, and Signor Galassi, gave great effect, respectively, to the characters of Aïda, Amneris, and Amonasro; Signor Frapolli having on this occasion sustained the part of Radamès with much success. The principal singers, Mr. Mapleson, and Sir Michael Costa, were called before the curtain, the National Anthem was given, according to custom, and the supplemental performances came to a close.

A farewell operatic concert was given at the Royal Albert Hall on Monday afternoon, the programme having included some effective performances by several of the principal artists of Her Majesty's Theatre—these having been Mdlles. Minnie Hauk, Libia Drog, and Lido; Mesdames Trebelli, Marie Roze, and Sinico; Miss Emma Thursby; Signori Frapolli, Brignoli, Runcio, Galassi, and Del Puente; Mr. Carleton, and Herr Behrens. The selection was a varied and interesting one, but consisted of pieces too familiar to require specific detail. The encores were numerous. Sir Julius Benedict was the conductor.

Messrs. Gatti's new season of Promenade Concerts at Covent-Garden Theatre begins this (Saturday) evening. Engagements have been made with various eminent vocalists, including Mrs. Osgood, Misses Merivale, Marriott, M. Davies, Orridge, and M. Cummings; Mesdames Patey and Antoinette Sterling; Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. B. McGuckin, Mr. Santley, Mr. Boyle, Mr. King, and Mr. Maybrick. Those excellent solo pianists Mesdames Essipoff and Montigny-Rémaury and Mr. Charles Hallé are to appear, other instrumentalists named being M. Bouman and Herr Holman. A grand orchestra of eighty-five performers, led by Mr. A. Burnett, will again be a special feature, Mr. Arthur Sullivan being retained as conductor, with the efficient aid of Mr. A. Cellier. The first eight of Beethoven's symphonies will be given, in regular order, on Monday nights; Wednesdays will be classical nights; and Fridays English nights. The orchestral effects will occasionally be enhanced by the co-operation of the band of the Coldstream Guards, under the direction of Mr. F. Godfrey. The series will last eight weeks, and will be followed by performances of a similar kind in the same theatre, under the direction of M. Rivière, who has also announced promenade concerts at the Crystal Palace on Saturday evenings, Aug. 16, 23, and 30.

THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

An intercalary season having been permitted to Miss Genevieve Ward, a competent actress, for the production of a new drama, written by Messrs. Palgrave Simpson and Claud Templar, entitled "Zillah," the same was produced last Saturday. We regret to say that these intercalary seasons are generally unfortunate. The experience of last year was fatal to the lady who then made a similar effort to secure public attention for the autumn season. It is, under the best circumstances, a hazardous experiment; the drama is seldom of the most practicable type, and still more seldom properly rehearsed before representation. Both statements are true of the drama of "Zillah." It has two heroines, bearing the same personal resemblance, but different in the circumstances of rank, and unlike in disposition. They are both, however, the daughters of Raymond, Count of Toulouse, (Mr. Mead). A fire happening at the Count's palace, one of them mysteriously disappears, and is subsequently presented as the leader of a gipsy tribe, under the name of Zillah; the other remains with her family as the Lady Constance. Their resemblance is owing to their being twin-sisters. Both of them are represented by Miss Ward. The actress showed in all respects her wonted talent, and surprised, besides, her audience with the rapid changes of costume required by the duality of the assumption. We cannot say much in favour of the performance in general. More than one of the actors failed in rendering the text, and exposed the situations to peril. We must, however, record one exception. Mr. Forbes Robertson, as Pierre Latouche, a travelling tinker, acted his part with conscientious accuracy, and made the best of its opportunities. He gave full effect to the wise saws which distinguish his part from others less demonstrative. The conduct of the advanced portions of the plot is defective, and conduced in a great measure to the ultimate failure of the piece. It has been withdrawn in favour of Victor Hugo's "Lucrezia Borgia," which was produced on Thursday.

Various efforts were made at other theatres to attract and interest the visitors to whom the Bank Holiday was an occasion of outdoor enjoyment, and who were likely to patronise dramatic representations on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday. At the Haymarket the comedy of "Much Ado About Nothing" was revived, for the benefit of Mr. Buckstone, the theatre having been placed at his disposal for five nights. Mr. Barry Sullivan gave his gratuitous services as Benedick; his efforts being sedulously aided by Mr. Ryder, Mr. Howe, Mr. E. Compton, Mr. Harcourt, Mr. D. Fisher, jun.; aided by Mesdames Rose Eytinge, B. Henri, E. Thorne, and other talented ladies. We may here state that Mr. Howe is about to retire from the house to which he has been attached for more than forty years, and joins the company at the Vaudeville as actor and stage manager. He will appear at that theatre on Saturday, the 16th inst., in Mr. Byron's comedy, "The Girls," as the successor of Mr. William Farren. At the Adelphi, the revival of "Amy Robsart" has given place to that of "The Ticket-of-Leave Man;" but at the Princess's the melodrama of "Drink" retains its place. At the Olympic, "The Worship of Bacchus" was performed on Monday, but to-night will be replaced by the production of an American drama, entitled "Davy Crockett," an idyll of the Backwoods, in which Mr. Frank Mayo will appear, having already sustained the character in the United States more than 1700 times. The Gaiety has provided its patrons with Mr. Burnand's three-act comedy of "Boulogne" and Byron's burlesque of "Little Doctor Faust," involving the return of the entire company. The Strand presents for its programme "Ruth's Romance" and "Madame Favart," and the Globe "Don Quixote, Jun." and "Les Cloches de Corneville." Mr. E. Solomon has been appointed musical conductor at the Globe. The opera "H.M.S. Pinafore" is being excellently performed at two theatres, the Opéra-Comique and the Imperial, the injunction against its performance at the latter house having been reversed. At the Alhambra "The Princess of Trebizonde," originally produced at the Gaiety, is now being played for the first time, together with "Le Carnaval à Venise." Mr. Burnand's new play, called "Betsy," was performed at the Criterion on Wednesday, having been postponed from Monday.

The Polytechnic has added to its usual attractions some capital illustrations of Zulu warfare. A lecture is also given by Mr. W. B. May which vividly interprets the picture. In particular, Mr. Archibald Forbes's perilous ride from Ulundi to Landman's Drift was highly commended. A dyspeptic illusion, by Mr. F. C. Burnand, entitled "Curried Prawns," served admirably to introduce Messrs. Walker and Pepper's optical invention. The dreamer partakes in a representation of "Faust," which is humorously perplexed and distorted in every possible way. Mr. King also delivers a lecture on "Flashing Signals."

Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke have returned to the Egyptian Hall and repeat their usual entertainments.

We regret to learn from Reuter's telegram from New York that Mr. Charles Fechter, the celebrated actor, is dead. He was born in London, at Hanway-yard, Oxford-street, about 1823, and was educated in France as a sculptor. But his inclinations for the stage led to his appearance at the Salle Molière, in "Le Mari de la Veuve," after which he joined a troupe that made the round of Italy. In 1846 he appeared in Berlin. His first success on the French stage was as Duval in "La Dame aux Camélias." On the English stage he appeared in 1860 as Hamlet, at the Princess's; and next year as Othello. Becoming lessee of the Lyceum, he produced there "The Duke's Motto," "Bel Demonio," and "The Long Strike." In 1870, he visited the United States, and achieved a decided success. Lately, his health has been feeble, as we have heard from time to time. He has died early, but as an intelligent actor and artist secured a lasting reputation.

The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 577, of whom 424 were men, 126 women, and 27 children.

A number of silver bronze medals and certificates of merit awarded to various exhibitors were distributed last Saturday at the Westminster Exhibition, Victoria-street, by Mrs. J. G. Talbot. The exhibition will close this (Saturday) evening, after the final ceremony, which will be held at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, at which Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P. for Westminster, First Lord of the Admiralty, has kindly promised to preside. Sir Henry James, M.P., and others will be present.

A memorial from the vestry and a number of inhabitants of St. Pancras has been forwarded to the Earl of Beaconsfield asking that that parish, now forming part of the Parliamentary borough of Marylebone, may be constituted a separate borough, with two representatives. The memorialists state that in 1871 the population of that borough was 477,532, its area extending on one side from Kensington to Hampstead, and on the other from St. Giles's-in-the-Fields to Highgate; that the parish of St. Pancras is 2672 acres in extent, has a population of nearly 250,000, and contains 26,880 separate houses, with a total rateable value of £1,334,410, and, further, that the inhabitants generally are of the well-to-do working classes, and the more struggling portion of the trading and manufacturing classes.

At the annual exhibition of the works entered for the National Art-Competition, South Kensington, now opened to the public in the central hall (first story) of the galleries on the south of the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens (the entrance to which is on the west side of the Exhibition-road, South Kensington), there are about 1100 works selected from about 14,200 sent up from 145 schools of art throughout the kingdom. The subjects of the competition are figure drawing and modelling, painting in oil and water colours, and design, especially as applied to manufactures. The prizes awarded are 10 gold medals, 45 silver medals, 77 bronze medals, and 168 books. The Princess of Wales's Scholarships are awarded to the two female students who take the highest prizes of the year in the national competition. Besides these distinctions, which are awarded by the Science and Art Department, prizes are given annually in connection with the national competition for specified subjects of design by the Plasterers' Company, for designs for plasterers' work drawn in monochrome or modelled in plaster. The Owen Jones memorial prizes are given by the Society of Arts.

MOHAMMED TEWFIK PASHA, THE NEW KHEDIVE OF EGYPT.

His Highness Mohammed Tewfik, who has succeeded to the viceroyalty of Egypt, by a decree of the Ottoman Empire, upon the forced abdication of his father, Ismail, was born on Nov. 10, 1852. He is the sixth ruler of Egypt in the dynasty of Mohammed Ali Pasha, who was appointed Vali or Governor in 1806, and who, in 1841, got the Sultan, with the Five Great Powers of Europe, to settle the hereditary principality in his own family. Ali had rebelled against the Sultan, encouraged by the French Government of that day, and had made himself absolute master of the country. He was succeeded in 1848 by his son Ibrahim Pasha, who lived but two months after his elevation. The next ruler, Abbas Pasha, a son of Mohammed Ali's second son, reigned but six years. In 1854 he was strangled by order of the Sultan, as a punishment for attempted treason. Said Pasha, a third son of Mohammed Ali Pasha, succeeded on the death of Abbas; but Said also died in 1863, upon which his nephew Ismail Pasha, second son of Ibrahim, born in January, 1829, became ruler in his turn. This is the "Khedive," who has recently been deposed, that title (a word of two syllables) being conferred upon him, instead of "Vali," by an Imperial firman of 1866. At the same time, the law of succession was altered from that which had been established in 1841. Instead of succession devolving, as heretofore, according to the usual principles of Mohammedan law, upon the senior male descendant of the founder of the dynasty, it was to go to Ismael's eldest son, and thenceforth in the same order of primogeniture, excluding the other branches of Mohammed Ali's family. This favour was granted to the late Khedive, in 1866, by Sultan Abdul Aziz, in consideration of a large money payment, but in violation of the ancient and sacred law, and of the convention with the Foreign Powers. The consequence of that arrangement of 1866 is the present accession of Tewfik, instead of Halim, a fourth son of Mohammed Ali, now about fifty years of age, and reputed a much abler man. The deposition of the Khedive is fresh in our readers' minds, and they do not need to be reminded of the scandalous financial exposures by which it was preceded. A volume just published by Messrs. S. Tinsley and Co., "Egypt Under Ismail Pasha," edited by Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, gives a sad account of this recent passage of contemporary history.

Our Cairo Correspondent says, "It would be premature to speculate on the prospects of Egypt under the new régime, as the Prince has not hitherto been prominently brought forward. He held office as Minister of the Interior for some time, before the fall of the late Ismail Pasha; but the position gave little scope for displaying his capacity, as he was coupled with a councillor or adviser, some hard-headed official, who really did the work, and was actually responsible. The Prince's short presidency of the Council of Ministers did not prove a success; but he could not have been an independent agent under the circumstances. In private life he is very much esteemed, and is popular among all classes and nationalities. He is a strict and consistent Mohammedan, without being a fanatic; and, though he has not had the advantage of a European education, like his brothers, he is exceedingly well informed and conversant with the topics of the day."

THE LATE COUNTESS OF LOUDOUN.

The memorial cross to the memory of the late Countess of Loudoun, which was unveiled at Ashby-de-la-Zouch a few days since, is in the form of an Eleanor cross, 70 feet high. It was designed by the late Sir Gilbert Scott. The inscription was written by the Earl of Beaconsfield; it runs thus:—"In memory of Edith Maud, Countess of Loudoun in her own right—Baroness Botreaux, Hungerford, De Moleyns, and Hastings—who, sprung from an illustrious ancestry, herself possessed their noblest qualities, the people of Ashby-de-la-Zouch and its neighbourhood have raised this Cross—a tribute of admiration and of love." Besides the niche containing this inscription there are two others, with coats of arms, the first containing the arms of the late Countess, surmounted by her coronet, the second that of her husband, Mr. Abney-Hastings, bearing in the centre an escutcheon of pretence, with the Countess's arms and coronet repeated. The Cross is highly decorated, and around it hang six smaller shields, suspended by sprays of foliage, copied from the tomb of Aymer de Valence in Westminster Abbey, an ancestor of the late Countess. These shields contain the arms of some of the families from whose heiresses her Ladyship descended—namely, Hastings, Rawdon, Hungerford and Botreaux, Pole, Plantagenet, Neville, Montacute, and Monthermer.

The late Edith Maud Abney-Hastings, Countess of Loudoun, to whose memory this cross is erected, died in January, 1874, at the age of forty. She had married in April, 1853, Mr. Charles Frederick Clifton, of Willesley Hall, Leicestershire, who, in 1859, by Act of Parliament, assumed the surname and arms of Abney-Hastings. This was to comply with the conditions of a settlement made in 1844 by the late Sir Charles Abney-Hastings, Bart., of his estate upon Lady Edith Rawdon-Hastings, who succeeded to the title of Countess of Loudoun on the death of her brother in 1868. This lady was thus the representative of the ancient family of Hastings, which has been connected for many centuries with the town of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, where the ruins of the stately castle built by her celebrated ancestor, Lord Hastings, who was beheaded by Richard III., still form the principal attraction. Willesley Hall, the residence of her husband, is in the neighbourhood of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. She was endeared to the people of that place by many acts of kindness and sympathy, while she resided in the neighbourhood. The Countess of Loudoun was, moreover, a woman of strong intellect and of business-like habits. When her brother, the late Marquis of Hastings, died, leaving his affairs in a desperate condition, the management of the family property devolved upon her. She contrived to pay off all his debts within three years, and to redeem both Donnington Hall, the family seat in Derbyshire, and Loudoun Castle, in Ayrshire, which had been purchased by the Marquis of Bute, cousin of Lord Hastings, with the friendly understanding that the Hastings family might have it again at the price he paid for it. The marriage of Lady Flora Paulina Hastings, daughter of the Countess of Loudoun, to the Duke of Norfolk, took place in November, 1877. We then gave some particulars concerning this lady's family and connections.

THE MARBLE ROCKS OF JUBBULPORE.

The View presented in our Engraving is furnished by one of the Sketches of Mr. W. Simpson, who has travelled so frequently in different parts of India. This place is at the Bhera Ghat, on the Nerbudda river, a few miles from Jubbulpore, now a familiar railway station. The river has here cut its way through a mass of white marble; and at one place the rocks rise almost perpendicularly on each side to a considerable elevation. The upper part of the rock is covered by lichens, all of a dark, blackish tint, and its real character is concealed; but lower down, as high as the river rises in the wet season, the marble is left clear and white, and the light has a tendency to gleam through the rock in pale tints of yellow, green, and pink. Visitors go up the river in rude boats to see the rocks.

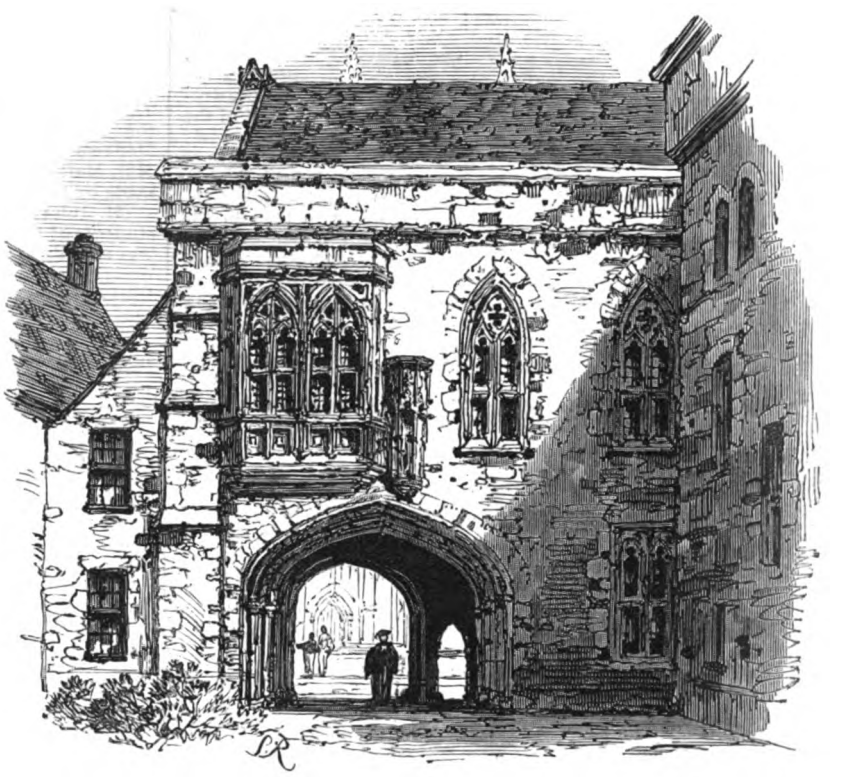
WELLS.

The Royal Archæological Institute has met this week at Taunton, and will have its excursion next Monday to Wells. Twenty or thirty miles north-east of Taunton, half-way on the road from Taunton to Bath, sits the quiet little Cathedral city, at the foot of the Mendip hills. Glastonbury, with the ruins of its Abbey, on that ground rising from wide marshes, which was once the Isle of Avalon, and was surrounded by water like the Isle of Ely, is six miles to the south. The Mendips, a range of rocky limestone masses, with abrupt cliffs and deep ravines and caverns, fill up the north-western part of the horizon as far as Cheddar. It is like a small fragment of the Derbyshire Peak, accidentally dropped amidst the flat pasture-meadows of Somersetshire.

The West Saxon Kingdom, which grew to be that of England, stretched in this direction, sometimes much harassed by Danish invaders landing in the Bristol Channel. It was King Ina, in the year 704, who founded a college of canons at Wells. That name was derived from a spring of reputed miraculous healing efficacy, dedicated to St. Andrew. Two hundred years later, in the reign of Edward the Elder, a bishopric of Wells was created. Its first occupants were translated from the neighbouring Abbey of Glastonbury. The French Bishop John de Villula, some time after the Norman Conquest, removed the see to Bath. There was much dispute about this, till it was resolved, after a few years, to style the diocese "of Bath and Wells." The Bishop was thenceforth elected by an equal vote of monks in Bath Abbey and Canons of Wells. The Cathedral, as it now stands at Wells, was begun in 1214 by Bishop Jocelyn Trotman. Its west front is adorned with three hundred sculptured figures of saints and angels, apostles, kings and queens, princes, prelates, knights and nobles, and with groups representing actions of Bible history. This magnificent front, with its supporting towers, and the north transept and tower, also the exterior of the choir and the chapter-house, are shown in the fine view drawn by Mr. S. Read. Its architecture is that of the early part of the thirteenth century.



A gateway, the "Chain-gate," is seen at the left hand, with a gallery passing above it from the Chapter-house to the Vicar's College. The buildings in the Vicar's Close, including the chapel and hall, are in character with the Cathedral itself. Another gateway, leading from the Market-place to the Cathedral-green, is nicknamed "Penniless Porch." A windy, draughty place, where fatal chills are said to have been caught by bare-headed ecclesiastics, has got the name of "Kill-canon Corner."

In pleasant grounds outside the town are the remains of the old Bishop's Palace, overlooking a moat of placid water. The entrance to this ancient seat of episcopal pomp and power is guarded by a tall gatehouse, like that of a baronial castle. It was indeed a walled fortress capable of resisting a siege in those days. The ruins of the great hall, built in 1275, by Bishop Burnell, have some historical interest. Here, in Henry VIII.'s reign, the last Abbot of Glastonbury, Whiting, was tried for treason. He was legally acquitted, but was nevertheless put to death. The hall was destroyed soon afterwards by order of the Protector Somerset. The modern Bishop's Palace is situated within these grounds. There was a Bishop in 1703, Dr. Kidder, who was killed, and his wife with him, by the fall of a stack of chimneys, blown down in a storm, through the old palace roof as they lay in bed. His predecessor was the good Bishop Ken, author of the Morning and Evening Hymns.

The Royal Archæological Institute, under the presidency of the Bishop, will visit the Cathedral and Palace of Wells, as stated above, and will take Glastonbury Abbey the same day, on its way back to Taunton. Its other excursions, beginning last Wednesday, are to Cleeve Abbey and Dunster Castle; to Staple Fitzpaine and Castle Neroche; to Bridgewater, Cannington, Stoke Courcy, Fairfield, Doddington, East Quantocks-head, and St. Audries; to Langport, Muchelney Abbey, Montacute, Hamdon, Barrington Court, and Ilminster; and to Norton Fitzwarren, Bishop's Lydeard, Cothelstone, and Kingston. The members will have leisure to inspect the museum of the Somersetshire Archæological Society, which now is domiciled in the old Castle of Taunton, a little to the west of the Market-place, and in the rear of the Castle Hotel. The collection occupies six or seven rooms on the ground and first floors of the castle, which they saved from destruction at the cost of £5000, in 1875, in order to form a home for the museum and library. It includes several mummies and other Egyptian antiquities, specimens of bronze and stone weapons of different ages and countries, British canoes, bracelets, armlets, swords, and a quantity of British and Roman remains, pottery, stirrups, tiles, &c., found within the borders of Somersetshire. Besides these there are marble sculptures from ancient Bath, representing Castor and Pollux; Roman pottery from Bridgewater; stone coffins, tesselated pavements, old crossbows, pike heads, keys, and tobacco pipes; articles manufactured at Taunton in the Middle Ages; examples of Greek, Roman, American, and English pottery and porcelain; and cannon-balls, powder-flasks, bill-hooks, pistols, and other relics of the field of Sedgmoor, which is only a few miles distant. The numismatic, natural history, ethnological, and geological departments are extremely complete for a modern and local collection, illustrative of the strata of the Quantock and Cheddar hills and of the rocks of Lyme Regis, with their plesiosauri and icthyosauri; and also rich in examples of peat in all its successive stages of formation, mostly from the neighbourhood of Bridgewater. Perhaps the most interesting article in the entire collection, historically speaking, is the Reliquary, found in 1849 in the church of Kewstoke, near Weston-super-Mare. This contains in front a carved figure under a canopy, and at the back an arched recess, in which was found a wooden cup inclosed within the door. The cup contains what is supposed to be a residuum of human blood, and surmised to be that of Thomas a'Becket. At the time of the dissolution of the monasteries it is conjectured that the monks of Woodspring carried away what they would naturally prize most highly—the blood of their patron saint, and built it for safety into the wall of the Church of Kewstoke, which was near to them. Woodspring Priory was founded in 1210 by William de Courtenay, a near relative of Tracy, one of Becket's murderers, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and St. Thomas of Canterbury. To this priory lands were also bequeathed by descendants of Brito, another of Becket's murderers.

The British Archæological Association holds its thirty-sixth annual Congress next week at Yarmouth. Lord Waveney is the president, and the excursions arranged comprise places of much antiquarian interest in that part of the Eastern Counties.

ZULU WAR ILLUSTRATIONS.

The bold, unwearied, dauntless, solitary horseman, "bloody with spurring, fiery red with haste," who is represented in our front-page Engraving, is the renowned Special Correspondent of the Daily News, Mr. Archibald Forbes. This gentleman, who has served in a cavalry regiment, is equally distinguished, among those who follow military campaigns in the service of journalism, for his practical knowledge of warfare, his literary powers of description and spirited narrative, and his extraordinary feats of rapid travelling, through the roughest country and braving the most obvious personal dangers, to send off his letters or telegrams at the earliest possible moment. After the battle of Ulundi, which was fought, between eight and nine o'clock in the morning, on the 4th ult., Mr. Forbes volunteered to convey Lord Chelmsford's despatch, for Major-General the Hon. H. Clifford at Maritzburg, announcing the victory, the news of which was to be instantly sent to England. The nearest telegraph station for the purpose of this important communication was at Landman's Drift, on the Buffalo River, the boundary which separates Natal from the Utrecht district of the Transvaal, a place situated nearly due west of Ulundi, and not less than a hundred and ten miles distant from it. Mr. Forbes had to go there, as quickly as he could in order to dispatch his own report of the battle to the Daily News, and Lord Chelmsford was glad to avail himself of so good a messenger for the conveyance of the official despatch to be forwarded by General Clifford to the War Office. It was a ride of the distance we have mentioned in fourteen hours, entirely alone, over a rugged and mountainous country without any proper roads, and with no small risk of being cut off by the straggling bands of the enemy dispersed all over Zululand after the rout of their main army, or probably still lurking about the British rear, and along the route of its communications, for the plunder of occasional convoys. Mr. Forbes rode on all through the night, which was dark, with a thick fog, and he twice lost his way. He performed this valuable public service with such intrepid courage and so much personal address that we trust he will receive from her Majesty the Queen a suitable honorary distinction, at the request of the Secretary of State for War. If he cannot have the Victoria Cross, being a non-combatant, let him have the Order of St. Michael and St. George, which is usually bestowed on civilians for services rendered in any of the British colonies or foreign possessions.

The Extra Supplement given with this Number of our Journal is a large Engraving, drawn from the Sketches furnished by our Special Artist, which represents the army of Lord Chelmsford, in its advance to Ulundi, occupying a Zulu military kraal. The General and one of the officers of his Staff, on horseback, are in the centre of the ground; the troops have just come up behind, a regiment of infantry led by its mounted officers; while the half-naked men of the Native Contingent, with some Zulu women and children, who have sought refuge in camp, lie carelessly about the foreground. Officers of the Native Contingent are speaking to these people and ordering them to keep the place clear. To the right hand are seen many of the round dome-shaped huts, built of poles and boughs, with a thatched grass roof, belonging to the Zulu soldiers, for whom the kraal was constructed by the command of King Cetewayo. Unsaddled horses, also packhorses, and waggons drawn by several pairs of yoked oxen, are brought forward to the left hand. In the distance are more waggons approaching the camp, with their guards of detached companies of soldiery, and one or two batteries of field artillery are coming up. The scene is very characteristic of South African campaigning business on the largest scale and in an open country.

Our Correspondent with the division of the British Army which advanced from the Lower Tugela lately described, in a letter published two or three weeks ago, his visit to the battle-field of Gingihlovo. The state in which he found the graves of Lieut.-Colonel Northey, of the 60th Rifles, Lieutenant G. C. Johnson, of the 99th Regiment, and others killed in that action, which took place on April 2, preparatory to relieving Colonel Pearson and the besieged garrison of Ekhowe, was particularly set forth in that letter. An Illustration of the place of sepulture, with its simple monuments hastily erected by the comrades of the slain soldiers, appears in our Supplement of this week.

We have news from the Cape to the 15th ult., with despatches from Sir Garnet Wolseley, who states that Cetewayo is now a fugitive, with his wives and a few of his personal followers, in the Ngome Mountains. Sirayo, his brother, one of the principal Zulu chiefs, is still with the King, but Dabulamanzi, another of his brothers, who commanded the Zulu army at Isandhlwana, has surrendered himself to the British General. Lord Chelmsford has resigned his command, and is about to return to England. The division of General Crealock, from the Lower Tugela, has joined the main army. Sir Garnet Wolseley had summoned all the Zulu chiefs to meet him, on the 19th, and to lay down their arms. He promises that their country shall not be annexed, or the ordinary customs of their nation interfered with, but only the military system of the Zulu kingdom is to be abolished. A chain of forts is to be erected across the country; and Zululand, it is said, will be divided into four separate principalities, each ruled by a native prince owing allegiance to the British Government.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The statue of M. Thiers at Nancy was unveiled on Sunday, in the presence of about 20,000 persons. Five Ministers and Madame Thiers were present, and speeches were made by MM. Martel, Lepère, and Jules Simon. Preparations are being made by the town of Belfort for a similar demonstration.

M. Jules Ferry on Sunday distributed the prizes to the students of the Sorbonne. In his speech he said that the State was now seeking, despite clamours and defections, to reinstate the University in rights and dignities infringed for the last thirty years—a service for which it asked for no sacrifice of independence.

The Committee of the Senate on M. Jules Ferry's bill, after rejecting clause 7 (the anti-Jesuit clause), on Thursday week voted by six to two against the whole bill. M. Jules Simon has been elected reporter; but the public discussion of the measure in the Senate has been adjourned until the winter Session. In the Chamber it was resolved to reduce the stipends of the Bishops and Archbishops, and to increase those of the working clergy. A discussion upon the Foreign Office Estimates followed. M. Waddington gave some explanations respecting the policy of France with regard to Greece and Egypt, and said that diplomatic documents would be laid before the Chambers at the commencement of the next Session. Last Saturday the Chambers sat for the last time at Versailles. In both Houses M. Waddington read a decree declaring the ordinary Session of 1879 closed. It was at the same time announced that an autumn sitting would commence on a day hereafter to be fixed, beween Nov. 25 and Dec. 1.

The Comte de Chambord has published a letter to the Marquis de Foresta at Marseilles, in which he denies that in 1873 he voluntarily declined to avail himself of an opportunity of ascending the throne, and reserves for a future occasion full explanations of the events of that period. He says that a return of the traditional Monarchy was in harmony with the aspirations of the majority of the people. The country, indeed, expected a King of France; but political intrigues had decided that it should have, instead, a Mayor of the Palace. The Count adds that he remains faithful to his oath never to become the King of a faction or a party, and declares that he will never cease to appeal to all honest men for support. "Armed with this force, and with the grace of God," he says, in conclusion, "I can save France. It is my duty and my desire to do so."

On Thursday, July 31, the Baroness Clara Anna Martha de Knyff, widow of General de Knyff, for many years resident in the Rue Billault, Paris, was buried with great pomp in the cemetery of Père la Chaise, the chief mourners being her sons, Baron Anatole de Knyff and Baron Ernest de Knyff. The deceased Baroness, born in 1794, was a daughter of the late Sir Thomas Clavering, of Axwell Park, and a member of the Church of England. The old chapel in the Avenue Marbœuf, where the services were held at one o'clock, before the cortége proceeded to the grave, presented a very unusual appearance, being hung with black cloth externally, and from ceiling to floor internally, and converted, in fact, into a chapelle ardente, with a vast number of lighted candles, not only on each side of the decorated catafalque, but all round the building in front of the draped galleries. When the hearse and the long train of mourning-coaches passed from the Champs Elysées into the Avenue Marbœuf, the organ announced their approach, and the Rev. Aberigh Mackay appeared in his surplice at the church-door, under the heavy curtains of black, silver-fringed, over which the family arms of the Baroness were emblazoned. The Burial Service was read in French, in the church and at the cemetery. The elder boys of the British Schools, led by their head master, Mr. Smith, sang the ninetieth Psalm and Nos. 399 and 400 of "Hymns Ancient and Modern."

GERMANY.

The retirement of Prince William of Prussia, the eldest son of the German Crown Prince, and her Majesty's eldest grandson, from the University of Bonn was made the occasion of a students' fête on a grand scale, in which the native population joined with much spirit, so far as the decoration of public and private buildings and attendance as spectators in windows and on balconies was concerned. The fête took place last week. A procession was formed on the Alte Zoll, headed by the band of the Emperor's Own Hussars, who had donned the regimental dress of the historic Dragoons of Bayreuth for the occasion. Students on horseback followed, bearing the colours and wearing the uniforms of the three principal corps—the Palatians, in violet, white, and red; the Prussians, in black, white, and black, and the Hanseats, in white and scarlet. A file of open carriages, drawn by four horses each, followed. The Prince occupied the principal seat in the first carriage, and wore the colours of the Prussian corps. The procession having made the tour of the town, the gentlemen, young and old, who had taken part in it assembled for a "commerz" (student's drinking-party), in which Herr Alexander de Claer, a brother of Count Moltke's aide-de-camp, presided. Toasts were drunk with all honours, the "salamander" of German students to the Emperor, the Imperial family, and the Prince. The Prince, who has completed his fifth term at the university, replied with a perfect self-command, and entered fully into the spirit of the occasion.

Many of the finest buildings in John-street and King-street, Hamilton, Ontario, have been destroyed by a fire which broke out in the business centre of that town on the 1st inst. Three persons were killed by the falling of a wall.

INDIA.

The following telegram has been forwarded to us from the India Office for publication:—

From the Viceroy, Aug. 1, 1879.

Month July.—Rains favourable on whole; at one time deficient in Madras, but prospects latterly much improved, and now good. Deficiency of rain in Deccan supplied by excellent showers of past week. More rain needed in parts, Guzerat and Konkan. In Rajputana and central districts of Punjaub, rain insufficient. Rest of India, prospects decidedly good, though flood and excessive rain have done partial harm. Distress in North-West subsiding; 66,000 on relief in Bombay Presidency. Rat plague decreasing.

A resolution of the Governor-General in Council has been published in the Gazette of India announcing that, in consequence of the state of the finances, the Viceroy has determined to dispense with the services of a considerable number of officials of the Public Works Department.

Lord Augustus Loftus, the new Governor of New South Wales, arrived at Sydney on Monday, and met with a most cordial reception.

The Legislative Assembly of South Australia has passed a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry.

The Agent-General for Queensland has received a telegram announcing the safe arrival of the Scottish Knight at Townsville on the 16th ult.

The transport Olympus arrived at Portsmouth on Monday with another party of invalids and wounded from the Cape.

A petition to the Imperial Government, signed by 8661 out of 152,000, the total population, in favour of the substitution of a civil for a military Governor for the island of Malta, was forwarded to England by the last mail.

The Inter-Insular Rifle-Match between Jersey and Guernsey came off on Thursday week at Jersey, for the championship of the Channel Islands, between teams of ten selected shots from each island, at distances of 200 and 500 yards, ten shots each. Jersey scored two in advance at 200 yards, but fell behind at 500 yards, Guernsey scoring 653 against 639 by Jersey.

The Peruvian Envoy in London has received two telegrams from the seat of war in the Pacific viâ Panama, which state that Iquique has been again bombarded, but sustained little damage, and that the Huascar has captured a Chilian transport with a regiment of cavalry on board, and three other Chilian ships laden with coals and copper.

Early on Monday morning Messrs. George Thompson and Co.'s ship Pericles, which left Plymouth on the previous Thursday with 496 emigrants for Sydney, returned to Plymouth in a leaky condition. The ship struck near the Manacle Rocks on Thursday night, but quickly floated off, and continued on her voyage. On the afternoon of the following day the carpenter reported water in the fore-peak; and, as the water could not be kept down owing to one of the pumps having broken down, it was determined to make for Plymouth.

General Lord Mark Kerr distributed the prizes on Tuesday at the Oxford Military College.

The Liverpool Town Council has resolved, by thirty-six votes to eight, that a new supply of water shall be obtained from the Vyrnwy river, in Montgomeryshire.

A school of bottlenose whales was observed to enter the Bay of Nesting, Shetland, on Tuesday. Boats were immediately manned by the fishermen, and after a long and exciting chase eighty whales were driven on shore and captured. The hunt lasted till night.

At the Cork Assizes £1000 has been awarded as damages to Miss McEven in an action for breach of promise of marriage against Mr. W. Lane O'Neill, solicitor, of London; and in Dublin Miss Fowler has obtained £400 damages in a like action against Mr. John Robert Gordon, of Newry.

Earl and Countess Brownlow on Tuesday laid the foundation-stone of a new middle-class school at Ellesmere. The school will be in connection with Canon Woodard's scheme, and will cost £50,000. The site, covering thirty acres, was given by Earl Brownlow. During the day £800 was collected in aid of the building fund. Over £40,000 is still needed.

Shortly after midnight on Saturday a severe thunderstorm broke over the metropolis. The lightning was very vivid, and in the southern and south-western suburbs much damage was done by hail. In a house at Surbiton twenty-one window-panes were broken by the hail; and it is stated that a florists' newly-made greenhouses in the same neighbourhood have suffered damage to the extent of £2000. At Kew the large conservatories suffered to such an extent that they were closed on Sunday on account of the falling glass; and it is estimated that damage has been done to glass to the extent of £5000 or £6000, besides the irreparable injury done to the plants. The storm was also very severe in the southern, eastern, and midland counties. One man was killed and a number of sheep and cows also lost their lives. A parish church in Norfolk was greatly damaged, and the lightning set fire to a farmhouse at Tivetshall. Much injury was done to the crops by the rain.

Lord Beaconsfield was present at a banquet given to her Majesty's Ministers at the Mansion House on Wednesday evening, and responded to the principal toast. He claimed that the Berlin Treaty, which had been said by the opponents of the Ministers to be impracticable, had now been carried into full effect, and that an adequate and scientific frontier to our Indian Empire had been attained. He spoke at some length of the commercial and agricultural depression; and, criticising a statement made by Lord Hartington, contrasted the English system of agriculture with the peasant proprietorship applauded by theoretical philosopers. Apologising for what he called his lecture on this subject, he said he might not have an opportunity for a long time of again addressing his countrymen; and he concluded by expressing the gratitude of the Ministry for the patriotic support they had received from the City. Lord Salisbury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the First Lord of the Admiralty were among the other speakers.

NEW BOOKS.

Turkey in Asia is the country which is treated of in the two volumes entitled Our New Protectorate, by J. Carlisle M'Coan (Chapman and Hall), and the author of them will be listened to with the more respect and attention in consequence of the golden opinions he won by his "Egypt As It Is," in which he displayed the qualities, not very frequently combined, of a man of talent both practical and didactic, in business and in literary exposition. The author undertakes to enlighten his countrymen, and he appears to be perfectly qualified to enlighten them, on nearly all questions connected with the geography, races, resources, and government of Turkey in Asia; and to promote the enlightenment he has furnished his volumes with "a map, showing the existing and projected public works." On that map are marked out various proposed lines of railway, with branches; and attention is drawn by underlining with red "the towns at which the Ottoman Government propose to construct harbours." Of course the author has some observations to offer concerning Cyprus, which, in our hands, he is sanguine enough to think, "may soon be expected to rival the prosperity, though never the beauty, of Corfu before our ill-advised surrender of the Ionian group to Greece." He does not presume to be an authority on strategical value; but, so far as a civilian can judge, he regrets "that we did not choose Rhodes or Mytilene instead." He speaks with more confidence, as well as with more weight, when he comes to resources and products, trade centres, and agriculture, slavery and polygamy, laws affecting foreigners, necessary reforms, and other topics with which civilians, and of civilians the merchant, are likely to have the most familiar acquaintance: and the chapters in which he deals with such subjects will no doubt receive, as they deserve, the closest attention not only of responsible persons but of ordinary readers also. He takes the opportunity of endeavouring to remove certain deeply imprinted but wholly erroneous notions, which must be dispelled before the average English mind can form anything like a true picture of the social conditions prevailing in "our new protectorate." The majority of readers will perhaps be surprised to learn that "a Mussulman who ill-treats his slaves is socially looked upon very much as a wife-beater amongst ourselves;" that servitude "carries with it no personal, or at least indelible, degradation;" that, "in Turkey as in Egypt, it not seldom happens that a master liberates a favourite slave and gives him his daughter in marriage, without the public feeling at all regarding the union as a mésalliance;" that "many Turks of what may be called the middle and upper classes prefer slave wives to freeborn mates," because they are then exempt from "the inconvenience of marriage relatives, and especially of mothers-in-law;" and that the status of slavery is "no bar to admission to the public service." It is not pleasant to read that a "small supply" of slaves "is still received from Tunis via Malta, whence, by what may be called the irony of trade, they mostly reach Constantinople on board British steamers, as the pretended harem and servants of some travelling Effendi." This mention of the word "harem" brings to mind the "popular misconception" which leads people to use the word as if it implied some "gross domestic immorality," and what our author has to say upon the subject may be read to considerable profit, though he only repeats, for the most part, what has been many times already dinned by wisdom into the ears of deaf adders. The author asserts, from knowledge acquired by long residence in Turkey, that "nowhere is the general tone of family and social morality higher." He acknowledges, however, as was to be expected, that, "much as the evils" of slavery and polygamy "are exaggerated by Western opinion, both are, in fact, bad enough to be incompatible with any advanced civilisation." All that is wanted is that objectors should know what it is they object to, and why they are right to object. As our author truly observes, "we tolerate polygamy in the Deccan and the Punjaub; and what Indian legislation thus sanctions cannot well be condemned in Asia Minor." If anybody should be inclined to ask what is the area and what the population of Turkey in Asia, our author would reply, "about 650,000 square miles," and "some 16,500,000," of whom, perhaps, "ten millions are Turks — i.e., descendants of the original invaders and of the native races who, in turn, accepted the faith and race-name of their conquerors," and the rest Armenians, Kurds, Greeks, Syrians, Arabs, execrable Circassians, Turcomans, Jews, and non-descripts. The religious creeds are almost as many in number as the races, "but in the main resolve themselves into Moslem and Christians, with a comparative handful of Jews." The possible "wealth of this fine territory is as great and varied as its population is mixed and its religions many;" its government, "though in theory fairly enough adapted to its present stage of civilisation, in practice could not well be worse." Everything cries aloud for reform, which "the present Government has neither the will nor the power" to achieve, though "it is still strong enough to accomplish many salutary changes," and "if either civilisation or British interests require more we must do the work ourselves." Such is the opinion of the author, writing "with whatever weight may attach to long residence in the country and some special attention to its politics." And with the expression of his opinion a very interesting and apparently important book may conveniently be left to make its way into a multitude of hands.

The season of later summer and autumn has begun to invite long rambles in pleasant countries far and near. Books descriptive of such excursions, which have lain apart during months of pressing business in town, shall now engage our willing notice. A small volume, but one of the most delightful, relates Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson's Travels with a Donkey in the Cevennes. It is published by C. Kegan Paul and Co. The author has before given us An Inland Voyage up some rivers of northern France and adjacent regions, which made very agreeable reading. Here he figures as a pedestrian tourist, the donkey being laden only with his pack of bedding, clothing, and victuals. The Cevennes, an interesting mountain range extending south of Auvergne towards the Mediterranean, divides the upper valleys of the Loire and Allier and those of the Lot and Tarn, affluents of the Garonne, from the Lower Rhone. These wooded highlands were more than once the refuge of persecuted French Protestants. Mr. R. L. Stevenson, though bred in the chaste bosom of the Scottish Kirk, as he tells us, has a truly liberal respect and sympathy for real Christians of every creed. He made friends at a Cistercian or Trappist convent, while stanchly resisting the vehement attempts to convert him. Among descendants of the Camisards, who were the French Covenanters under Louis XIV., many of them still retaining their pure faith in a softer temper, he found himself more at home. The historical traditions and social life of the country are well brought out in these light pages. But Mr. Stevenson's personal adventures on the way, told with humorous confession of incessant little mistakes and mishaps in trivial matters of unaccustomed travel, are most entertaining. His donkey is a pretty, sly, disobedient, obstinate little jade named Modestine, which he is fain to belabour incessantly, to his own grief and remorse, for he would rather love and cherish her as a favourite daughter. Why a man should encumber himself with the charge of leading or driving a beast of burden over the hilly roads, instead of carrying what he wants in a knapsack on his own shoulders, may here be asked. The fact is, that Mr. Stevenson had a great notion of camping out and sleeping in the open air; for which purpose he chose not a tent, but a snug waterproof sack. This, with other intended comforts, made up the troublesome donkey's load. We cannot advise future tourists in the Cevennes or anywhere else to follow such an inconvenient mode of transport. But readers may securely accompany this genial and clever writer in the amusing narrative of his daily experiences. The book is one that will last a long time for the pleasure of quoting, and remembering its quaint anecdotes and quips of comic genius.

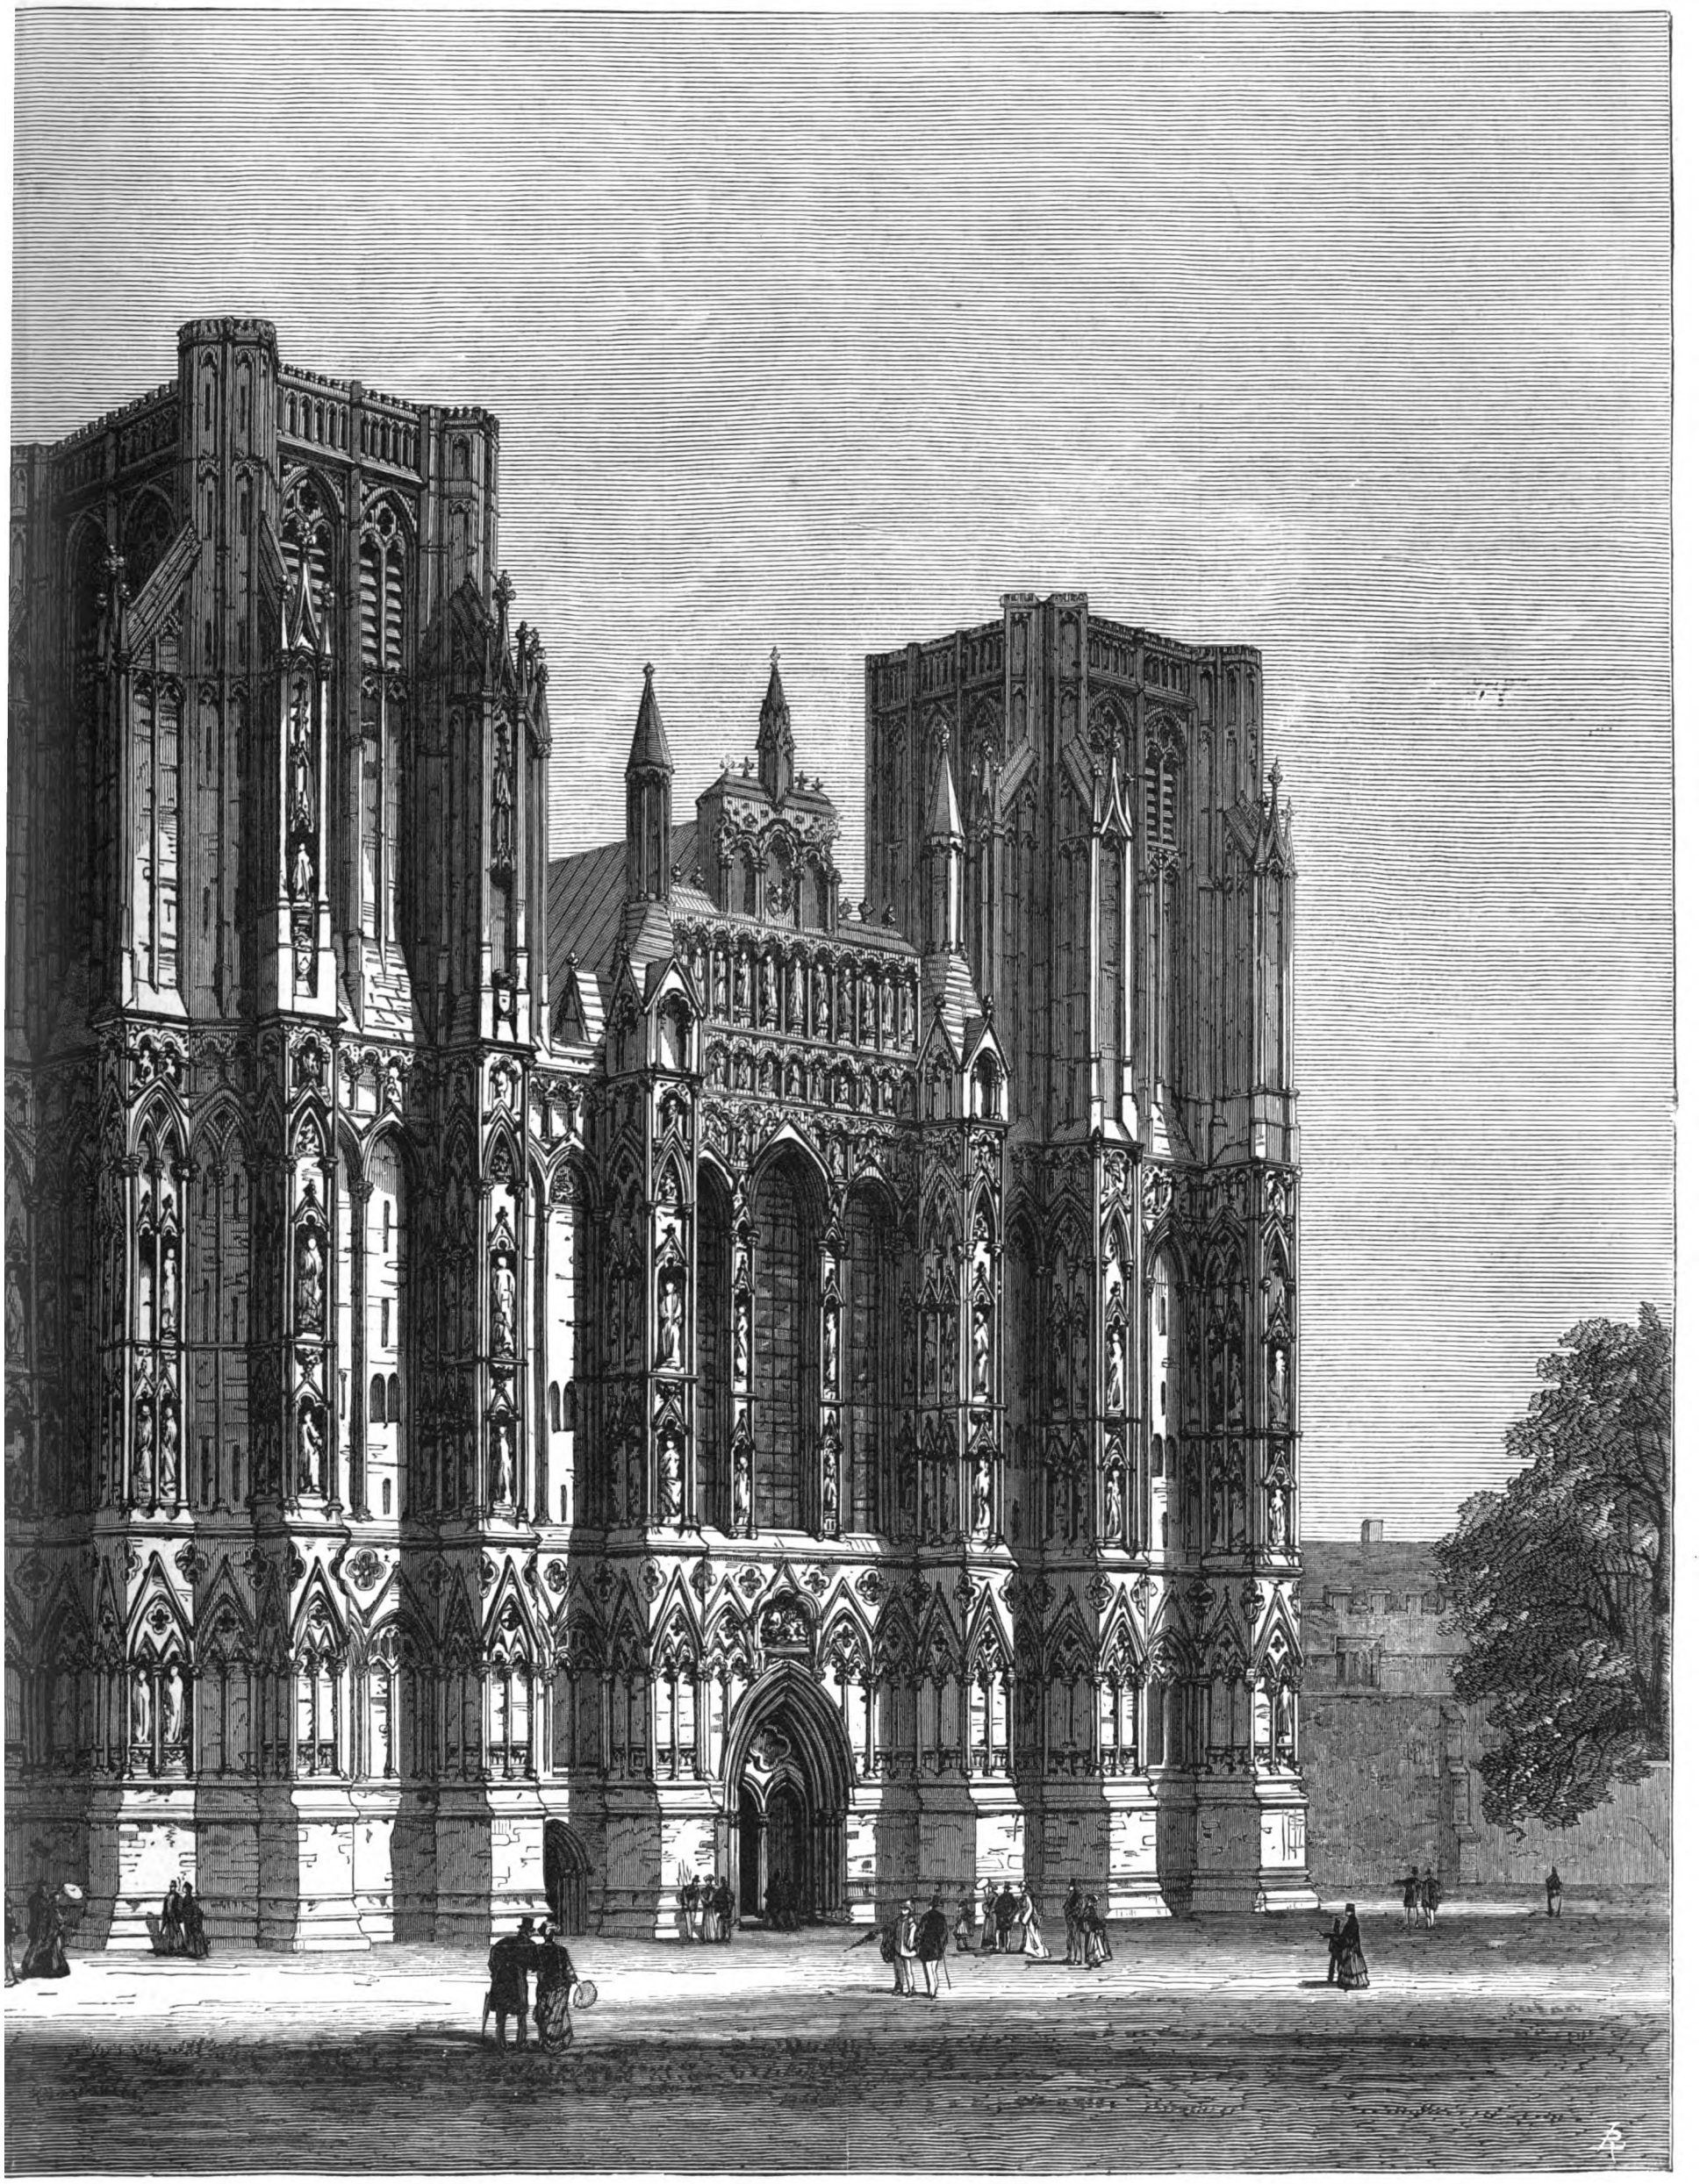
A very complete account of the "Black Forest," that romantic district of South-western Germany, partly in Baden and partly in Würtemberg, which is a favourite resort of the superior class of tourists, has been published by Messrs. Strahan and Co. Its author is L. G. Séguin, whose "Walks in Algiers," and the charming little tales called "The French Village," should be a sufficient recommendation. The Black Forest, its People and Legends, is more than an ordinary book of topographical description, as it presents many passages of historical and traditional narrative, highly characteristic of the region, to which readers of this volume will feel drawn by a fresh interest. They may almost dispense with Cook's or Baedeker's Guide to the Black Forest. We commend, however, a new publication of Baedeker's, the Handbook to Norway and Sweden, just published in London by Dulau and Co., of Soho-square. It is one of the most compact, instructive, and convenient works of this useful kind. Fifteen maps and three plans accompany this well-arranged compendium of information, which every traveller bound to the Scandinavian peninsula is strongly advised to procure.

The Right Hon. Colonel Stanley, M.P., presided last Saturday, amid much rejoicing, at the opening of the New Chorley Townhall, which has been built at a cost of £30,000.

An extension of the East and West India Dock was opened last Saturday. The new basin is six acres in extent, and the depth of water at the new entrance is thirty-one feet at ordinary spring tides, being four feet deeper than any other dock entrance in the Thames. The cost of the extension and two ranges of warehouses was £250,000.

Yesterday week the Literary Production Committee held a meeting at the offices, Southampton-buildings, for the purpose of awarding the £100, the amount of prizes advertised some months ago, for the three best stories written by amateurs. Mr. Darton presided. The secretary, having read the conditions under which the prizes were offered, stated that 133 had been submitted, and that every line of every manuscript had been perused by at least two members of the committee, but out of the number submitted three stood out prominently, while the majority were considerably above the average merit. In the opinion of the judges Miss Probyn's story was by far the best, still, failing to comply with Rule 3 regarding length, it was disqualified for the first prize. Eventually the first prize of £60 was awarded to Miss M. Doake, of Dromara, Ireland, for "May Darling;" the second prize of £25 to Miss May Probyn, of Weybridge, for "Who Killed Cock Robin?" and the third of £15 to Miss Clutton Brock, for "The Price of a Violin."

The annual competition of the Artillery volunteers began on Monday at Shoeburyness. Mr. Brooshooft's prize of £30 was taken by the first detachment of the 8th Lancashire; Lord Londesborough's prize of £20 was secured by the second detachment of the 2nd Cheshire; the 3rd Middlesex Artillery prize of £15 was won by the third detachment of the 1st Edinburgh; and the Duke of Cambridge's prize of £10 by the second detachment of the 8th Lancashire. On Tuesday Lancashire was again to the front, the 15th, another Liverpool Corps, taking the first prize, in the shape of ten silver cups, value £50, presented by the Houses of Lords and Commons. The successful detachment was the 6th. The second prize went to the second detachment of the 2nd Durham (Seaham) Corps, who received the National Artillery Association prize of £20. The second detachment 8th Lancashire, which won the fourth prize in the Shell Contest on Monday, took the third also in this competition, £15, and the 1st Gloucester (Bristol) Corp, the fourth, given by Lord Longford. The winners in Wednesday's competition have also been announced as follows:—1st prize (Prince of Wales's) won by 7th detachment 2nd Durham, second prize, £20, won by 4th detachment 2nd Durham, third prize, £15, won by 1st detachment 2nd Carnarvon, fourth prize, ten guineas, given by Captain Cameron, 4th Durham Artillery, won by 2nd detachment 2nd Durham.—The annual camp of instruction for Engineer Volunteers was opened at Chatham last Saturday, and will remain open until the 16th.—The members of the London Rifle Brigade have used the August Bank Holiday for their annual prize meeting and "week under canvas" at Rainham, Essex.—A detachment of the Bristol Naval Volunteer Artillery embarked last Saturday morning for a week's cruise in the gun-boat Cromer; this day the second detachment will embark, and on the 16th there will be a heavy gun competition for the corps generally at Portishead.—The Berkshire battalion of Rifle Volunteers have had their annual encampment on a tract of land adjoining Englefield Park, near Reading, the seat of Mr. R. Benyon, many years the senior M.P. for the county.



The weather on Monday, Bank Holiday, though cloudy and overcast in the morning, was, on the whole, favourable to out-door holiday-making, and in consequence there was a large increase in the traffic on the railways compared with other holidays this year, and a decrease in the number of visitors to museums and other indoor places of resort. The parks and open spaces in and about London were densely thronged, and the excursion-trains to the seaside were very full. The total admissions to the Crystal Palace were 43,036; to the Alexandra Palace, over 40,000; to Kew Gardens, 53,000; to the State apartments at Windsor Castle, 5824; and to the Brighton Aquarium, 12,950. At the South Kensington Museum, the number of persons admitted up to six o'clock was 14,809, against 24,684 on Whitsun Monday; at the National Portrait Gallery the total entries were 3396; the Horticultural Gardens had about 10,000 visitors; the British Museum between 7000 and 8000, which was 9000 less than on Whitsun Monday; the National Gallery 13,000, against 22,580 on Whitsun Monday; the Royal Academy, 8000; Madame Tussaud's, 10,000; and the Tower some hundreds more than its usual complement of 2000 visitors. By permission of the Earl of Essex, the annual excursion of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union was made to Cassiobury Park. A special train conveyed the excursionists—numbering between 800 and 900—members of metropolitan clubs, their families and friends, from the Euston station of the London and North-Western Railway to Watford.—The London and Westminster Working Men's Constitutional Association celebrated the day by a demonstration at Hatfield, the seat of the Marquis of Salisbury.—Many temperance fêtes and demonstrations were held. At Brighton, St. Albans, and other places the temperance community were also afforded special facilities for employing Sir John Lubbock's Day.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

There is a charming essay—I think in the Tatler, and I fancy from the pen of Sir Richard Steele—on a benefit given at Drury-Lane Theatre, in the reign of Queen Anne, to Thomas Betterton, the British Roscius, the famous Hamlet of Charles the Second's time, and who, in the winter of his life, had fallen upon evil days. I would that I were gifted with a tithe of the wit and pathos of Steele that I might plead the cause of an admirable English actor, Mr. John Baldwin Buckstone, now in his seventy-seventh year, hopelessly past work, and very sick and poor and miserable. He is, I am distressed to hear, paralysed. He has a family of young children by a second marriage; and all he has for their support is a pittance of sixty pounds a year from the Royal General Theatrical Fund, a most excellent institution, which does its very utmost with the very limited means at its command, and which does not receive half the public help to which it is entitled. Mr. Buckstone is the author of many dramas and farces which still keep the stage and are frequently performed; but the money accruing from this source goes not to him, but to his creditors under a recent failure.

The poor gentleman began his professional career nearly sixty years ago. During twenty-four years he was the lessee and manager of the Haymarket Theatre; his name is a household word, and identified with genuine English comedy. By his rare talents he has delighted two whole generations of playgoers. I cannot remember how many years I have known him; but I can sincerely say that in private life I never knew a more amiable and single-hearted man. It has come to this; that he is old and broken, and indigent. On four nights of the present week performances have been most generously given at the Haymarket for Mr. Buckstone's benefit; but it is the fag end of the season; the weather is too sultry for playgoing, and I do not expect much pecuniary profit from the four benefits. I want, if I can, to touch the hearts of the playgoers of the past—of those who can remember Mr. Buckstone as Bobby Trot in his own drama of "Luke the Labourer," and in "The Wreck Ashore." I want to move to compassion kindly people in the provinces, in the colonies, and in America: for this Journal goes everywhere. If anybody care to send me, to 46, Mecklenburgh-square, W.C., an obolus for the poor old Belisarius, who has won so many triumphs on the stage, and is now in such dire distress, the donation shall be thankfully acknowledged.

General Lazareff, the Russian commander who is "castigating" the savage Turcomans in Central Asia, seems to possess a peculiarly orginal and trenchant style. In a letter to a Turcoman chief the General quotes the Koran, and reminds him that Christians and Mohammedans are alike descendants of "the Prophet Adam." He pursues:—

> Each of us must strongly cling to and preserve his faith; and therefore your faith is no affair of ours. . . . . I am coming to quell your wicked and disobedient fellow-tribes. On arriving at Tchikislar I set free all prisoners of yours; but, at the present time, two of our soldiers are still in thrall among you. If you send them back to me you will do well; but, in the contrary case, I shall find them out myself—yea, even if they are under the earth.

> Here lie the bones of Matthew Prior,
> The son of Adam and of Eve:
> Can Bourbon or Nassau go higher?

What is the meaning of the following extraordinary statement in an obituary notice of the late Miss Margaret Sinclair, of Ulbster, who died on the 4th inst., at her residence in Sloane-street, in her eighty-seventh year. I read in the Times:—

> She (Miss Sinclair) had the curious fortune of being god-daughter to Prince Charles Edward's protectress (her great-grandmother, Lady Margaret Macdonald) and of being presented at Court in her extreme youth by the old Duchess of Gordon, the celebrated beauty.

The protectress of Prince Charles Edward was (unless I am mistaken) Flora Macdonald; and I am unable to discern (but I am so stupid!) how Flora could have been the great-grandmother of Miss Sinclair and her godmother as well. If longevity be chronic among the Macdonalds, Miss Sinclair's great-grandmother on the maternal side may have been flourishing in the days of the Master of Ravenswood.

"The world knows nothing of its greatest men." The proverb, methinks, is somewhat musty. Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. have had the courage to put forth the first instalment of a work which is to contain critical biographies of One Hundred of the Greatest Men that the world has ever seen. The first two volumes comprise portraits and notices of some thirty of the very foremost men of all the world. Among them I am puzzled to find Menander, of whose hundred comedies not one has come down to us, Aristophanes, who was a kind of Hellenic Mr. Burnand (only he was spiteful, which Mr. Burnand never is), and Lucretius, who was a great poet, but surely not one of the greatest. In one sense Lucretius may be qualified as the Roman Doctor Darwin. I mean the poetic Doctor, who wrote—

> Soon shall thine arm, unconquered Steam, afar
> Drag the slow barge or drive the rapid car,
> Or on wide-waving wings extended bear
> The flying chariot through the realms of air.

It is a long time since I read "De rerum naturâ" (in a Bohn's translation, cela va sans dire); yet I question whether Lucretius ever wrote anything finer than the remarkable poetic prophecy which I have just quoted. But we don't call Dr. Darwin one of the Greatest Men whom the world has ever seen. We call him a very clever and accomplished one.

"Greatest Men," ordinarily limited to six, used to be a favourite pastime on board ocean steamers. Each player wrote down his selection on a piece of paper, and then notes were compared. I remember the name of Rufus Choate once turning up as one of the greatest of men; but that was on board a Cunard Steamer. Let me try whether within the compass of a dozen lines I can give what would be an average selection of the Hundred Greatest Men.

Moses, Solomon, Alexander, Cæsar, Shakspeare, Dante, Homer, Phidias, Aristides, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Lycurgus, Antoninus Pius, Charlemagne, St. Paul, Pascal, Newton, Galileo, Kepler, Milton, Oliver Cromwell, Michel Angelo, Leonardo da Vinci, Rembrandt, Pascal, Lord Bacon, George Stephenson, James Watt, Matthew Boulton, St. Augustine, John Flaxman, Molière, Charles James Fox, George Washington, Fénélon, Colbert, Ignatius Loyola, Cervantes, Goethe, Byron, Schiller, Dr. Jenner, Captain Cook, Lord Somers, Lord Falkland, Cuvier, Harvey, Justinian, Henry Brougham, Edmund Burke, Mozart, Alfieri, Alexander von Humboldt, Henry Fielding, John Wesley, Christopher Columbus, Herman Cortes, the first William Pitt, Cardinal Richelieu, Voltaire, Mirabeau, Benjamin Franklin, John Howard, Thomas Clarkson, Rafaelle, Sir Walter Scott, Napoleon I., Wellington, Nelson, Sir Walter Raleigh, Edmund Spenser, Selden, John Hampden, Turenne, John Locke, Michael Faraday, Sir Humphry Davy, Jeremy Bentham, Vasco de Gama, Haroun al Raschid, Sir Christopher Wren, Sir William Jones, Dr. Priestley, Sir Robert Peel, Bossuet, Frederic the Great, San Carlo Borromeo, St. Vincent de Paul, Esquirol, Pinel, Sir David Brewster, John Knox, Martin Luther, Wycliffe, Savonarola, Marlborough, John Hunter, Calvin, and Elizabeth Fry.

The last was a meek Quaker woman, it is true; but to my mind she was as brave a Man as any of them, and should have her place in the virile list. It is very likely that fifty different readers of the catalogue which I have jotted down at random will at once declare—each from his or her own peculiar point of view—that at least fifty per cent of my greatest men have no right whatever to be in the schedule. And yet I have striven to suppress as far as possible that which my reason warned me was personal partiality on my part. I have named neither Charles Dickens, nor Thackeray, nor Hogarth, nor Bayle, nor Rabelais, nor Swift, nor Diderot, nor Hobbes, nor Jean Jacques Rousseau. And still, in my heart, I class them all among the Greatest.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

An agreeable duty was well performed by the Secretary for India and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Monday. It devolved upon Lord Cranbrook in the House of Lords to recapitulate with characteristic spirit the services of our troops in the Afghan War, and to move—

> That the thanks of this House be given to the Viceroy, Governor-General of India, and her Majesty's military forces engaged in the war in Afghanistan.

Earl Granville, implying that it was rather by accident than by the forethought of Lord Lytton that the expedition had been speedily successful, otherwise concurred affably in the vote of thanks, which was warmly supported by the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Northbrook, and Lord Napier of Magdala, who also paid a marked compliment to the native army, whilst Lord Cranbrook, in conclusion, defended the Viceroy from the criticisms of the noble Earl the Leader of the Opposition. In the Lower House the vote was not sanctioned so easily. The Resolutions moved by the Chancellor of the Exchequer were thus explicit:—

> 1. That the thanks of this House be given to the Right Honourable Lord Lytton, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and to Sir Frederick Haines, Commander-in-Chief, for the ability and judgment with which the resources of the British Empire in India have been applied to the support of the military operations in Afghanistan. 2. That the thanks of this House be given to Lieutenant-General Donald Martin Stewart, C.B.; Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel James Browne, K.C.S.I., C.B., V.C.; Lieutenant-General Frederick Francis Maude, C.B., V.C.; Major-General Michael Anthony Shrapnell Biddulph, R.A., C.B.; Major-General Frederick Sleigh Roberts, R.A., C.B., V.C.; and the other officers of the Army, both European and Native, for the intrepidity, skill, and perseverance displayed by them in the military operations in Afghanistan, and for their indefatigable zeal and exertions throughout the late campaign. 3. That this House doth highly approve and acknowledge the valour and perseverance displayed by the non-commissioned officers and private soldiers, both European and Native, employed in Afghanistan, and that the same be signified to them by the Commanders of the several corps, who are desired to thank them for their gallant behaviour. 4. That the said Resolutions be transmitted by Mr. Speaker to the said Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and that his Lordship be requested to communicate the same to the several officers referred to therein.

The Marquis of Hartington said there would be no difference of opinion as to the justice of granting a unanimous vote of thanks to the officers and men engaged in the war, but that there were serious political objections against including the name of Lord Lytton when the policy of the Government and the Viceroy had been contested in Parliament. As precedents for these objections the noble Lord pointed to Sir Robert Peel's allusion to the same delicate point after the first Afghan War, and to Mr. Disraeli's severe attack on Lord Canning when that celebrated Governor-General's name was similarly brought before the House subsequent to the suppression of the Indian Mutiny. Major O'Gorman went further than Lord Hartington. The hon. and gallant member moved that Lord Lytton's name should be erased. Mr. O'Donnell seconded Major O'Gorman. Sir Wilfrid Lawson thought it was a "second-class war," and one unworthy of being noticed, especially by the House, and said he should move "the previous question." But it appeared to be the general view that our military forces ought not to be deprived of the thanks of Parliament by reason of differences of opinion regarding the need of the war. Major O'Gorman's amendment was consequently negatived by 148 to 33 votes, Sir Wilfrid Lawson's by 140 to 28, and the Ministerial Resolutions were then agreed to amid cheers.

The Zulu War vote bade fair, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer made the Ministerial statement on Thursday week, to give rise to much stouter opposition than it actually received on Monday. The application was, in brief, for a vote of three millions—£2,450,000 for the Army, £500,000 for the Navy, and £50,000 for contingencies—but, as it was estimated that this would bring the total deficit for the year to £1,163,000, the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed to send a bill for the latter amount to the authorities of South Africa, asking meantime for permission to issue at home Exchequer Bonds to the extent of £1,200,000. But Mr. Childers objected that the Cape Colony had already spent £1,200,000, and would not feel disposed to pay any more; and the right hon. gentleman further questioned the hopefulness of the financial outlook. Sir Robert Peel directly challenged the accuracy of the estimate of three millions, and called attention to the fact that the expenditure for the Abyssinian War had exceeded nine millions. However, the motion that certain Exchequer Bonds falling due should be renewed was ultimately agreed to. On Monday, ere Committee of Supply could be reached, Mr. Rylands moved—

> That, in view of the large and increasing expenditure for military purposes in South Africa, this House is of opinion that the colonies of the Cape of Good Hope and Natal ought to be required to contribute a due proportion of the military expenditure incurred in the interest of those colonies, and which cannot with justice be made a charge upon the British Exchequer.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach adopted an amicable tone towards the hon. member for Burnley, and explained that the colonies would be called upon to pay their fair share for the war. Mr. Rylands then withdrew his motion. In Committee there was an animated discussion with regard to South African affairs generally, Mr. Courtney rising once again as the spokesman of the colonists, Mr. Forster and the Marquis of Hartington both appealing to the Government to be more frank respecting the prospects of peace and their South African policy generally. To which the Chancellor of the Exchequer made answer that the Government were endeavouring to bring about the confederation of the Colonies, whilst Sir Michael Hicks-Beach replied that Sir Garnet Wolseley was deputed to make peace. Eventually the Zulu vote was agreed to, as were the votes of £3,007,000 of the Army Estimates for provisions, forage, and transport, £810,600 for clothing establishments, £1,186,000 for out pensions, £1,100,000 home charges for Indian troops, £37,800 for the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, &c. It should be mentioned that Mr. Chamberlain's motion on the 1st inst. for a Royal Commission to inquire into the cause of recent wars in South Africa, beyond eliciting a valuable expression of opinion, did not bear fruit. The same may be said of Mr. Plimsoll's motion the same night to the effect that the rates in Malta should be levied by means of a house tax. Persevering in his task of making progress in supply, the Chancellor of the Exchequer held another Saturday sitting, and obtained several votes. With regard to the Irish University Bill, the haven of Committee was reached on Tuesday, but not before The O'Donoghue had stated that, owing to the pressure that had been put on him, he had withdrawn his procrastinating amendment, and a resultless debate had arisen on Mr. P. J. Smyth's motion to hand the subject over for consideration to a Royal Commission. Once in Committee on the measure, the House immediately agreed to clause 1; but Mr. Courtney moved an amendment to clause 2 to the effect that the powers of the Queen's University should be enlarged so as not to destroy that University by the bill. The Chancellor of the Exchequer thought they would have a very good nucleus to work upon in the senate of the Queen's University; and, on the withdrawal of the amendment, clause 2 was adopted. There was a tough fight over the remaining clauses that came up for consideration; but the Government succeeded in preserving their propositions intact.

In the House of Commons on Wednesday the consideration of the University Education (Ireland) Bill was resumed in Committee. Mr. Lowther moved a new clause imposing on the Senate the duty within twelve months of their appointment of submitting to the Lord Lieutenant a scheme for the better advancement of University education in Ireland by the provision of buildings and the establishment of exhibitions, scholarships, fellowships, and other prizes; the scheme to be laid before Parliament. Several members objected to portions of this clause, but it was eventually read the second time. Mr. Fawcett said that a greater misfortune could not be inflicted on an academic institution than to subject it to perpetual political intrigue. He therefore moved to omit the words "out of moneys to be provided by Parliament," and insert "out of the funds of the Commissioners of the temporalities of the Church of Ireland." After some discussion the amendment was withdrawn. An amendment, moved by Mr. Kavanagh, to introduce words which would have the effect of making the payments in the nature of result fees, was negatived. Other amendments were proposed, but were either withdrawn or negatived, and the bill passed through Committee.

In the House of Lords, on the 1st inst., the Earl of Dunraven strove to elicit whether the late Prince Napoleon held an appointment in the Army at the time of his death, but could only elicit a pitifully vague answer from Lord Bury. The same evening, various bills were read the third time and passed with that promptitude to which the noble Lord on the woolsack and Lord Redesdale have accustomed their Lordships. Besides the complimentary conversation on the Afghan War on Monday, there cropped up the subject of Parliamentary reporting in the House of Lords, the expediency of having ampler reports having been suggested by Lord Sudeley. Lord Beaconsfield (whose exemplary clearness of speech procures for his Lordship ever a fair report) thought things could not well be improved, but would next Session move for a Committee to inquire into the matter; and Earl Granville plainly intimated that it was to the muttering habit of peers that might be attributed any faultiness in the reporting. Thereafter, Lord Northbrook offered strong objections to the India Loan Bill, on the grounds that India ought not to be called upon to pay for an Imperial war. The debate was carried on by Lord Cranbrook, the Marquis of Ripon, the Lord Chancellor, Earl Granville, and the Duke of Richmond, and the bill was read the second time. Tuesday was the evening for Lord Redesdale's Greenwich dinner—the herald of the Ministerial whitebait banquet—and so twenty minutes sufficed for the pushing forward of the bills on the table.

The Temple Church is closed until the first Sunday in October.

Prebendary Irons, Rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, will preach in St. Paul's Cathedral on the remaining Sunday afternoons throughout the present month.

The Bishop of Llandaff, in opening a new church at Cardiff, said that a considerable number of dissenting ministers were applying to him for ordination.

A window has lately been erected at Tetbury church in memory of Mr. William Brookes, J.P., Major Royal North Gloucester Militia. Executed by Messrs. Heaton, Buller, and Co.

The Bishop of Peterborough on Tuesday week consecrated a new church which has been built at Oundle by the late Mr. Watts-Russell, and of which the cross was placed in position on the very day of the founder's death—viz., on March 6 last. It is from designs of Mr. Blomfield, and is on an unusual plan.

Lord Shaftesbury last Saturday unveiled a monument which has been erected outside St. John's, Broadway, Stratford, Essex, to the martyrs who suffered during the reign of Queen Mary in the neighbourhood, and of whom the number is said to have been eighteen. It has been executed by Mr. J. Newman, at a cost of £1000.

Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., offers, through the Missions to Seamen Society, a prize of £25 for the best handbook of suggestions to merchant officers willing to help their crews in spiritual matters, and to revive the ancient custom of conducting Divine worship on board ships at sea. Lord Aberdeen and the Bishop of Dover are amongst the adjudicators.

The Rev. J. W. Spencer, M.A., Incumbent of St. Anne's, Turton, has received from his late parishioners and friends at Great Sankey an illuminated address and purse containing £57 10s.; the Rev. J. Creagh Coen, late Vicar of Northmoor, on his preferment to the vicarage of Talland, a marble dining-room clock; and the Rev. C. W. Harvey, M.A., F.M.S., Curate of Ewelme, Oxon, a salver and egg-stand by the parishioners, on his preferment to Throcking Rectory, Herts.

Spilsby church, Lincolnshire, was reopened on St. James's Day, after having undergone a thorough restoration and enlargement under the superintendence of Mr. W. Smith, of John-street, Adelphi. The Bishop of the diocese was present, supported by the Bishop of Nottingham and about five-and-twenty clergy of the district. Four windows have been given to the church: the east one by the relatives of the hev. Thomas Holway, for thirty years Vicar; the west one by Miss Russell, of Hundleby; and one in the south aisle by Mr. Thomas Hill, of Hampstead, in memory of his father, a native of Spilsby. These three are by Messrs. Clayton and Bell; the fourth, in memory of Mr. W. Walker and two sons, given by his widow, is by Messrs. Heaton and Butler. The church is a good specimen of Decorative and Perpendicular work, and, a south aisle havin been added, it now has four aisles.

The inhabitants of the picturesque little village of Chenies, Bucks, have presented their Rector, the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, with an address begging him to accept their respectful and hearty congratulations on his entering the fiftieth year of his pastoral labour among them, testifying to the high value they set upon his spiritual ministrations, and expressing their gratitude for the deep interest he has for so many years taken in the spiritual and temporal welfare of them all. With their thanks they also offer to his Lordship and Lady Wriothesley Russell congratulations on the attainment of their golden wedding.

The members of both Houses of Convocation of Canterbury on Thursday week signed an address in answer to her Majesty's letters of business. With reference to the proposed alterations in the Prayer-book, an addition was made to the address by the Lower and assented to by the Upper House, stating that the immediate sanction of both Houses of Parliament to the proposals was not invited.—Convocation of York met again the same day and discussed the Athanasian Creed, upon a motion of the Bishop of Durham that its use should be optional. The Upper House carried this reform, but the Lower House rejected it by 35 to 8.

The Bishop of Truro presided on Monday at a meeting to take into consideration the building of a cathedral. It was reported that there was in hand £14,223, the amount promised to this time being £32,715. It was calculated that the subscriptions would amount to about £5000 per year, and it was thought this would be sufficient to commence the building of the cathedral. The design of Mr. Pearson has generally been approved by the committee. The estimated cost of the cathedral is £35,000. The executive committee were instructed to take the necessary steps to purchase the land required and clear the old church away before next summer.

The new church at Radcliffe, near Nottingham, was completed on the 25th ult. by the solemn laying of the last stone. At the appointment of the Rev. John Cullen, in 1874, the ecclesiastical condition of the parish was at a very low ebb; and as the schools were not efficient, they called for the new Vicar's first efforts. After some difficulty, he succeeded in engaging an efficient master and mistress, with a staff of under-teachers, who now number eight altogether. The patron, Earl Manvers, built him a new school; and the scholars have increased from eighty to 270, the grant from Government being £194 per annum, instead of £14. Mr. Cullen then set to work at the church, which had become too small for the congregations; and the new edifice is to cost £4500.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Eton College closed yesterday week for the autumn vacation. In the list of elections to Eton Foundation published in our last issue, the name Hoskyns should have been Hoskyns-Abrahall.—Mr. Walter, M.P., distributed the prizes at Reading School on Tuesday last week, when a handsome timepiece was presented to the Head Master; on Wednesday Sir Ralph Lingen presided and Lady Lingen presented the prizes at the Middle-Class School, Cowper-street, City-road; and the Bishop of Exeter laid the corner-stone of a new grammar school, which is to supersede the old building in the High-street, Exeter, the new building being estimated to cost about £14,000. On Thursday Professor Huxley presided at the distribution of prizes at University College School; the Lord Mayor gave the prizes at Christ's Hospital; Canon Gregory at St. John's Middle-Class Schools, Kensington; the Hon. C. E. Curzon at the Godolphin School; and the prizes were given the same day at the King's School, Canterbury, at Bradfield College, and at Dunheved College, Cornwall. Yesterday week Mr. Pearson, Q.C., presided at the prize distribution at the Islington Proprietary School; and Queen Elizabeth's School, Mansfield (reopened last year by Lord Belper) had its first speech day under the new scheme, in the presence of Mr. T. E. Smith, M.P. Earl Powis distributed the prizes to the successful scholars at Dulwich College on Saturday last, and expressed his belief that a great future was before the school.

WESLEYAN CONFERENCE PRESIDENT.

The newly-elected President for this year is the Rev. Benjamin Gregory. He was preferred to the highest office that Methodism can confer upon him by the votes of a very large majority of his brethren recently assembled, and his appointment has been received with satisfaction in all the circuits and districts. Mr. Gregory was born on Nov. 29, 1819, at Stokesley, in the North Riding of Yorkshire. He was educated at Woodhouse Grove School, where he spent twelve years—six as a scholar and six as a tutor. Mr. Gregory entered the Wesleyan ministry in the year 1840, and from that time to this has been advancing in usefulness and in the esteem of his brethren. His preaching is scholarly, intellectual, and at the same time spiritual and practical. In his early days he was the special friend of the young, and was very diligent and successful in literary and scientific classes for young people.

In the year 1868 Mr. Gregory was appointed to the office of Connexional Editor, the duties of which include much more than the editing of the Wesleyan Magazine; and in the office of editor of that periodical he has shown considerable judgment and skill. While on circuit work he was very acceptable and successful as a minister and pastor. He travelled in the Southampton, Oxford, Waterloo, and other important circuits. He was elected into the Legal Hundred in the year 1867.

In the Presidential Chair Mr. Gregory is gentle, impartial, clear in his ruling, and decided in his conduct of the various and sometimes difficult business which the Conference has to transact.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Appleton and Co., Bradford.

Mr. J. Abbiss, J.P., opened last Saturday the High Cross Coffee Palace, Tottenham-green.

The troops at Aldershott, under the command of General Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., had a sham fight on Tuesday, under a general idea that an army corps at Reading had detached a force to make a raid on Farnham, which was covered by a force detached from Alton and Petersfield.

The yearly show of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society opened in Leeds on Tuesday, on a favourable site in the Cardigan Fields, about a mile to the west of Leeds, twenty-eight acres having been carefully prepared for the purposes of the exhibition. Unfavourable weather set in early in the morning, and the prospects of the show were thus materially injured. The entries in cattle show a falling off, but in other departments they compare favourably with previous years. In the evening the Mayor of Leeds (Alderman Addyman) entertained the officers and council of the society at dinner in the Townhall, and above 200 gentlemen were present. The show next year will be at Rotherham.

THE MAGAZINES

The Fortnightly Review claims the leading place among the magazines of the month in virtue of the late Mr. Senior's record of his conversations with Prince Napoleon. These conversations, which turn principally on the state of the Italian and Polish questions in 1860-2, will do the Prince no discredit with Liberal politicians, while they are by no means calculated to diminish the disfavour with which he is regarded by the clerical party. To impartial readers they will suggest that a personage with so many qualifications for public usefulness should by the accident of birth have been placed in a position where he is so likely to be mischievous. Another important paper, from the pen of the Rev. T. W. Fowle, discusses the decay of self-government in villages, and makes useful and practical suggestions for its restoration. "Indian Trades Unionism" is a subject with a double aspect, accordingly as it relates to the almost instinctive combinations of the native artisan community, or to the organisation of the European railway servants. Each department of the question presents features of striking and almost dramatic interest, ably and pithily stated by Mr. Trant. The pessimism of Mr. Traill's eloquent poem, "The Ants' Nest," an allegory of human life, and the optimism of Dr. Maudsley's exposition of life from the materialistic point of view, balance each other so perfectly, that between them the question remains as it was. Mr. Morley's apology for the obstructive members of the House of Commons is not worthy of him. It rests altogether upon a sophistical confusion between delay for discussion's sake and delay for obstruction's sake. Mr. O'Connor Power, professing to explain away the difficulties alleged against Home Rule, omits the capital one of inducing a local Irish legislative body to confine itself to local affairs. He says himself, indeed, that one of the first proceedings of such a body would be to develop Irish manufactures, which can only mean that it would endeavour to prohibit English ones.

The most important among the contents of the Nineteenth Century relate to political or administrative topics. Mr. Gladstone sums up his grounds of complaint against the Government in what is practically a powerful electioneering address. Sir Henry Rawlinson reviews the gains of the recent campaign in Afghanistan, but fears they may be more than balanced if Russia is allowed to establish herself in Merv or Herat. Mr. E. J. Wilson vigorously assails the scheme for an indirect endowment of a Roman Catholic University in Ireland. Mr. Guinness Rogers (who seems to be under the impression that Mr. W. H. Smith and Colonel Stanley were brought into the Cabinet in succession to Lords Derby and Carnarvon) appeals to Liberal electors to discard their various shibboleths for the common good, but does not say whether he will follow his own advice with respect to his own shibboleth of disestablishment. General Adye resolutely defends the system of short service in the Army, and attributes its apparent breakdown in the South African campaign to remediable causes. Mr. Caird's interesting notes of his official mission to India contain much that is reassuring with reference to the position and prospects of Indian agriculture. In common, however, with most other competent observers, he laments the intricacy and expensiveness of the English judicial system, so unsuitable to a simple people. He quotes a remarkable saying of a native Rajah:—"English rule will commence its downfall when natives, either Hindu or Mohammedan, are intrusted with leading positions." Mr. Matthew Arnold takes occasion, from the success of the Comédie Française in London, to reiterate his plea for a State endowment of the legitimate drama; and Mr. Wedmore, in an impartial review of Mr. Whistler's position as a painter, endeavours to distinguish between the artist's native genius and his acquired crotchets.

The Contemporary Review has some valuable articles, pre-eminent among which are Professor von Schulte's review of the present religious condition of Germany and Mr. Crompton's energetic appeal in favour of cheap justice. One point comes out very strongly in Professor Schulte's essay—the double mischief which the Ultramontane clergy in Germany are doing their co-religionists, estranging them from social intercourse with Protestants and discouraging the higher education among them. In consequence, they are falling more and more into the background, and official positions will be in process of time almost exclusively filled by Protestants and Jews. The Catholicism of Austria, once so bigoted a country, would seem to be very little more than nominal. Professor Monier Williams's third paper on Indian religions contains an account of the various sects originated by Hindu monotheistic reformers, more numerous and important than is generally imagined. The most remarkable of these is the Sikhs, whose transformation from a band of pious and innocent devotees into a great military community is one of the most curious chapters of Indian history. Mr. Drew's memoir and estimate of Professor Bushnell, Mr. Karl Blind's historical account of conspiracies in Russia, chiefly in relation to the serf question; and M. Monod's letter from France, are also worthy of serious attention.

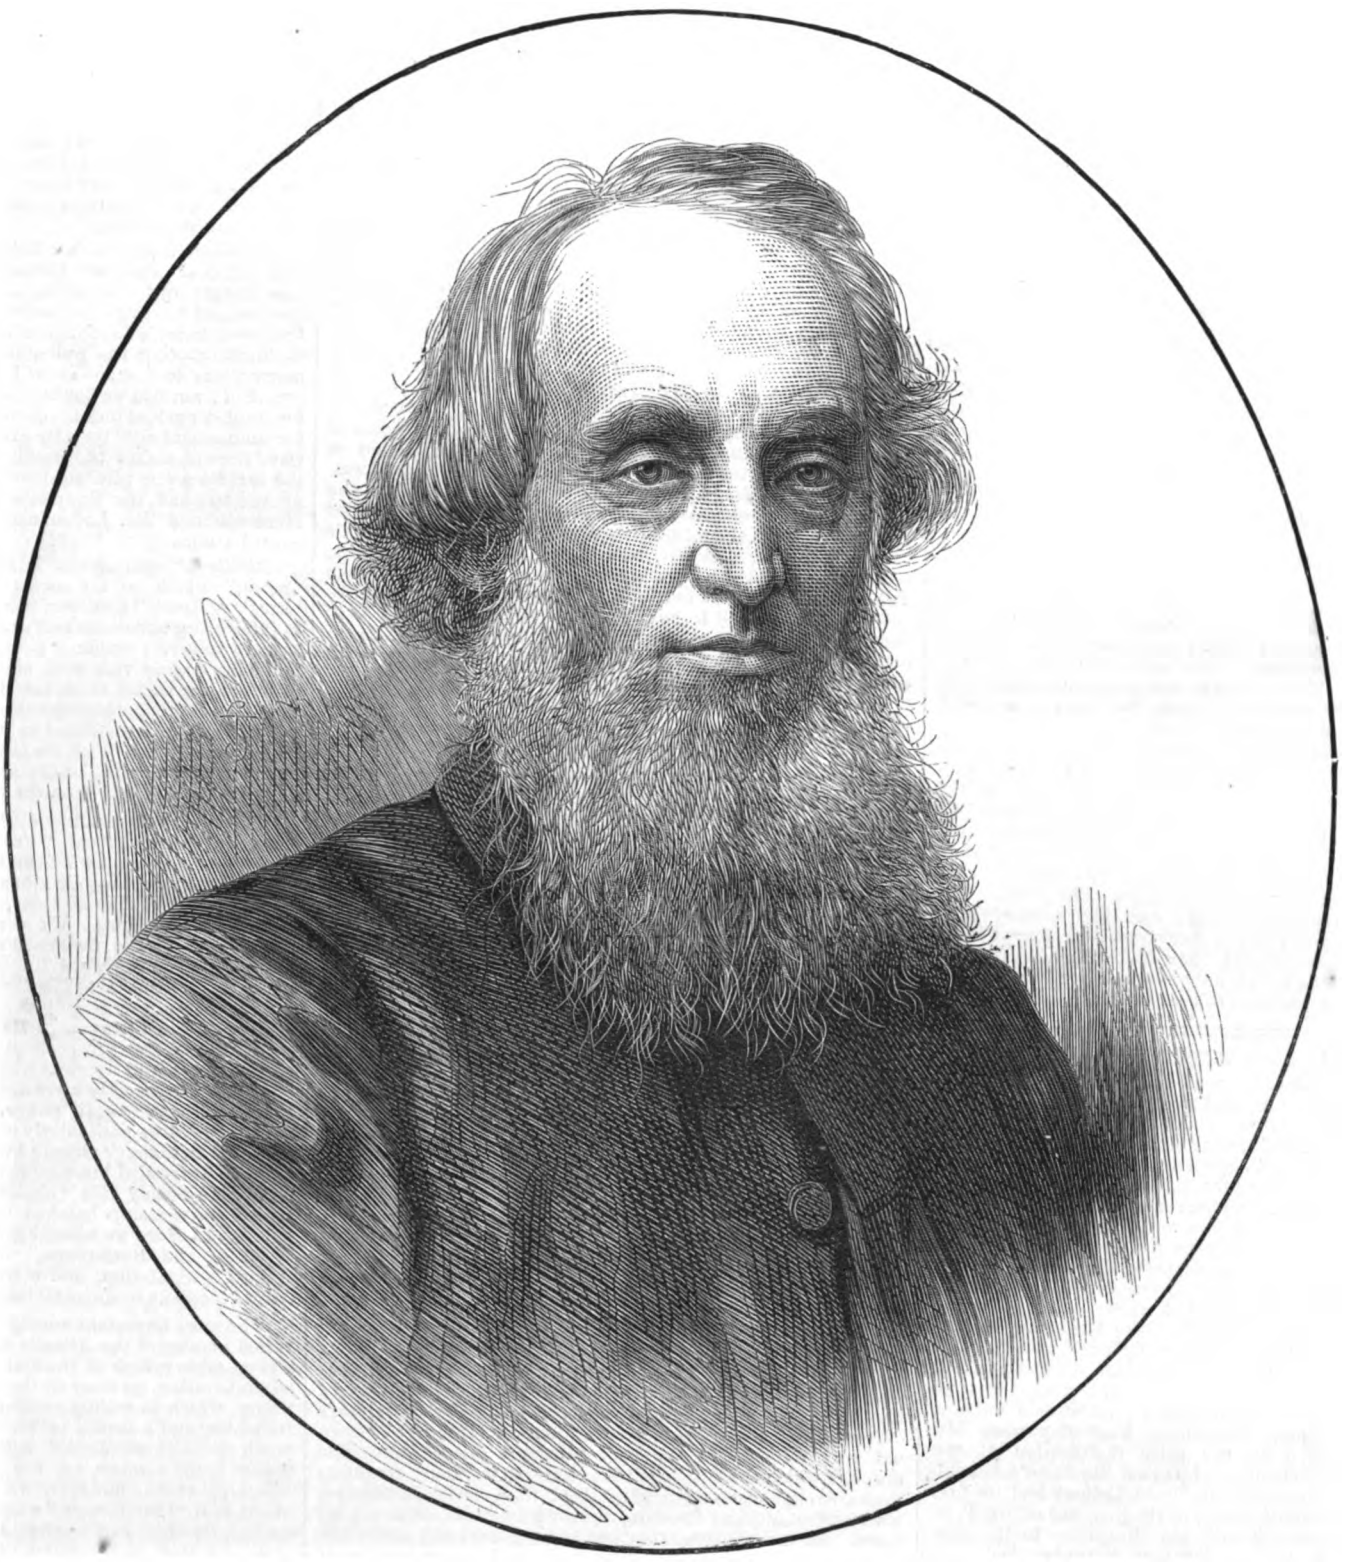
Everybody will read Mr. Black's "White Wings" in the Cornhill, but we are not sure that anybody will be altogether pleased with it. It is clever, easy, and humorous; but quite as much a narrative of a tour as a novel, and if continued with the same deficiency in concentrated interest, will prove a book as easy to lay down as it certainly is to take up. The same slightness of treatment is apparent in "The Countess's Ruby," an Americo-Continental story in the style of Mr. James, pleasant and witty enough, but lacking in sustained interest. It is probably to a member of the Burma political agency that we are indebted for an historical review of the relations between the English and Burmese Governments. The latter have at all times acted as though determined to coerce the former into annexation, and it seems doubtful whether the situation is susceptible of any other solution. "The Influence of the Mind upon the Body" is full of striking instances of the fact; but are the instances always facts? An indictment of Democracy for its alleged pernicious influence upon art has some true counts and more false ones. It is ridiculous to imply that the authors of "Romola" and "Les Misérables" find no public for imaginative representations of Italian or French history, or that writers of inferior calibre ought to find any. If Democracy has really prevented Mr. Tennyson from writing an epic, Democracy has done Mr. Tennyson a very good turn.

The present number of the new series of Fraser is a great improvement upon its predecessor. Mr. Blackmore's "Mary Anerley," though lacking the simplicity of this delightful novelist's first manner, is, in point of style, an elaborate work of art, especially when descriptions of natural scenery are introduced. Considerable attention will be attracted by Count Orsi's account of Louis Napoleon's abortive expedition to Boulogne, the miscarriage of which is attributed to its having arrived a day too late, thus giving the commandant time to return to his post and recall the wavering garrison to their allegiance. It is, nevertheless, highly improbable that the defection of the troops at Boulogne would have been followed by any corresponding movement at that period, though the case might have been different if the expedition had synchronised with the bombardment of Acre or the restoration of the ashes of Napoleon. Miss Helen Zimmern contributes a remarkably lively and elegant criticism on the novels of Sacher Masoch, an Austro-Polish novelist, whose better works seem likely to acquire an European reputation from their merits as stories, their fidelity of local colouring, and their representative character as expressions of Slavonic ideas. In emulation of Balzac, Sacher Masoch proposes to write the drama of human existence in a series of tales, which ambitious scheme is now in process of execution. Mr. Laughton's paper on weather forecasts is very clear and interesting; the remaining papers, except Mr. Lang's interesting but inconclusive essay on the supposed Greek incursion into Egypt anterior to the Trojan war, are mere padding.

Macmillan begins with a living Professor, and ends with a deceased one. Professor Clifford's lecture on "boundaries" is less interesting for anything actually taught in it than as a specimen of the lamented author's method of teaching; while Professor Seeley's discourse on history and politics is important as foreshadowing the probable course of his instruction for many years to come. It will unquestionably be sound and practical; nor can we doubt that the precepts of Baron Stein's biographer against undue concessions to the popular demand for amusement will be fully exemplified by his practice. Mr. Cave Browne makes the archiepiscopal portraits at Lambeth the text for a very pleasant bit of biography; and the Republic of Andorra and the Egyptian museum at Boulak afford Mr. Menteath and Mr. Loftie matter for slight but agreeable contributions.

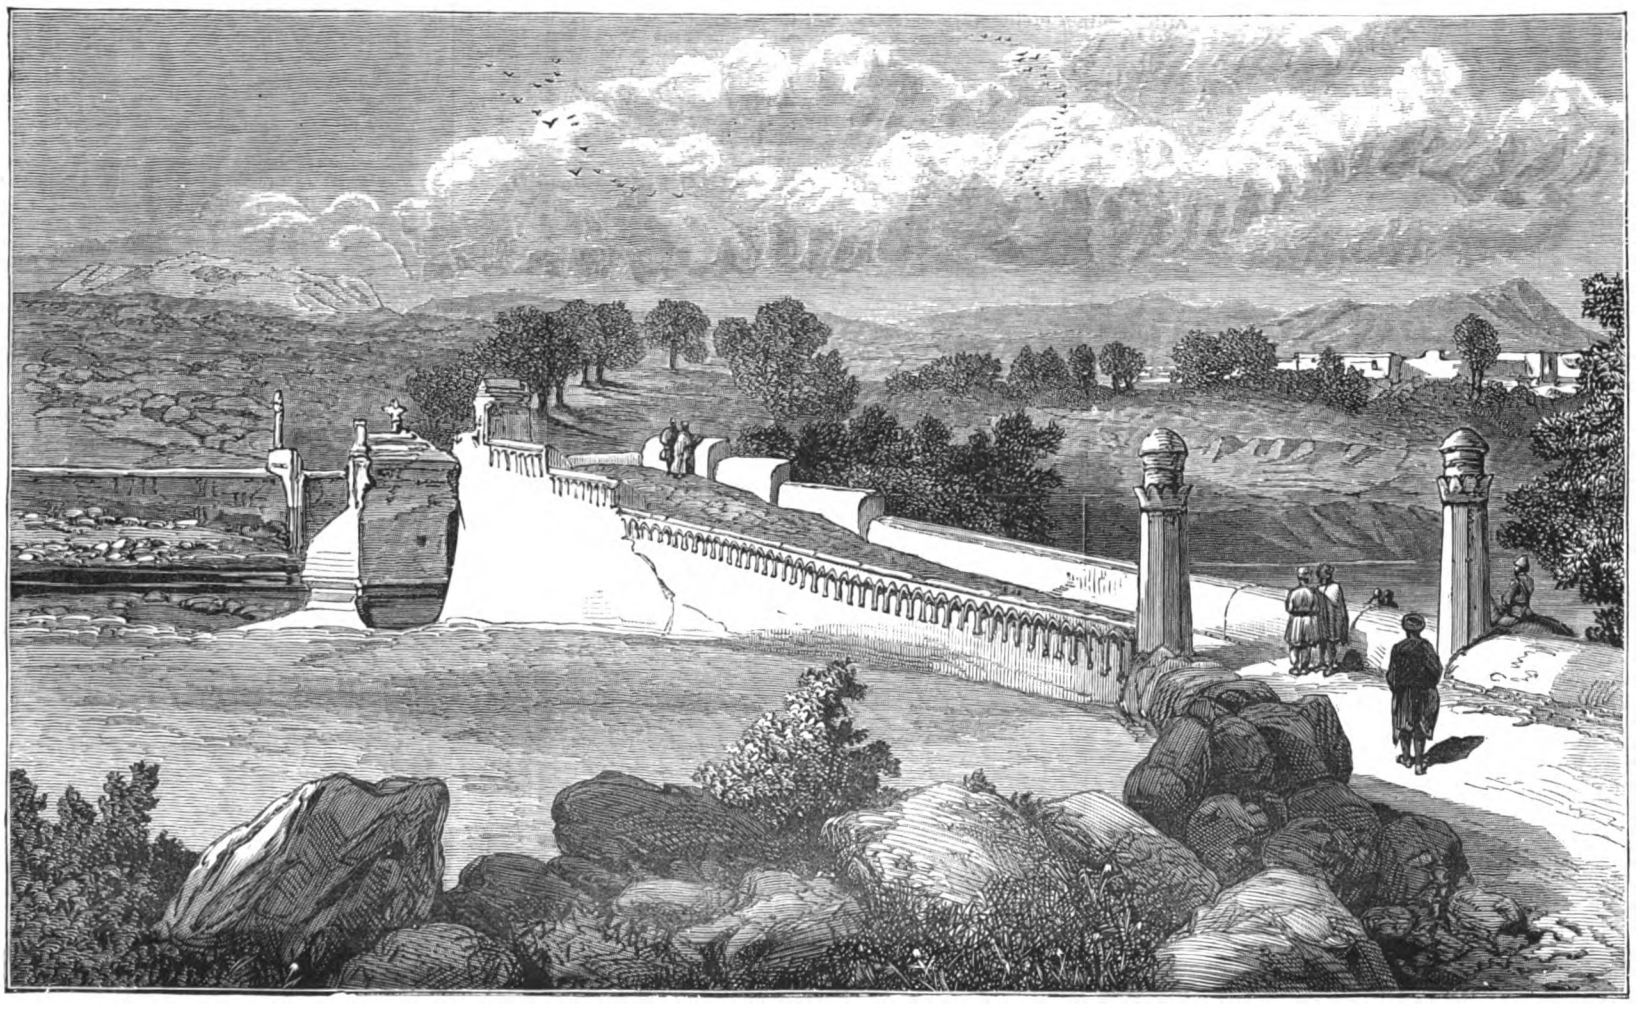
Blackwood commences a new story, "Godfrey's White Queen," which so far seems somewhat melodramatic and unreal. "Reata," however, is in the greatest force, abounding in interesting situations and graphic descriptions, while vividly true to nature. Some "Notes from Cyprus" give a much more favourable view both of the actual and potential condition of the island than has usually been taken of late, and justify the anticipation that this much-abused acquisition may yet prove of great political as well as economical importance. An account of the Stock Exchange is brimfull of information; and the case of the double standard is pleaded with much vigour in a disquisition on the difficulties of Indian finance.

The most entertaining contributions to Temple Bar, after the usual instalment of "Probation," are Mr. Townshend Mayer's sketch of the celebrated Duchess of Devonshire, a paper of theatrical recollections by an habitué who remembers Miss O'Neil and Mrs. Siddons, and a picturesque account of West Pembrokeshire. We are glad to find Mr. Swinburne reappearing in the Gentleman's Magazine with a criticism on the old play of Edward the Third, sometimes, though very wrongly, attributed to Shakspeare. The substance of Mr. Swinburne's criticism is just and discerning, the style mannered and magniloquent. Mr. Justin M'Carthy's estimate of the character and prospects of Prince Napoleon is a fair and impartial attempt to deal with a problem whose elements are as yet but imperfectly known. "Under which Lord" is continued with its usual power. Belgravia is amusing, but contains nothing particularly noticeable. Time depends chiefly upon its fictions, "Greene Ferne Farm" still displaying the author's unrivalled knowledge of rustic character and scenery, and "The Seamy Side" challenging attention by its forcible portrait of a scamp hatched by a gleam of prosperity into a villain. In Home we have chiefly to remark the continuation of "Daisies and Buttercups," which is fully worthy of Mrs. Riddell's reputation, and a lively sketch of some of the difficulties incident to the establishment of a new periodical.



The most important among the contents of an excellent and varied number of the Atlantic Monthly are political, and include a favourable review of the first two years of President Hayes's administration, an essay on the negro exodus from the Southern States, which is mainly attributed to the restriction upon the franchise, and a sketch of W. L. Garrison. It would take too much space to enumerate half the valuable and entertaining papers in the number, and the same remark applies to Scribner's Monthly, where, however, we must particularise the initial chapters of "Confidences," a new example of Mr. Henry James's apparently slack and negligent, but in reality smart and acute style of fiction, and memoirs of Mr. Whistler and the Quaker poet Whittier, with engraved illustrations after the former and select poems from the latter. An illustrated description of the Festiniog narrow-gauge railway will acquaint many Englishmen for the first time with one of the engineering wonders of their own country.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, having bought the copyright of David Roberts's well-known "Holy Land," have begun the republication of the work in monthly parts, price sevenpence. The first part lies before us, and seems to promise the fulfilment of the pledge of the publishers that care is being taken to secure an accurate reproduction of the plates, the illustrations being re-drawn from the original folio edition. The original edition has become so scarce that a copy lately fetched £26 10s. No doubt, therefore, this reproduction will be acceptable to many.—We have also received from the same firm their Family Magazine, with its usual amount of varied excellence, pictorial and descriptive; the second part of their Fine-Art Edition of Longfellow's Poems, profusely illustrated; the twenty-first part of their illustrated Russo-Turkish War; and their Magazine of Art.



We have to acknowledge the Month, Tinsley's, Good Words, Churchman's Shilling Magazine, the Biograph; Parts 1 and 2 of Greenhouse Favourites, published by Groombridge and Sons—these parts (each having two coloured plates) being devoted to the camellia and fuchsia, with practical directions for their management and cultivation; the second part of "The Etcher," a magazine of the etched work of Artists, containing three examples; the Fern World, the Greenhouse, Masonic Magazine, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Familiar Wild Flowers, Haydn's Dictionary of Popular Domestic Medicine, Haydn's Bible Dictionary, Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, Josephus, Men of Mark, Science Gossip, Science for All, Mission Life, Excelsior, Kind Words, Argosy, St. James's Magazine, Our Native Land, Charing-cross Magazine, Golden Childhood, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, Myra's Journal of Dress and Needlework, Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal, Sylvia's Home Journal, the Ladies' Treasury, Weldon's Ladies' Journal, La Mode Illustrée for July; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round (with the Summer Number), Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardener's Magazine, Day of Rest, Weekly Welcome, Social Notes, Young People's Paper, Sunday Reading for the Young, the Christian Age, and the Boys' Own Paper. In response to numerous and urgent appeals, the Religious Tract Society has decided to issue the "Girls' Own Paper," as a companion to the "Boys' Own Paper," which has already obtained so wide a circulation.

A bazaar was opened on Monday at Hawarden Castle, the residence of Mr. Gladstone, in aid of the funds of eight parochial schools in Hawarden parish. Mrs. Gladstone and the Misses Gladstone were among the stall-holders.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Four fine days in succession is far too much to hope for this year, so, after a beautiful beginning to the Goodwood week, it was accepted almost as a matter of course that the Cup day should be showery and dull. However, nearly all the rain fell before noon, and though it was rather wet under foot, those who had waded through the "slough of despond" at Ascot never thought of grumbling. A rather poor programme opened with the Racing Stakes, in which Zut, who looked a different horse from the stale, jaded colt that we saw at Ascot, made an example of Abbot of St. Mary's and Strathern. Certainly the course was only a mile, and they were not very formidable antagonists, still it was something to know that the Frenchman was fresh and well again. Rosbach (8st 5lb.) had an easy task in the Chichester Stakes, in which Cradle (7st. 8lb.) finished second to him, and, had this pair got off well in the Steward's Cup on Tuesday, Peter would probably have had far more trouble in winning. Six starters was a very fair complement for the Cup, in which, last year, Kincsem had only two opponents. Of course, after his great deeds at Ascot, Isonomy was a strong favourite; yet Parole, Touchet, and Peter were all heavily backed, and even Reefer and The Bear found a few supporters. The weight carried by the last mentioned was only 7st. 4lb., and, when the flag fell at the second attempt, Lemaire rattled him along at his best pace, and, at the half distance, held a lead of fully 150 yards from Touchet, next to whom came the favourite. From this point the leader gradually came back; but, sticking gamely to his work, he had everything, except Isonomy, in hopeless difficulties a long way from home. Mr. Gretton's champion joined him at the rails, cantered quietly with him until reaching the distance, and then strode away at his leisure, and won with absurd ease by three lengths. Parole trotted in a very bad third, and the rest walked past the post. As the American representative was in receipt of no less than 12lb. from the winner, the result of the Newmarket Handicap has been most decisively reversed, and the pæans of triumph on the other side of the Atlantic will be moderated for a time. The fact is that, beyond the first and second, there was not a genuine stayer in the race, though, as Peter had been trained expressly for the Stewards' Cup, he could not reasonably be expected to gallop two miles and a half, and must be allowed another chance before being condemned as a T.Y.C. horse only. The defeat of Out of Bounds and Alchemist by Japonica, in the Singleton Stakes, was one of the very few reverses that backers sustained during the week, and certainly the contradictory running of Jennings's filly at Goodwood was very difficult to understand. For some weeks past rumour has been busy with the merits of Robert the Devil, a "dark" youngster belonging to Mr. Charles Brewer, the well-known commission agent; and the Rous Memorial Stakes, which was worth upwards of £2000, was selected for his début. Dora and five others opposed him, but he had the race in hand a long way from home, and will now be kept in reserve for some of the rich stakes at Newmarket in the autumn.

In spite of her roaring, Reconciliation beat her three opponents very easily in the Nassau Stakes. It was very pleasant to see Fordham once more in the black and gold of Mr. Bowes, and still more so to see him also secure the next two races in rare style. In a field of fourteen, which included Belphœbe (8st. 12lb.) and Lord Clive (8st. 7lb.), as little as 5 to 2 was accepted about Master Kildare (9st.) for the Chesterfield Cup. He, too, like Reconciliation, is "musical," yet he beat everything except Villager (6st. 8lb.), who secured the verdict by ten lengths. Brother to Ersilia ran with great gameness in the Molecomb Stakes, and, after appearing well beaten at one period of the race, placed the rich stake to the credit of Mr. Beddington; and, with the victory of Flavius (8st. 4lb.) in the Corinthian Plate, a grand week for the backers was brought to a close.

The second half of the Sussex fortnight began on Tuesday at Brighton. The Corporation Stakes was regarded as a match between Douranee and Early Morn, and, as the Duke of Westminster's filly was asked to concede 10 lb. and sex allowance, there was little to choose between them in the betting. The finish was in exact accordance with the quotations, as, after a punishing struggle, Douranee won by a head. Villager (6st. 10lb.) could not follow up his Chesterfield Cup victory in the Brighton Stakes, which went to Advance (8st.) and Fordham; and the popular jockey also landed the Juvenile Stakes on Despotism, and a Maiden Plate on the Carine filly. Cradle (9st. 7lb.) was second to Preciosa (9st. 4lb.) in the Marine Plate; there were fourteen behind the pair; and a better day's sport has never been seen at Brighton. Four started on Wednesday for the Brighton Cup, which was won by Isonomy; Paul's Cray being second, and Drumhead third. The Pall Mall Gazette correspondent at Brighton states that the race was won by three parts of a length, and that there was a length between second and third. Mr. Gretton's Monk, ridden by Fordham, was the other runner; but he was only started in order to make up the required complement of four, without which the Cup would not have been given. Although Isonomy won by only three parts of a length, he had the race in hand all the way, and is evidently a good stayer.

In spite of the wonderful success of the gentlemen at Goodwood, Mr. Carew-Gibson had but a poor sale at Sandgate last Saturday. Naturally the Rosicrucians, of which he sold a dozen, did best, a colt by that horse from May Queen making the top price—900 gs. A son of Rosicrucian and Dark Blue (520 gs.) came next, followed by a colt by Hermit—Hue and Cry (510 gs.) and a colt by Macaroni—Miss Glasgow (500 gs.). The thirty-four sold averaged 181 gs., a poor price even in these times: and seven brood mares were almost given away.

A most interesting cricket-match between Sussex and Kent at the end of last week ended in the victory of the former by eleven runs, a result mainly due to the fine bowling of Mr. Pedley, who, in the second innings of Kent, took seven wickets for thirty-six runs. Phillips (58 and 34) batted finely for the winners; and on the other side the Hon. Ivo Bligh (43) and Messrs. Absalom (31 and, not out, 26) and Blackman (36) did best. Another splendid match was that between Gloucestershire and Yorkshire, in which the representatives of the "big county" won by seven runs. Ulyett (98) was top scorer for the winners, and Messrs. Gilbert (97) and Bush (57) did their best to avert defeat. Rugby beat Marlborough by ninety-seven runs, and Leslie, who scored eighty for the former school, is one of the hardest hitters that we have seen for some little time. Northamptonshire v. Gloucestershire has resulted in a draw, the most notable play being shown by Dr. W. G. Grace (102) and Oscroft (76 and 28). At the time of writing, the first match of the Canterbury Week has not been finished.

The Lawn-Tennis Tournament at the Hyde, Hendon, was, after numerous delays and postponements, brought to a conclusion last Saturday, the final matches causing much interest. That for the Handicap Cup, value 20 guineas, resulted in the victory of Mr. Otway E. Woodhouse over Mr. F. G. Horne, who takes the five-guinea prize by three sets to one. For the Silver Racket there were three competitors left in, Mr. Lawford, Mr. H. G. Rawson, and Mr. Cole. Mr. Lawford beat Mr. Cole by two sets to love, and then had to meet Mr. Rawson, who proved too much for his opponent, and carried off the prize after a most exciting match, winning by two sets to one.

The annual regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron began on Tuesday morning with a race for the Queen's Cup, value £100, for all yachts belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron, and for which the following vessels were entered:—Enchantress (Colonel Owen Williams), Hildegarde (the Prince of Wales), Shark (the Duke of Rutland), Nixie (Mr. Edward Baring), Bloodhound (the Marquis of Ailsa), Cetonia (the Earl of Gosford), Aline (Lord Hastings), Raven (Lieutenant-Colonel Sterling), Formosa (Mr. F. Sloane Stanley), Lulworth (Mr. Adrian Hope), Egeria (Mr. J. Mulholland, M.P.). A time race, to be sailed for over a course from the Club-house to the Nab Light and back to Lymington Spit, returning to the Club-house at Cowes. An excellent flying start was made at ten o'clock. Just as the starting-gun was fired the Enchantress and Shark got into collision, and the latter, having split her mainsail, was obliged to give up the race, the Egeria being the first to pass the line, followed closely by the Hildegarde. When passing the Bellisle corvette the Lulworth was leading, but for a very brief period, for, when passing the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, the Formosa overhauled all the other yachts, soon passed them, and off old Castle Point was leading the Egeria about a minute, and there was about the same between the Egeria and Lulworth. On the return to Cowes the Formosa lost her advanced position, and went to leeward altogether, for when the Enchantress had been greeted with the welcome gun as the first vessel the Formosa was not in sight, her place having been taken by the Cetonia, and the Hildegarde had taken that of the Egeria. The race finished as follows:—

		H. M. S.			H. M. S.
Enchantress	...	2 18 2	Aline	... ...	2 39 28
Cetonia	...	2 33 24	Formosa	... ...	2 40 21
Hildegarde	...	2 36 13	Raven	... ...	3 1 44
Egeria	...	2 37 18

Thus the Egeria won by 58 sec. only. So close a match has not been sailed for many years past. Wednesday morning was appointed for a race for £100, given by the Royal Yacht Squadron, for yawls, for which the Latona, Raven, and Hypatia were entered. Shortly before the time for starting, the Hypatia signified her intention not to start, and, as it was conditional that three should start or no race, the race fell through.

Doggett's coat and badge were yesterday week rowed for from London Bridge to Chelsea. Henry Cordery, of Putney, won by a length over Joseph J. Banks, of Rotherhithe.

The Whitehall Swimming Club gave an entertainment at the Floating Bath, Northumberland Avenue, on Thursday week. The races were keenly contested, and were witnessed by a goodly assemblage of ladies and gentlemen. Some ornamental swimming followed.

Mr. W. F. F. Boughey, of the Oxford Circuit, and Recorder of Shrewsbury, has been appointed stipendiary magistrate for South Staffordshire, in the place of Mr. Spooner, resigned.—The South Shields stipendiary magistrate, Mr. Joseph Augustus Yorke, has resigned his appointment.

According to custom, the inspection of the Leavesden Imbecile Asylum by the members of the Metropolitan Asylums Board took place last Saturday. There are within 2000 or 3000 patients in the asylum, and the daily average cost is 8d. a head. The inspection had a satisfactory result.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 1st, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

HERR F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly-nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article..
It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair, never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. Second—Its easy application without any previous preparation of the hair; without that sticky and disagreeable sulphur odour found and complained of in other preparations. It never stains the skin or linen. It retains the hair in any desired position, and is cooling and cleansing to the scalp.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar, hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.
A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

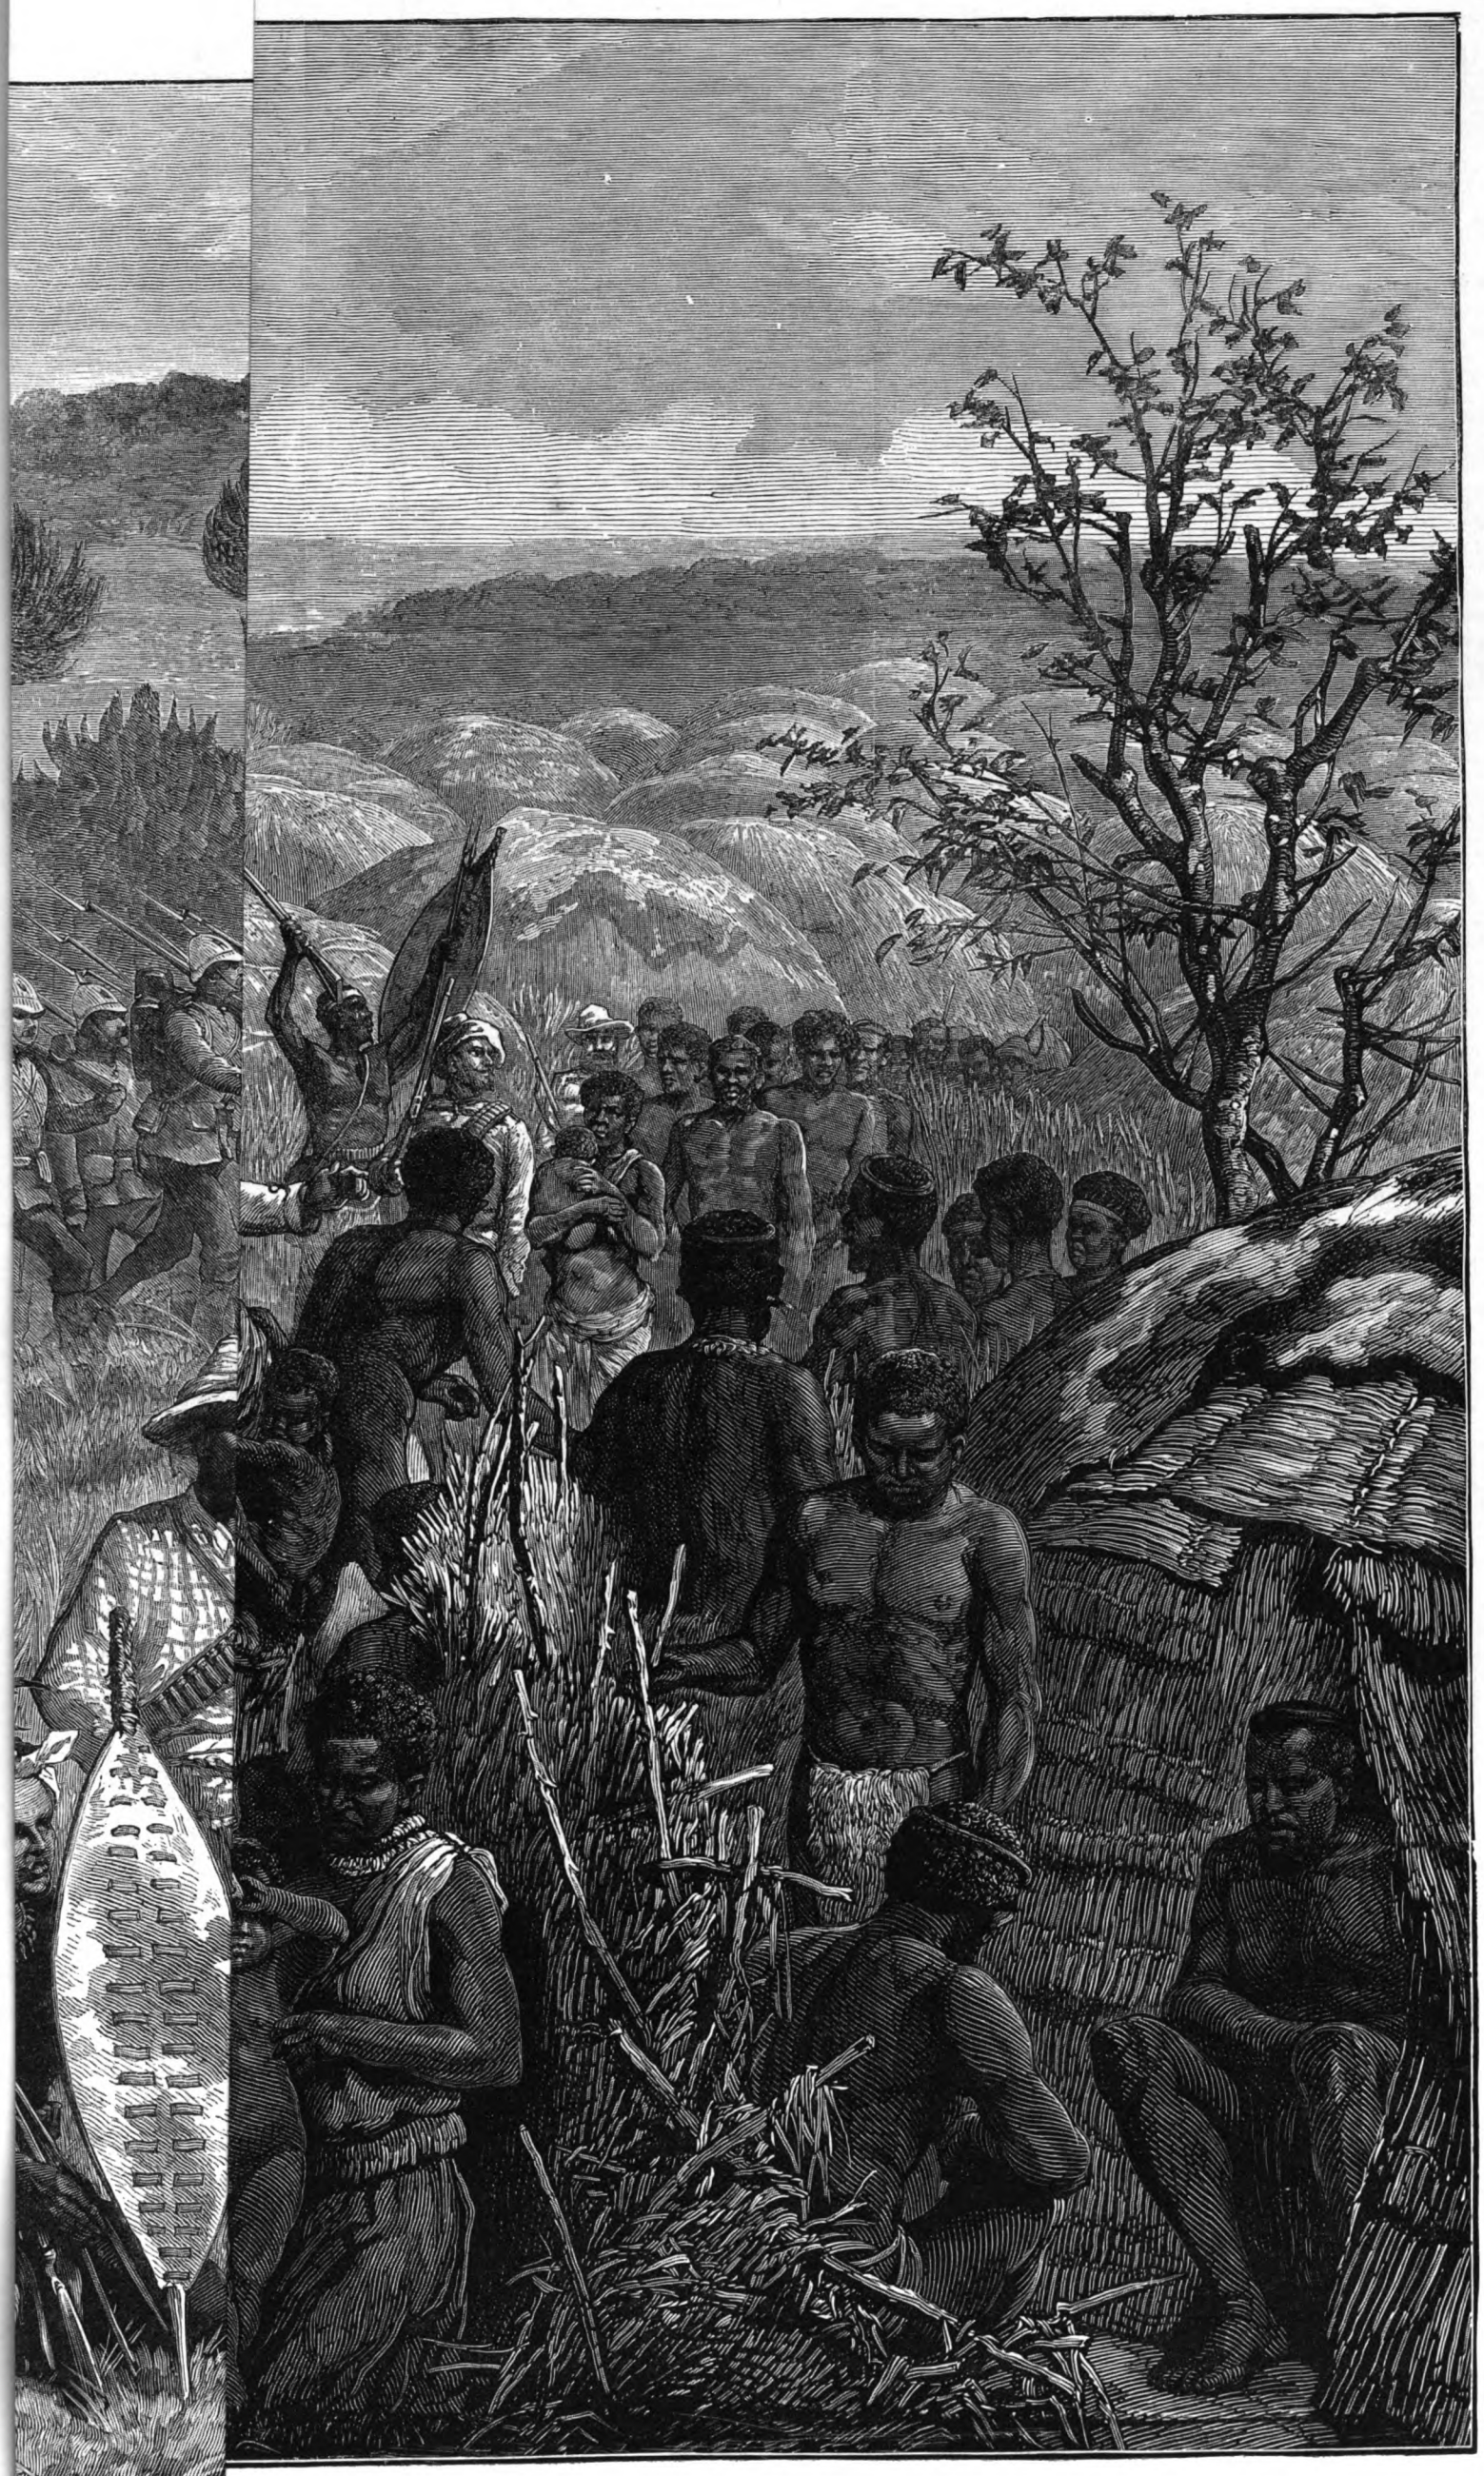
The Fragrant Florline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for "The Mexican Hair Renewer," price 3s. 6d. BILIOUS ATTACKS.—In bilious people, and what are called bilious attacks, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when it is unable to do so sick headache is produced by a retention of bile in the blood. ENO'S FRUIT SALT exercises a simple but special action on the liver, by which the secretion of bile is regulated. In deficiency, therefore, of the excretive powers of the liver into the intestines, biliousness is caused, and, as a natural consequence, great sluggishness of the body and apathy of mind. In any case where the liver is sluggish ENO'S FRUIT SALT will increase its action by natural means, and thus prevent what is termed "the blues."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woe is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.



CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the CAPSULE is MARKED "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY AT ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S PATENT.

BERDALLE'S "PHOSPHORIC WINE" (Trade Mark).—THE ONLY SAFE AND RELIABLE PREPARATION OF PHOSPHORUS KNOWN. Forty-eight doses for 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists; or sent direct for P.O.O. for 5s. from the Proprietors, E. Berdalle and Co., 176, Albany-street, Regent's Park. Send three stamps for pamphlet.

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

Before concluding this sketch of the rise and progress of illustrated journalism it is fitting that I should include the Penny Magazine amongst the pictorial journals which immediately preceded the Illustrated London News. The Penny Magazine, though not a newspaper, was intended to supplant the cheap and pernicious contraband newspapers that then existed in large numbers. It was the most successful experiment that England had then seen of the art of illustration in combination with the steam press, and was the best attempt that had been made in a cheap form to elevate the public taste.

Mr. Charles Knight who thus, in the Penny Magazine, led the way in combining literature with art in a popular form, was a stanch advocate of education, and he never ceased in his endeavours to improve the condition of the masses. He said, "the poor man must be made a thinking man—a man capable of intellectual pleasures; he must be purified in his tastes, and elevated in his understanding; he must be taught to comprehend the real dignity of all useful employments; he must learn to look upon the distinctions of society without envy or servility; he must respect them, for they are open to him as well as to others; but he must respect himself more. The best enjoyments of our nature might be common to him and the most favoured by fortune. Let him be taught how to appreciate them. Diminish the attractions of his sensual enjoyments by extending the range of his mental pleasures."* With such convictions, Mr. Knight, in 1827, joined the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, a new educational movement then just started by the Reform Party. He brought out, under its auspices, a great number of useful works, most of which were profusely illustrated. In 1832 Mr. Knight resided in the Vale of Health on Hampstead Heath. One of his neighbours was Mr. M. D. Hill, an active member of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. It was a time of great political excitement, and the town was flooded with unstamped weekly publications, which in some degree came under the character of contraband newspapers, and were nearly all dangerous in principle and coarse in language. Mr. Knight and Mr. Hill often walked to town together, and their conversation naturally turned to a subject in which they both felt a special interest—the means of improving the condition of the people by the diffusion of cheap literature, and so counteracting the dangerous and offensive publications which then abounded. One morning in early spring their talk was of this kind, when Mr. Hill exclaimed "Let us see what something cheap and good can accomplish! Let us have a Penny Magazine!" Mr. Knight immediateiy adopted the suggestion, which was cordially approved by the Lord Chanceller Brougham, and on March 31, 1832, appeared the first number of "the Penny Magazine, of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowlege." It was necessary to avoid making the new periodical anything like a newspaper lest it should become liable to stamp duty, and at first very little expense was incurred for illustrations, most of the engravings in the early numbers being reprinted from other works of the society. It was not till six months had elapsed that Mr. Knight ventured into the wide field of illustration, and made the public familiar with great works of art, such as the Laocoon, the Apollo Belvedere, the Dying Gladiator, the Cartoons, &c. The best pictures of the old masters were intermingled with scenes at home and abroad, with places of renown and illustrious men of all nations and of every age.

The success of the Penny Magazine was a surprise to the publisher and an astonishment to most persons. At the end of 1832 it had reached a sale of 200,000 in weekly numbers and monthly parts, and it soon produced a revolution in popular art throughout the world. Stereotype casts of its best cuts were supplied for the illustration of publications of a similar character which appeared in Germany, France, Holland, Livonia, Bohemia, Italy, Ionian Islands, Sweden, Norway, Spanish America, and the Brazils. The entire work was also reprinted in the United States from plates sent from this country.†

It continued its prosperous career for nine years, when a new series was commenced, with considerable improvements in engraving and printing. Five volumes of the new series were published, but the sale declined, owing to the commencement of illustrated newspapers, and the Penny Magazine in its old form came to an end in 1845, three years after the commencement of the Illustrated London News.‡ Knight's Penny Magazine, a smaller miscellany, commencing in January, 1846, kept up the old name for six months longer, and then it ceased to exist. In announcing its discontinuance, Mr. Knight thus closes this interesting chapter of literary history:—"The present series of the Penny Magazine is closed, after an experience of only six months. The editor has no reason to complain of the want of public encouragement, for the sale of this series has exceeded that of its predecessor in 1845. But the sale, such as it is, is scarcely remunerative; and there are indications that it may decline rather than increase. This is a hint which cannot be mistaken. It shall not be said of his humble efforts to continue, upon an equality with the best of his contemporaries, a publication which once had a decided pre-eminence, that

Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage.

He leaves this portion of popular literature to be cultivated by those whose new energy may be worth more than his old experience. The Penny Magazine shall begin and end with him. It shall not pass into other hands."

Mr. Knight attributed the falling-off in the sale of the Penny Magazine to the extended sale of newspapers and the application of wood engravings to their illustration; and in his "Passages of a Working Life" he relates how he first heard of the journal that was destined to succeed the Penny Magazine in the field of popular art:—"In 1842, having occasion to be in attendance at the Central Criminal Court, my curiosity was excited by an unusual spectacle—that of an artist, seated amongst the civic dignitaries on the bench, diligently employed in sketching two Lascars, on their trial for a capital offence. What was there so remarkable in the case, in the persons, or even in the costume of the accused, that they should be made the subject of a picture? The mystery was soon explained to me. The Illustrated London News had been announced for publication on the Saturday of the week in which I saw the wretched foreigners standing at the bar. I knew something about hurrying on wood-engravers for the Penny Magazine; but a newspaper was an essentially different affair. How, I thought, could artists and journalists so work concurrently that the news and the appropriate illustrations should both be fresh? How could such things be managed with any approach to fidelity of representation unless all the essential characteristics of a newspaper were sacrificed in the attempt to render it pictorial? I fancied that this rash experiment would be a failure. It proved to be such a success as could only be ensured by resolute and persevering struggles against natural difficulties."

It is curious that the printing-press, which has worked such mighty changes, should have reproduced in another form the ancient jester who stood in cap and bells behind his master's chair, and the merry-andrew who made the rustics laugh upon the village green. The numerous satirical and humorous publications of the Victorian era represent a distinct kind of illustrated journalism, through which runs an amusing commentary on passing events, combined with a vein of satire always good humoured and often instructive. At the head of this array of wit and wisdom stands Punch, who, however, was preceded by Figaro in London, conducted by Mr. Gilbert A'Beckett, afterwards one of Punch's strongest supporters. Mr. A'Beckett faithfully acted up to his motto:—

Wound with a touch that's hardly felt or seen;

but the constitution of Figaro was not strong, and he died young.

While the Penny Magazine was yet in vigorous life and the Illustrated London News was as yet unborn, there used to be a weekly gathering of authors, actors, and artists at a tavern in Wych-street, Strand, where the late Mr. Mark Lemon presided as the genial host. This company of merry men were mostly on the sunny side of life, and disposed to look upon the world and the world's cares with a laughing eye. They were ever ready to go out of their way for the sake of a joke, and a pun, good or bad, was pleasant to them. In this congenial atmosphere Punch germinated, and in July, 1841, that shrewd observer and good-humoured satirist appeared. Mr. Punch, like some other great men, had a hard struggle in his early days; but prosperous times came, and he now combines in his own person the dignity of age with the vivacity of youth. Puck, Diogenes, and numerous other imitators of Punch attempted to obtain a share of public favour, but most of them died after a brief existence. The best of those that survive are Fun and Judy, which, with the Hornet, Vanity Fair, Figaro (a revival of the name), and others, continue their weekly budgets with a smartness and vigour not unworthy of their great prototype.

SKETCHES IN AFGHANISTAN.

Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, lately with the army under General Sir S. Browne at Jellalabad and through the Cabul valley, supplies a view of the bridge at Suffaid Sung, near Gundamuk, and the portraits, sketched by himself, of four specimens of the motley nations and tribes dwelling in that part of Afghanistan. The stream which is called the Murkhi Kheyl, taking that name from the Murkhi Kheyl tribe living in the upper part of its valley, descends from the mountains of the Suffaid or Safed Koh range, falling into the Cabul river some distance above Jellalabad. It is a small mountain stream, but is very dangerous to ford, from the large boulders carried down by its snow-melted waters. A bridge was therefore constructed, some say by Shah Jehan, others by Nadir Shah, and it is even said that the Chagatai Emperors had a bridge at this place. It was either rebuilt or repaired by Dost Mohammed, or by the mother of the late Shere Ali, but has lately fallen into a ruinous condition. It once bore a piece of white marble, with a Persian inscription. This was the "suffaid sung," or white stone, which gives its name to the place according to a local tradition. There are various stories about it; one is, that the stone was carried off by Colonel Wade, or some other officer, in the Afghan War of forty years ago. But there were many large white masses of rock on the river-bank. These may have given its name to the place, and in all likelihood their existence led to the following tradition connected with the spot. A young lady of that locality was being married. The custom there is for the bride to be taken to the bridegroom's house, and a procession of her friends performs this part of the ceremony. The bride rides on a horse or camel, while her attendants make a noise with musical instruments and firing muskets. In this case, while going along a Kaffir army appeared. This implies that the story is laid at a date shortly aiter the Mohammedans came to the country, for they called their enemies, as not accepting Mohammedanism, "Kaffirs," or infidels. The bride's attendants seeing the Kaffirs ran away in fright and left their charge. She, seeing that she must fall into the hands of the Kaffirs, prayed to Allah that she might be turned into a stone. The prayer was granted, and, as she was clothed in white, she became a White Stone, or "Suffaid Sung." This place is close to Gundamuk, where Yakoob Khan met the British officers the other day for the peace negotiations. The British encampment was at a spot which should lie to the right hand of the view shown in our Engraving, and Gundamuk, with the Ameer's encampment, is in the background to the right hand side.

The four portraits which appear on one page are to be separately noticed. The first is Mahzum, an old man who belongs to the Khugianis, the nation or league of tribes inhabiting a portion of the lower slopes of the Suffaid Koh range, between the Shinwarries, who are to the east, and the Ghilzais, who are to the west of them, farther towards Cabul. It was with the Khugianis that Brigadier-General Gough fought the action at Futtehabad on April 2, of which we gave an Illustration. This old man, Mahzum, one of the Murkhi Kheyl, which is a tribe of the Khugianis, was brought in prisoner after that conflict.

The second head is that of one of the Utmanzai Momunds, whose name is Mohammed Gunge, which means "the Treasury of Mohammed." He was a nomadic shepherd, of which class there are great numbers in Afghanistan moving to and fro with their flocks at different seasons of the year. In winter they keep in the low parts of the country, but change their pasture to the upland region when hot weather sets in.

The town of Lalpoora, inhabited by the tribe of the Upper Momunds, is situated opposite Dakka, on the other side of the river, at the Cabul entrance to the Khyber Pass. When General Sir Samuel Browne arrived at Dakka, after advancing through the Khyber, the Khan of Lalpoora came across the lines to Dakka, and made his salaam. He was a young man, rather fat and sensual in the face. As the Momunds, principally on his side of the river, remained hostile during the campaign, the Chief of Lalpoora was always looked upon with some suspicion. Lalpoora is a considerable town, or village, as towns and villages go in Afghanistan, and its Khan has always ranked as an important personage. He had a good many attendants, but one of them, Hassan, seemed to be a personal follower, who kept close to his master. Hassan was well armed, having a jeszail, and in his kummer-bund a small blunderbuss, with an ample supply of cartridges and powder-horns slung round his body. The Tajiks are one of the most ancient races, at least, an early tribe. They came from the West, and speak Persian instead of Pushtoo. The word Tajik has a meaning equivalent to "peasant," in contradistinction to "warrior," because they are noted as cultivators of the soil, and they form a very important element in the population of Afghanistan. Their mode of husbandry is superior to that of those around them; hence common tradition says that they acquired their superior knowledge from the Shaitan, or Satan. Masson tells some curious tales in connection with this popular belief of the sources of Tajik agricultural skill. Shaitan's miraculous power was exerted to create growing crops, ripe for harvest, in the Tajik's field. The Tempter would then give the Tajik his choice of whichever part he liked best of the plant as it grew. The first time, it was a fine crop of wheat or some other corn; but the Tajik had never before seen any grain, and did not know that the ear of wheat yielded flour for bread, so he chose the root of the plant, and was, of course, disappointed. Next season, it was a field of some root crop, similar to turnips or carrots; the Tajik now thought himself wiser by experience, and chose that part of the plant which grew above-ground, with a result which proved not less delusive. By traditional jests of this kind, the Tajik's neighbours in Afghanistan take a mild revenge for the Tajik's present advantage in the art of agriculture.

OBITUARY.

SIR THOMAS MACLEAR.

Sir Thomas Maclear, F.R.S., Astronomer Royal at the Cape of Good Hope, whose death is just announced, was son of the late James Maclear, Esq., in the county of Tyrone, and was originally educated for the medical profession. MR. SCOTT-DOUGLAS.

Sir Garnet Wolseley's despatch refers to the death of a young and very promising officer, James Henry Scott-Douglas, Lieutenant in the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, who appears to have missed his way, and to have been killed. He was born on May 27, 1853, the eldest son of Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas, Bart., of Springwood Park, the present M.P. for Roxburghshire, by his wife, Mariquita Juana Petronila, eldest daughter of Don Francisco Sanchez Serrano de Pinã. * "Passages of a Working Life."

† At this time there was another illustrated weekly magazine in existence—the Mirror, which began about 1822. The engravings it contained were chiefly of a topographical character.

‡ The Saturday Magazine was started in imitation of the Penny Magazine, and, like its prototype, had a considerable popularity for some years.

THE LATE CAPTAIN WYATT-EDGELL.

The only British officer killed in the battle of Ulundi, on the 4th ult., was the Hon. Edmund Verney Wyatt-Edgell, Captain in the 17th Lancers. He was in the thirty-fourth year of his age, having been born Aug. 16, 1845. He was eldest son of the Rev. Edgell Wyatt-Edgell, formerly Rector of North Cray, and Henrietta, Baroness Braye in her own right. The late Captain Wyatt-Edgell was heir to the peerage, and joint-owner with his mother of the Stanford Hall estate, in Leicestershire and Northamptonshire. But he thought more of his professional duty than of these brilliant prospects offered by a large property and an ancient title. After being educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, he entered the Army in 1866, joining the 17th Lancers, in which he attained the rank of Lieutenant in 1868, and that of Captain in 1873. He studied and passed a successful examination for the Staff College, Aldershott; but, after a few days' residence there, was summoned to active service with his regiment in the Zulu War. His loss will be much felt by his comrades in the regiment. Captain Wyatt-Edgell was in 1877 a Liberal candidate for the representation of North Northamptonshire. He is the third of his family, bearing the same Christian name, Edmund, who has met a soldier's death. The second Lord Braye died of wounds he received at the battle of St. Quintin, in the reign of Queen Mary. At the battle of Edge Hill, in 1642, another ancestor, Sir Edmund Verney, who was standard-bearer to King Charles I., fell grasping the Royal standard. On the paternal side, being grandson of Mr. Wyatt-Edgell, formerly of Milton Park, Egham, and of Great Missenden, Bucks, Captain Wyatt-Edgell belonged to the Verney and Hampden families, as well as to that of Wyatt of Nynehead, Somerset. The heir to the title of Baron Braye will now be his younger brother, the Hon. Alfred Thomas Wyatt-Edgell.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT FRITH.

The death of this young officer, who was killed in a skirmish with the Zulus at Erzungayan Hill on June 5, has been noticed with much regret. A Sketch of the incident, by our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, was presented last week in our front page Engraving. It showed the unfortunate young man, struck by a shot, falling from his horse between Colonel Drury Lowe and Mr. Francis, the Times' Special Correspondent. Frederick J. Cokayne Frith was second son of Major Cokayne Frith, of Buckland House, Dover. He was in the twenty-first year of his age. He was educated at Haileybury, and, passing twelfth in the competitive examination of December, 1875, for commissions in the Army, entered Sandhurst College, from which he passed with a first-class certificate. He was gazetted sub-lieutenant in the 17th Lancers in February, 1877; but on succeeding to a lieutenancy in the following year, his commission was ante-dated two years, in consequence of having obtained the first-class certificate at Sandhurst. In May, 1878, he joined the School of Musketry at Hythe, where he obtained a first-class certificate. He was a general favourite in his regiment, and diligent in attention to duty. At the moment when the shot struck him he was leaning forward to take an order from the Colonel. He was buried the same evening in the camp. The funeral service was read by the Rev. G. Smith, in the presence of Lord Chelmsford, General Newdigate, the staff and other officers.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Fall, of Baker-street.

A handsome park of twenty acres was opened at Heywood, near Bury, last Saturday. This property is the gift of the Queen. Six years ago Mr. Newhouse, a manufacturer, was killed in a railway accident, and, as he died intestate, the part of this property in question devolved on the Queen as Duchess of Lancaster. The park was opened with much ceremony. There was a banquet in the evening.

The new line from Hartlepool to Newcastle, connected with the various branches from Seaham Harbour and Durham, was opened on Monday without any formality, the first passenger-train starting a few minutes after seven. The handsome Central Station at Sunderland was also opened.—Last week the new station of the Caledonian Railway was opened by the chairman, Mr. Hill. It is situated in the centre of Glasgow, has cost £700,000, and has six platforms, with a frontage of 536 feet to Gordon-street.

The High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters began its sittings at Sheffield on Monday, under the presidency of the High Chief Ranger, Brother Robert Shaw. There was subsequently a procession of friendly societies, followed by a fête in the Botanical Gardens. The sitting continued through the week.—The annual legislative council of the British United Oddfellows opened its sittings at Sunderland on Tuesday. Mr. Henry Smith, the Grand Master, in his address, said that during the past year twenty dispensations for the formation of new branches had been presented. The sick payments had amounted to over £6000, and the payments on deaths to £2600.

The annual meeting of the British Medical Association began on Tuesday in the Queen's College, Cork. Dr. Falconer, of Bath, retiring president, delivered a brief valedictory address. Dr. Sullivan, president of the Queen's College, Cork, announced that the Senate of the Queen's University, in order to mark its appreciation of the work of this association and the circumstance of this being the first time the meeting was held within the walls of one of its colleges, had decided to confer the honorary degree of M.D. on the retiring and the incoming president. Dr. O'Connor then read his opening address, which dealt with the functions of the physician and the progress of medical science. The annual report of the council showed an increase in the number of members on the register, which is now 1810. The council recommended the award of the gold medal of the association for distinguished merit to Surgeon-Major Reynolds, in recognition of the great bravery displayed by him at Rorke's Drift.

The National Welsh Eisteddfod having been abandoned by Holywell, the town originally proposed for its reception, has this year been taken up by Conway, where it began a three-days' session on Tuesday under very inauspicious circumstances, there being an incessant downpour of rain throughout the day. The meeting of bards prefaced the proceedings. The High Sheriff of Carnarvonshire, Mr. Kneeshaw, presided. The chief item in the programme was a choral competition for a prize of twenty guineas and a silver medal. Carnarvon, Llandudno, Bethesda, Festiniog, and Holywell sent representatives. The Bethesda choir, composed of workmen at Lord Penrhyn's slate quarries, carried off the prize. In the other classes, Alfred Brown, of Liverpool, was adjudged to be the best violinist. Miss Grace Jones, Birkenhead, and Mr. John Griffiths were the best solo vocalists. Literary honours fell to William Robert Owen, Liverpool; J. Davies, Evan Jones, Robert Lloyd, and Sarah Cliffe, and to Henry Roberts, of Dolgelly, for oak carving. At night there was a concert, at which Mr. Llewellyn Mostyn presided.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

TOZ (Manchester).—You have either set up the position incorrectly or have vastly underrated Problem No. 1848. There is no solution in three moves by way of 1. Kt to Q 4th. Thanks for your suggestion as to the arrangement of solvers' names, which shall receive our best attention.

G R D (Tunstall).—It is, of course, permissible to take a piece or check the King in solving a problem; but few modern problems are intentionally constructed on such commonplace lines as to be solved in that way.

L G H (Jersey).—The "Theory of the Chess Openings" is the best. See notice in our issue of 12th ult.

J O H T (Norwich).—Very acceptable. Always pleased to hear from you.

M and N (Watford).—In draughts, as in chess, whoever leaves the game loses it.

B L D (Preston).—Too simple in construction. Try again.

H L (Devizes).—The "time limit" was first introduced by Mr. Medley, then honorary secretary of the old London Chess Club. It is very probable that the consciousness of being limited to a given number of minutes for the consideration of a critical move in a match game affects the players; but it has been proved by experience that some such arrangement is absolutely necessary.

H W D.—King and Knight cannot win against King; the game is therefore drawn.

E N F (Abbey-road).—The conception is good; but how about the following?—1. B takes Kt (ch), K to K 4th (best); 2 Q takes R (ch), K to K 3rd; 3. B to Q 7th (mate). We shall be glad to see the position reconstructed.

J A T (Port Maria, Jamaica).—Thanks; if found correct, the problem shall appear.

J T (Chipping Campden).—Please describe the position upon a diagram—W K for White King, W Q for White Queen, &c.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1847 received from B C, M S, P S Shenele, W de P Crousaz, Toz and W D Jones (Swansea).

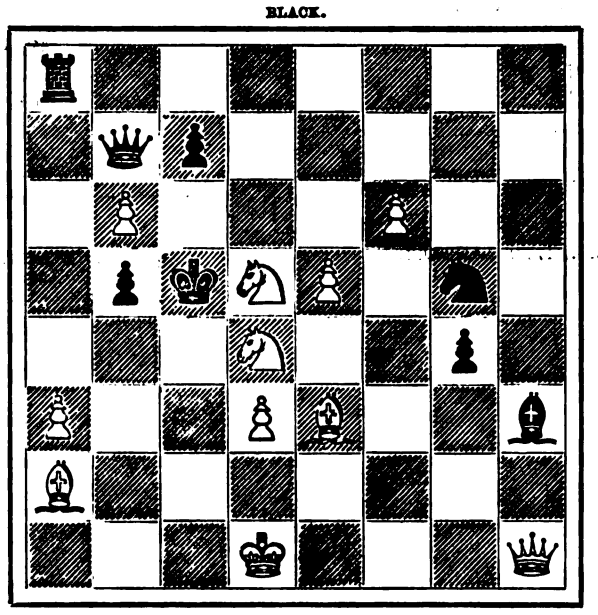
CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1849 received from P S Shenele, Toz, G C Baxter, W S B, Cant, W Leeson, W D Jones (Swansea), Ben Nevis, An Old Hand, Kitten, G C M, D W Kell, D Templeton, W Boulger, N Cator, T Greenbank, S Farrant, G L Mayne, L S D, H Langford, R Ingersoll, T Barrington, T L S, R Arnold, B L Dyke, Helen Lee, E Elsbury, C S Coxe, R Jessop, W Warren, R H Brewster, L Sharswood, C C E, M O'Halloran, H Barrett, F B Jeffrey, Frances R, William the Silent, A Scot, H Warner, A R G, and W Johnson.

NOTE.—It is probably due to the sudden access of fine weather last week that so many correspondents have attempted to solve this problem in a perfunctory manner. We have received over eighty letters in which a solution is proposed, and appears to be effected, by the following moves:—1. Q to K sq, B to B 8th; 2. Q to K 8th (ch), K to B 8th; 3. Kt to K 3rd, and to the last move is appended the fatal word "mate." We hope our friends will take a second glance at the position after these moves have been made; they will find that the Black King is not mated, nor, indeed, likely to be for several moves. Our younger readers may be told that the difficulty of solving this problem springs from the variety of plausible attacks incident to the position, one of the highest qualities of a chess problem, and we might almost add the rarest.



SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1848.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to B 8th	K to K 5th*
2. R to B 5th	Any move
3. Mates accordingly.

* If Black play 1. K to B 4th, White continues 2. R to B 8th (ch), and 3. P to Q B 3rd. Mate.

PROBLEM No. 1851.
By H. E. KIDSON.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Twelfth Game in the Match between Messrs. POTTER and MASON.
(Petroff Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. P.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
3. Kt takes P	P to Q 3rd
4. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt takes P
5. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
6. B to Q 3rd	B to Q 3rd
7. Castles	Castles
8. P to Q B 4th	P to Q B 3rd

Black has not opened the game very happily. His sixth move is somewhat inferior to B to K 2nd, and 8. B to K 3rd is preferable to the move in the text.

9. Q to B 2nd	Kt to B 3rd
10. B to Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd
11. B to K 3rd	P takes P
12. B takes P	B to K Kt 5th
13. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q Kt to Q 2nd
14. B takes R P

White appears determined to risk something to avoid another draw; and, although the soundness of this sacrifice is doubtful, we are content to judge it by results.

14.	B takes Kt

This exchange of pieces was probably inspired by the general principle of diminishing the attack by reducing the forces engaged in it; nevertheless, it appears as if the Bishop should have been retained for the defence. In that case he might have captured the Bishop at once, when there would probably follow—

15. Q to Kt 6th (ch)	K to R sq
16. Q takes P (ch)	K to Kt sq
17. Kt to Kt 5th	B to R 4th
18. Kt to K 4th	B to K 2nd and, although White gets three Pawns for the piece, he has by no means an easy game

15. Kt takes B	P takes B
16. Q to Kt 6th (ch)	K to R sq
17. Q takes P (ch)	K to Kt sq

Obviously, he cannot interpose the Knight, because in that case White recovers his piece at once by 18. Q takes B. Not the least interesting feature of the attack from this point is the "fixity of tenure" imposed upon the Knight in order to save the Bishop.

18. Q R to K sq

This move is noteworthy, because the subsequent course of the game shows that it is this Rook, and not the K B, that should be posted here.

18.	Kt to Kt 3rd

Black has a very difficult game, and is fully alive to its perils. He cannot play B to K sq, although that move, followed by Kt to K B sq, looks promising, so long as the adverse Bishop can capture the K B P, after which mate would follow in a few moves.

19. B to Q 3rd	Q Kt to Q 4th
20. Kt to Kt 5th	B to B 5th
21. B to K 3rd

The winning move.

21.	B takes R

Clearly the Rook must be taken, and if,

21.	Kt takes R
22. P takes Kt	B takes P (ch)

If 22. Q to K 2nd, then 23. B to R 7th (ch), 24. B to K 4th (ch), and 25. R takes B, &c.

23. K to R sq	Q takes P
24. B to R 7th (ch)	K to R sq
25. B to B 2nd (ch)	K to Kt sq
26. B takes Kt, and wins.
22. P takes B	Q to R 4th

To prevent 23. R to B 3rd.

23. B to R 7th (ch)	K to R sq
24. R takes Kt

If—

24. B to K 4th (dis. ch)	K to Kt sq
25. B takes Kt	P takes B
26. R takes Kt	Q to K 8th (ch)
27. R to B sq	Q takes P (ch)
28. K to B sq	Q to Q 6th, &c.
24.	Q to K 8th (ch)
25. R to B sq	Q takes R (ch)
26. K takes Q	Kt takes P (ch)
27. K to Kt sq	Kt to Kt 5th
28. Q to R 4th	Black resigned.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The thirteenth game in the match between Messrs. Mason and Potter was won by the former, the victory making the score again equal—viz., three to each player and seven drawn. This game, which was well fought throughout, extended to fifty-seven moves, spread over three sittings.

The Chessplayer's Chronicle (W. Morgan, 67, Barbican) for the current month opens with the first chapter of a review of the "Theory of the Chess Openings," wherein the author's display of temper, the chief blemish of a valuable little work, is justly, but moderately, condemned. Charles XII. at Bender is an old chess story, rather happily versified; and the "Monthly Record" chronicles with "extensive view" the proceedings of chessplayers at home and abroad. The problem department is excellent, the review of Danish problems being specially interesting. These, with seven games, carefully annotated, make up a capital number.

The prizes in the French International Problem Tourney have been awarded, after some delay, the occurrence of which is ascribed to the non-compliance of competitors with the regulations. The first prize is awarded to Herr Berger, the second to Herr Geierstam, the third to S. Loyd, and the fourth it is decreed shall be divided between Herr Bayer, of Olmutz, and Mr. Finlinson, of Huddersfield.

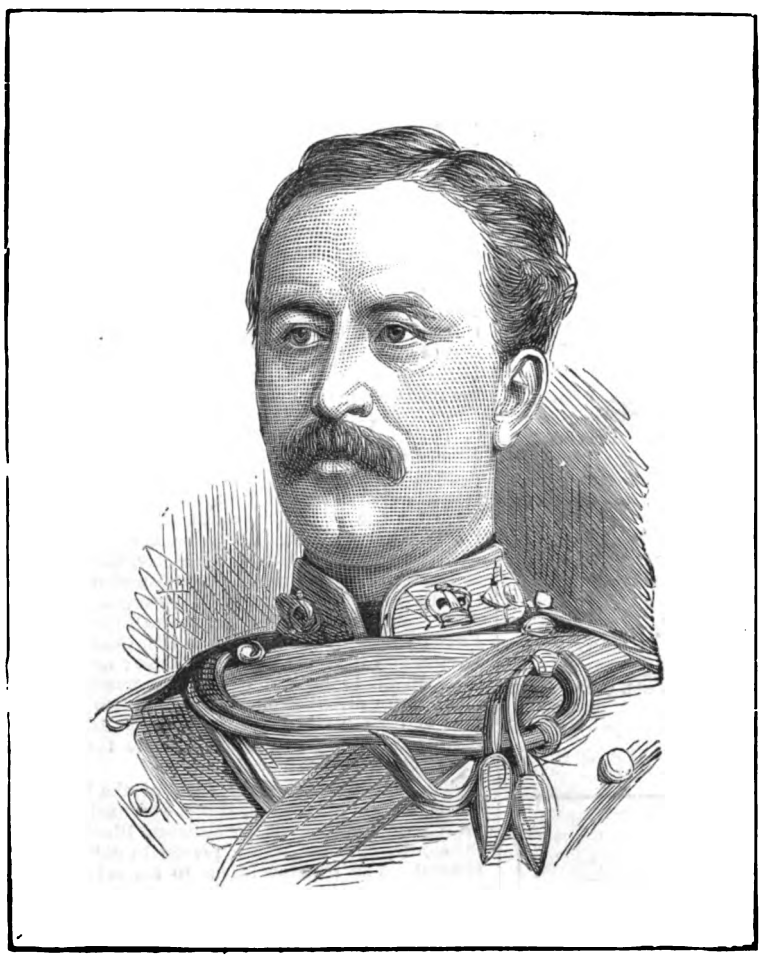
The residue of her real and personal estate the testatrix leaves to her niece, Lady Lavinia Bertie.

The will (dated Aug. 10, 1860) of the Rev. Thomas Blackburne, Rector of Clothall, Herts, who died on June 13 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by William Blackburne, the brother, the surviving executor, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator leaves to his said brother and to his sisters Mary and Charlotte (both of the latter of whom are since deceased) the whole of his real and personal estate.



The will (dated Oct. 26, 1878) with two codicils (dated Oct. 31, 1878, and March 11, 1879) of Mr. George Montagu Warren Sandford, M.P., late of No. 33, Hertford-street, Park-lane, who died on June 19 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by the Earl of March and Darnley and Major-General George John Peacocke, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator settles Reeves Hall, Mersea Island, and all his real estate in Essex, and all his copyhold and leasehold property, upon his wife, Mrs. Augusta Mary Sandford, for life, subject to the payment of an annuity during such period to his son Francis Marmaduke Henry, and at her decease upon his said son. The residue of his personal estate is directed to be laid out in the purchase of real estate to be settled in the same way. The testator bequeaths his cigars equally between his executors, and gives legacies to his agent, butler, and wife's servant.

The will (dated Nov. 7, 1878) of Mr. James Farrer, late of Ingleborough, Yorkshire, who died on June 13 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by the Rev. Matthew Thomas Farrer, the brother, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths upon trust for his sister, Mrs. Vansittart Neale and her children, £2000; to his nephews, the Rev. William Farrer and Matthew George Farrer, and to his niece, Mary Charlotte Farrer, £5000 each; to his servant, James Atkins, and his housekeeper, Mary Alderson, £500 each; to his coachman, George Hopkinson, £200; to each of his other household servants who shall have been twelve months in his service, one year's wages; and the residue of the personalty to his said brother, Matthew Thomas. All his real estate the testator devises to the use of his brother the said Rev. Matthew Thomas Farrer for life, with remainder to his said brother's eldest son, James Anson Farrer, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively, according to seniority in tail male. The deceased was a J.P. and D.L. for the county of Durham and the West Riding of Yorkshire, and also a J.P. for Westmorland, and was a Member of Parliament for the South Division of the county of Durham in the Conservative interest from 1847 to 1857, and again from 1859 to 1865.

The will (dated July 12, 1865) with three codicils (dated Nov. 9, 1870, and May 26 and Dec. 23, 1872) of Mrs. Mary Sherard, formerly of Theale, Berks, but late of Abbotts Langley, Herts, who died on June 5 last, was proved on the 10th ult. by the Rev. Robert Henry Gatty, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testatrix bequeaths £300 each to the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts and the Society for Procuring Additional Curates in Populous Places, such sums to be paid exclusively out of such part of her personal estate as she can lawfully charge with the payment of legacies for charitable uses.

The will (dated May 28, 1878) with five codicils (dated July 6, Oct. 1, and Dec. 17, 1878, and Feb. 28 and April 1, 1879) of Mr. John Purcell Fitzgerald, late of Boulge Hall, Suffolk, and of Castle Irwell, Lancashire, who died on May 4 last, was proved on the 16th inst. by Robert Holmes White, Edmund Kerrick, the nephew, and William Gillbee Habershon, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The testator bequeaths £300 to the London City Mission; £200 each to the Manchester City Mission and the Salford Royal Dispensary; £100 each to the East Suffolk Hospital, the Church Missionary Society, the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, the Ilford Home for Destitute Girls, the Essex Hall Asylum for Idiots, the London Society's School for the Blind, Avenue-road, St. John's-wood, the London Hospital for Diseases of the Heart, the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, the Evangelisation Society, Surrey-street, Strand, and the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton; £5 per annum for ten years to the Roman Catholic Bishop of Waterford, Ireland, to be distributed by him among the necessitous poor of Bally Gunner, or generally on his Irish estates: £100 to the Governors of the School of King Edward VI. at Bury St. Edmund's, to found an annual prize to be given to the boy most proficient in Hebrew and Greek; and £10 per annum for ten years to the Rector and Churchwardens of the parish of Boulge with Derbach, and the Rector and Churchwardens of the parish of Bredfield, Suffolk, to be distributed in coals and warm clothing to the poor of the said parishes, without reference to their being Churchmen or Non-conformists.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1879.

"Much Ado about Nothing" would certainly not be an accurate or fair representation of the Parliamentary Session of 1878-9. There is, however, another adage somewhat akin to it in meaning, equally popular, and which describes, approximately at least, the legislative proceedings of the year—"Much Cry and Little Wool." The time spent by the great Council of the Nation since it met, for "the dispatch of business," towards the close of last autumn, has been unusually extended. The results of it have not been much to speak of. A retrospective glance at the course of the Session is not altogether unlike sight-seeing in a fog. Figure after figure, hazy in outline, passes before the eye, making upon it a nebulous impression. But scarcely have the several forms become definite to the spectator than they pass away again into apparent vacuity, and are seen no more. No great promise heralded the commencement of Parliamentary business, for the long list of Notices of Motion by private members did not betoken much serious work, as contradistinguished from talk. But the programme of her Majesty's Ministers was comparatively modest. Nevertheless, when put side by side with the measures actually passed, it indicated purposes and plans of far greater public importance than the event has justified. The contrast thus exhibited is not by any means a novelty, but it does not always grow out of mismanagement, as in the present instance. There has been obstruction, it is true; but even the obstruction has not always been barren of fruit, and, when it was, might have been overcome if it had been resolutely grappled with.

The most conspicuous feature of the Session has been its relation to the Foreign Policy of the Government. That policy has undergone ample discussion. The Afghan War, Hostilities in South Africa, the Treaty of Berlin, Egyptian Affairs, and the contemplated Boundaries of Greece have, we may say, been thoroughly sifted. The papers relating severally to each of these questions have been laid upon the table in both Houses—not always, it must be confessed, when most wanted; but generally in sufficient fulness to guide a careful judgment as to ultimate issues. The end of the Session exhibits a more favourable aspect of foreign affairs than that which prevailed at its commencement. Both the great political parties, influenced, no doubt—in part, at least—by a wider knowledge of facts and by a more careful study of them in their position one to another, have done somewhat to lessen the distance which at first divided them. The Berlin Treaty, for example, looked at with reference to its main purport, has proved itself operative beyond the expectation of a large portion of the British Public. Russia has withdrawn her army, according to stipulation, to the other side of the Pruth; Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia have organised themselves; and, although Turkey, the Turkey of Pashadom, remains intrinsically as unfit for the good government of its subjects as it was before the War, there is nothing which seriously threatens the unsettlement of arrangements agreed upon at Berlin. As to the Afghan War, it is over. The policy of Annexation, if it was ever contemplated, has been abandoned. The so-called "scientific frontier" has been achieved, and Russian encroachments upon Afghanistan have been met and baffled. We wish that as much could be said of the War in Zululand. Sir Garnet Wolseley's instructions from home are yet a matter of guesswork rather than of knowledge; and, although many troops are returning to England, and great expenses are being cut down, it is not yet clear that Lord Chelmsford's victory at Ulundi will bring hostilities in South Africa to a speedy close. On the whole, however, the Foreign Policy of this country is far less perturbed and adventurous than it seemed to be at the commencement of the Session. Government could always, on whatever question, command an overpowering majority of votes; but we think that the counsels which have been tendered to it by the Opposition in both Houses have succeeded in modifying, to a considerable extent, the spirit of the proceedings they had intended to pursue.

Domestic Legislation has been far from successful this Session—perhaps because the mind of Parliament was preoccupied with other matters. The Army Discipline Bill and the Irish University Bill can neither of them be looked upon, indeed, as measures of small importance. They are not of first-rate magnitude, but they may claim a foremost place in a secondary class. The first of them was the "pièce de résistance" of the Session; the second seems to have been the result of a happy accident. Both will probably have the effect of greatly clearing the ground of topics of embarrassing nicety. Neither of them will be accepted as complete in itself; but each probably has removed, from the surface of things at least, a bone of contention which neither of the political parties appeared strong enough to remove. As to other matters, the Criminal Code Bill, the Valuation of Property Bill, the County Government Bill, the Bankruptcy Bill, and several more that we cannot stay to enumerate—they have gone the way of all flesh. They have been matured up to a certain stage and have then been allowed to drop out of sight. They are not much regretted, save in one case, and probably we shall see them again; but the loss of the Criminal Code Bill is vexatious, and would seem even to portend the impracticability of forcing any such amendment of the Law through Parliament.

The Financial Legislation of the Session has been of a somewhat illusory order. The evil day has been put off. We know not precisely where we are, except that we are still responsible for an indeterminate amount of indebtedness. Our annual expenditure continues to mount up, our ways and means show symptoms of declension. Sir Stafford Northcote is a well-informed, intelligent, and cautious administrator, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, but he is too easy and yielding in the fibre of his will. His associations, to say nothing of the circumstances in which he has been placed, have usually prevented him from putting down his foot where he ought to have done, and hence the appearance, if not the reality, of muddle. What the issue will be when the time for clearing up comes, we forbear to speculate; but the close of the Session does not leave the public mind satisfied on the score of the financial situation of the country. Meanwhile Commerce scarcely gives promise of early revival. Agriculture suffers from severest depression. Foreign Markets are being, one by one, closed against us. We have been living too fast. We shall have to reform our ways, individually as well as collectively. It is thus, however, that nations make progress. They may learn something even from their errors; and England certainly has much yet to learn.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

Their Royal Highnesses were accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Archduke Carl Stephan of Austria, and Prince Louis of Battenberg. A large assemblage of the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron and about 200 other distinguished visitors were present to meet the Royal guests. The castle and grounds were decorated with the flags of all nations; the Prince's standard floating from the castle tower. The Royal party arrived at Eaglehurst in her Majesty's yacht Alberta at four o'clock, and were received by Count Batthyany and conducted by him through the grounds to the castle. The band of the 108th Regiment, under the direction of Mr. M'Lagan, bandmaster, played during the afternoon. The Royal personages, after a two hours' stay, returned to East Cowes; and in the evening the Prince and Princess and Princes Albert Victor and George, with the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke of Connaught, went to the Squadron Castle and witnessed the illumination of the yachts lying in Cowes Roads, and also of the Royal yachts Victoria and Albert and Osborne, and the ironclad Hector. A brilliant display of fireworks was also given.

During a recent match at Jersey, in which the Prince's yacht Hildegarde was competing, one of the crew accidentally lost his life. His Royal Highness has directed an annuity of £24 a year to be paid to the deceased's widow, with an extra sovereign at Easter and at Christmas, and has also ensured the education of her children.

The Prince will spend a few days hunting in the Exmoor country at the end of the month, when he will be the guest of Mr. Luttrell, of Dunster Castle.

A handsome brass lectern, a beautifully-worked communion-cloth, a new set of vessels for the holy communion, and an organ were given by relatives of the Rector, the Rev. J. C. Bradley.

Last week the Bishop of Ripon consecrated a new church which replaces that of St. Nicholas, Cumberworth, near Huddersfield, of which Archbishop Tillotson was once Rector. The same right rev. prelate has consecrated a new church at Sawley, near Ripon; it takes the place of a chapel built by an Abbot of Fountains, pulled down about 110 years ago. It has cost about £2000, of which £500 has been contributed by Mr. H. W. Wormald, and £300 by the widow of the late Mr. Wormald.

The annual meeting of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation was held on Tuesday at the offices of the Corporation, Southampton-street, Strand—the Bishop of London, President of the Corporation, in the chair. Dr. Pigott, secretary, read the report, which spoke of the continued prosperity of the work, in spite of general depression. There had been 357 cases relieved, with grants ranging from £5 to £25. The Bishops of Carlisle, Chichester, Exeter, Hereford, Oxford, Peterborough, and St. David's, and the Dean of Chester have become vice-presidents.

The Globe states that the Rev. Acton Windeyer Sillitoe, M.A., Consular Chaplain at Darmstadt, has accepted the offer of the new bishopric of New Westminster, in British Columbia. Mr. Sillitoe is a graduate of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and was ordained by the Bishop of Lichfield in 1869. He was Curate of Brierley Hill, Staffordshire, from 1869 to 1871; from 1871 to 1873 he was Curate in Charge of All Saints' Mission District, Wolverhampton; and from 1873 to 1876 he was Curate of St. Mark's, Worsley, under the Earl of Mulgrave, and had charge of the donative chapel at Ellenbrooke. Prior to his appointment at Hesse-Darmstadt he was Chaplain at Geneva for a short time.

Paull Church, near Hull, a very fine specimen of Perpendicular architecture, was reopened on the 7th inst., after having undergone a thorough restoration, which has been carried out mainly through the energy and perseverance of the Vicar, the Rev. R. D. C. Cordeaux, at a cost of £1600. Amongst various munificent offerings to the church we may mention a very handsome oak altar, and vestment, and silver altar vessels, all the gift of Mrs. Robert Reynard, a most generous friend of the church; a beautiful carved oak pulpit, presented by the Rev. Charles C. Wood, St. Leonard's; a font and lectern, by Messrs. Wilson and Fewlass, the contractors; and a complete set of service-books, with Bible, from the Rev. Alfred Turner, St. Leonard's.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We do not know a more unpleasant place than Brighton Downs in a heavy down-pour, and as wind and rain had matters pretty much their own way on the Cup day, it was surprising that the attendance should have been such a large one, especially as the great race of the day seemed likely to collapse. Insulaire had an engagement in France, which promised to be more lucrative than crossing the Channel for another gallop with Isonomy, and Silvio met with an accident which kept him at home. Thus, at one time, it looked as though the necessary quartette, "the property of different owners," could not be made up, and Isonomy appeared likely to follow in the footsteps of Preakness, and walk over for the forfeits; but, by the diplomatic sale of The Monk to Mr. John Porter, his trainer, Mr. Gretton secured a trio of opponents, and Paul's Cray, Drumhead, and The Monk attended the champion of the year in what was virtually a walk over after all. Isonomy showed no traces of his work at Ascot, and, as there is no sounder horse in training, Mr. Gretton appears likely to farm the cups for the next season or two. Advance (8 st. 13 lb.), who is in great form again, made light of a 10 lb. penalty in the Stewards' Cup on the last day, and gave Kaleidoscope 1 lb. and a decisive beating, no small performance for a horse who was working hard at hurdle-racing all last winter. Douranee secured her seventh successive victory in the Cliftonville Plate; and backers must surely have forgotten Japonica's defeat of Out of Bounds at Goodwood when they laid 2 to 1 on Master Kildare for the Rous Stakes. He was asked to concede no less than 32 lb., or about twice weight for age, to Mr. Jennings's filly, a task in which he naturally failed utterly.

A dull day and bitter wind deprived the first day of the meeting on the pretty Lewes course of half its attractions; nevertheless there was an immense number of people present, who were rewarded by seeing large fields and capital racing for almost every event on the programme. The De Warrenne Handicap was quite a miniature Stewards' Cup, with its twelve runners; and a very pretty finish between the first three, in which only "heads" divided them, resulted in favour of Carnethy (6 st. 8 lb.). Haggis at last secured a race for Lord Rosebery, and, though entered to be sold for £50, he was willing to give 610 gs. to retain possession of her. Early Morn at last made amends for many previous disappointments by winning the rich Astley Stakes in a canter. The performance was an excellent one, as he was giving weight to a large majority of his fifteen opponents, and it makes Douranee a wonderfully smart filly, as she gave him 10 lb. and sex allowance on the previous Tuesday. On Saturday the County Cup, which has so often brought out a good field of speedy animals, was reduced to a match between Trappist and Placida. The old horse has become thoroughly unreliable, and the Oaks victress made the whole of the running, and won cleverly. The fondness of horses for certain courses has been proved again and again, and it was not, therefore, surprising to see Rylstone (8 st. 11 lb.), in spite of four previous unsuccessful essays this season, canter off with the Lewes Handicap for the third year in succession. The mare looked very well, but the opposition was only weak.

Glorious weather made the first day of the Egham Meeting very pleasant, the only drawback being the terribly heavy state of the course, which only last week was covered with water. Backers continued in the vein of luck which has stuck to them for the past fortnight, and the ring must have lost heavily again. Brother to Ersilia beat a field of twelve very cleverly in the King John Plate, though he was giving about a stone to most of them—no small task with the ground in such a holding condition. Mar made such an example of his five opponents, in a race of a mile and a half, that he is sure to find plenty of supporters for the Ebor Handicap, in which his weight, including a 5-lb. penalty, is 6 st. 11 lb.

The Twelfth was a very fine day; and fair sport was enjoyed on the grouse moors. In accordance with custom, the first "bag" made at Balmoral on Tuesday morning was sent south to her Majesty at Osborne; and from Abergeldie seven brace were sent to the Prince of Wales. Some speculative sportsmen anticipated the Twelfth so far as to endeavour to dispatch nine brace and a half to the London markets on Saturday last; but Sandy's scent was keen, and the grouse were seized by the police at the Inverness railway station, though deponent sayeth not how the toothsome birds were disposed of.

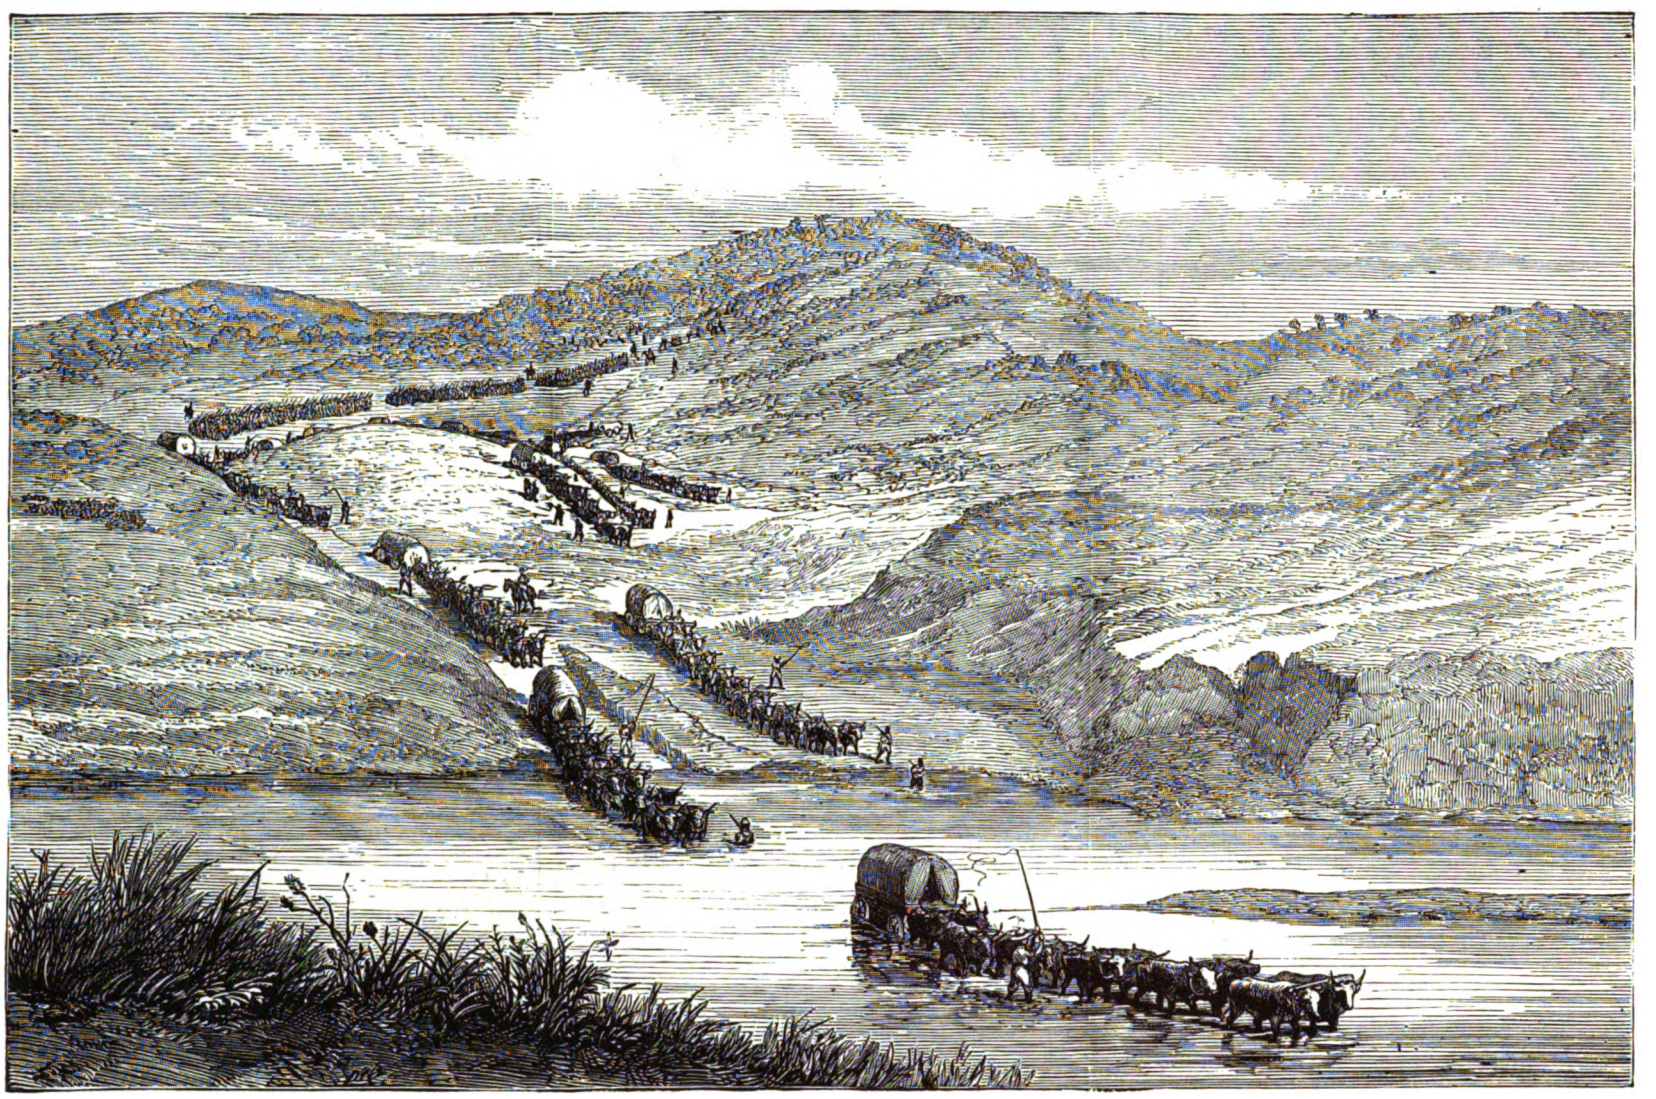
The old Arrow has been distinguishing herself at the Royal regattas off the Isle of Wight. She won the Cowes Town Cup on the 7th inst. by two minutes and a quarter from the Formosa, and the Bloodhound, being the only yacht that started under 50 tons, took the Royal Yacht Squadron's prize of £50 in the same race. The Royal Yacht Squadron's prize of £100, for schooners, on the 8th inst., the course round the Isle of Wight, was competed for by the following yachts:—Enchantress (Colonel Owen Williams), Hildegarde (the Prince of Wales), Shark (the Duke of Rutland), Cetonia (the Earl of Gosford), Aline (Lord Hastings), Miranda (Mr. G. Lampson), Egeria (Mr. J. Mulholland, M.P.). The Enchantress went off with the lead, but the winner of the Queen's prize, the Egeria, won the race by 2 min. 2 sec. For the prizes presented by Lord Londonderry quite a fleet of yachts entered, and the Siren came in first, the Vixen second, and the Ina third. The regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron was brought to a brilliant close in the evening by a display of fireworks by Mr. J. Pain on Cowes Parade, to see which and the illumination of the yachts, the Prince and Princess of Wales brought their two sons from Osborne, and were accompanied by the Dukes of Edinburgh and Connaught. On Saturday, at a meeting of members, fault was found with the bad state of the harbour; and a protest against the Nixie receiving the third prize in the Londonderry contest ended in the prize being awarded to Terpsichore. The same day the Royal Southampton Yacht Club's prizes of £100 and £50 for cutters and yawls respectively gave the Arrow another opportunity of showing her speed. The Arrow came home first in the cutter race, but the Formosa carried off the palm by time allowance, the Britannia being second. The Latona won the yawl race, Surf being second.

The Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta began at Ryde on Tuesday, when a £50 prize for cutters above forty tons was contested by The Arrow, Formosa, and Arethusa. Though the Formosa is a new vessel, with every possible modern improvement, the old Arrow succeeded in beating her by nearly two minutes, in addition to the start of 2 min. 47 sec. that she allowed her. Three yachts also started for a prize of £30, for cutters over thirty-five and under forty-one tons, and this was taken by The Bloodhound, Coryphée second, and Britannia last. The race on Wednesday was for the Ryde Town Cup. The Florinda took a flying start; the Formosa, Latona, Surf, Arrow, and Hypatia were in a cluster; the Enchantress was to leeward, and got a very bad start; but, as there was a course of fifty miles or so before the yachts, there were opportunities enough for reversing the positions. The Formosa won the cup by time, beating the Latona, that came in first. On Thursday the Latona won the Commodore's Prize.

Now that the ground has become a little harder, batsmen have a chance of showing something like their true form, and long scores are beginning to crop up pretty frequently. Last week the annual cricket carnival at Canterbury engrossed general attention, and some very fine scoring took place. Thirteen of Kent looked pretty certain to beat England, when Dr. W. G. Grace (not out, 63) and Flowers (not out, 72) came to the rescue, and snatched the match out of the fire by four wickets—a most meritorious display of batting just when it was most needed. In the second match, the Gentlemen of England—by no means a representative eleven—beat the Gentlemen of Kent by 131 runs. For the winners, Messrs. A. G. Steel (93) and W. G. Grace (54), did most of the scoring, while, on the other side, Mr. R. S. Jones (82) batted splendidly; and we must not omit to mention that, in the first innings of England, Mr. C. M. Cunliffe took five wickets for only ten runs. Turning to the county matches, we note that Yorkshire has beaten Middlesex by five wickets. The scoring was very small on either side, as the bowling of Pease and Bates proved so deadly that no one, except the Hon. A. Lyttelton (48), made anything of a stand against it. This week Gloucestershire has defeated Somersetshire in a single innings, with 152 runs to spare, Messrs. W. G. Grace (113) and F. Townsend (103) did most of the run-getting. Lancashire, playing without Mr. A. G. Steel, has sustained her first reverse in county matches this season, at the hands of the Yorkshire eleven. Messrs. Hornby (55) and Royle (47) did their best to avert defeat; but Bates (118) and Ulyett (55) were the chief contributors to a fine total of 353, and Yorkshire won by an innings and 80 runs.

Lawn-tennis has by no means driven archery out of the field. The National Archery Meeting was, on the 8th inst., brought to a close in the Cheltenham College Ground; and in the evening the fair toxophilites maintained their supremacy at a conversazione and concert. Mrs. Marshall, of East Sheen, as last year, gained the principal ladies' prize for first gross score, 708, and the ladies' transferable brace and badge; 2nd, Mrs. Pier Leigh (Cheltenham), 683; 3rd, Mrs. Butt (West Kent), 672; 4th, Mrs. Lister (Raglan), 647; 5th, Miss Hollins (Cheltenham), 543. Greatest number of golds: Miss Croker (Long Metford). Best gold: Mrs. Metcalf. Greatest score at sixty yards: Miss Hutchinson. Archer of the bann, 318. Gentlemen's gross score: Mr. Rimington (R. Toxophilite), 165 hits and 799 score; 2nd, Mr. Walters (Ewell), 729; 3rd, Mr. Neville (Robin Hood), 693; 4th, Mr. Walrond (S. Devon), 678. The Champion Gold Medal was won by Mr. Walters.

The race for the Amateur Swimming Championship was decided at the Welsh Harp on Saturday last, and resulted as follows:—H. Davenport, Ilex and Surrey S.C., first; R. Todd, Newcastle-on-Tyne (1000 yards amateur champion), second; J. P. Taylor, Newcastle (500 yards amateur champion), third; E. Danels, North London S.C. (captain), fourth; A. F. Bettinson, North London S.C., fifth; D. Ainsworth, Serpentine S.C. (ex-amateur champion), 0; G. Dunmore, Alliance S.C. (captain), 0; A. France, Alliance S.C., 0; J. Whittle, Serpentine S.C. (ex-champion), 0; H. P. Clementson, Hastings, S.C., 0. The race appeared quite at the mercy of Todd, until about 150 yards from home, when he began to tire, and also to steer a bad course, and Davenport, who swam in the gamest possible style, caught him and won by ten yards, for the sixth year in succession.



"STRANGERS AND PILGRIMS."

This gentle pair of faithful creatures, waiting for their master on the railway-station platform, with his luggage all ready for the train about to depart, are differently situated from the "Twa Dogs" of a well-known poetical dialogue by Robert Burns. Unlike those canine moralists, Luath and Cæsar, they are coupled together in the same attendance and personal service. They have an equal experience of social and domestic life amongst mankind. And if they could be supposed to talk as fully and freely as people of our human world, upon as great variety of topics, one animal's opinions might be as sound as the other's, regarding most questions of politics, trade, literature, science, and art. We cannot venture, however, to demand so much intellectual exertion from the amiable beasts, or even to inquire what they really think of the manners of dressed-up bipeds strutting or bustling up and down the platform. They have plenty of sense, and if not enough always to hold their tongues, enough to be aware that barking now and then is safer than talking. In the meantime we see them content to wait in decorous silence the approach of the travelling gentleman who is pleased to own them. He is going to take them somewhere down in the country, where both he and they will be much happier, for a few weeks at least, than they have been in London since the latter days of June. No dog that ever lived, we should think, could like best to live in town, and if a man prefers it, his dogs may, perhaps, think of him, and may quietly say to one another, "The more fool he." But the dogs and their master seem to be of one mind upon the occasion of this journey.

A new institution for the reception of the blind has been erected in Sheffield, at a cost of about £15,000. It is situated on the Manchester road, and will accommodate a large number of inmates, the able-bodied of whom will be taught such trades as the blind can follow. An endowment fund of £25,000, left by Mr. Holy, of Norton, will be applied to the support of the new institution, to the trustees of the existing Sheffield Blind Institution, which has been built with a view to ameliorate the condition of the blind to as great an extent as possible. The building will be opened early in September.

THE ZULU WAR.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, has apparently had a narrow escape of his life. It is mentioned by the Times' correspondent, in a letter of the 17th ult., that Mr. Prior, while sketching in the King's Kraal at Ulundi, after the battle and destruction of the Zulu capital, was chased by some lurking enemies. But they did not catch him or hit him; and, though he has met with a few rough experiences in this campaign, as in previous African and European wars, we hope soon to welcome his safe return to England. He contributes to this Number of our Journal the sketch of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood's flying column, on its way to the front at Ipoka camp, passing the encampment of General Newdigate's division; also, that in which Lord Chelmsford, General Newdigate, and General Marshall are shown with their telescopes or field-glasses, all standing together and looking out across the country for the expected approach of Cetewayo's messengers or ambassadors of peace. These ambassadors had visited the camp some days before, and had been sent back to the Zulu King with precise information of the terms which would be accepted, and with an intimation that the army would, on July 3, cross the river on its advance to Ulundi, if no intimation were received of Cetewayo's submitting to those terms. Hence the evident importance of their possible return to the Camp, as the time drew near, and the anxiety with which they were awaited by the three English Generals—Lord Chelmsford, attired in drab breeches, boots, and short dark coat or jacket, resting his telescope upon the tarpaulin covering of a dray or waggon, is shown in our Artist's Sketch as the one standing close to the wheel; at his right hand is General Newdigate, while General Marshall, with a smaller field-glass stands a few paces behind them; another officer lies sprawling on the top of the waggon, but not less intently scanning the distant horizon. The same page contains an Engraving, from a Sketch by an officer of the 99th (Duke of Edinburgh's) Regiment, which formed part of General Hope Crealock's division advancing from the Tugela into Zululand. It represents the crossing of the river Amatikulu by the rear-guard of that regiment, and by the waggon-trains under their convoy.

Our news from South Africa is to the date of the 22nd ult., but there are no fresh military events of importance. Lord Chelmsford and Sir Garnet Wolseley met at St. Paul's on the 18th, after which Lord Chelmsford went to Durban, where he was received with honours. He would return to England, by way of Capetown, very shortly. It is not expected that Sir Bartle Frere will resign. Generals Hope Crealock, Newdigate, and Marshall, Brigadier Wood, and Colonel Redvers Buller are coming home on account of health. The 17th Lancers and several other regiments will be sent home at once. Sir Garnet Wolseley had a conference with a number of the Zulu chiefs on the 18th, and received their submission. He has gone back to Natal for a few days, and was to be at Pietermaritzburg on the 21st, but would soon return to the army in Zululand. Ulundi, which Lord Chelmsford had evacuated, is to be reoccupied by Brigadier Clarke with two regiments, as a fortified post. Cetewayo has retired, with six or seven thousand men, to the north-east portion of Zululand.

We learn further from a second edition of Thursday's Times that Cetewayo had on July 22 made another effort to know whether his liberty would be granted him. He said he was completely deserted by his warriors. A brigade under General Harrison, 2500 strong, one squadron of regular cavalry, and the second battery of artillery, move up to the Transvaal.

Mr. W. E. Forster opened on Monday the higher Board Schools erected by the Bradford School Board.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The French Academy held its annual public sitting on the 7th inst., M. Jules Simon delivering the customary address on the awards for virtue. The concluding passage of his speech, which was otherwise devoted to narrating the deeds of those who were to receive the prizes, was as follows:—

> The Academy would like to have its hands full of wreaths to honour as they deserve to be honoured all these great hearts, and he who speaks in its name always regrets having to confine himself to a passing notice where he would fain recount the details of noble lives overflowing with such beautiful lessons. In this Paris—which has been scornfully, rather absurdly, called the Great Babylon—the malevolent and superficial see from above only depravity and vulgar greed below. If as friends or disinterested observers they would penetrate into the workshops, visit the lodging-houses; if they lived enough with the poor to deserve their confidence, they would find that nobody gives so readily and with so good heart as those who have to labour with their hands to win their daily bread, and that sacrifices amounting to heroism are far from uncommon among them. Vice makes a parade, virtue is retiring. Workmen follow a comrade to the grave, and if an orphan is left one of them picks it up and takes it to his house, never to desert it. I know very many Paris workmen who have thus adopted the children of their friends and brought them up without distinction from those which God had given them.

M. Jules Simon concluded with a few words in honour of the founder of the prizes. The chief prize was awarded to a sailor, Captain Etienne Maigre, who, since 1834, when he was seventeen years of age, has saved nine lives, some of them in the most heroic circumstances. The second was awarded to two ladies, Mdlles. Virginie and Hélène Frain, the founders of an orphanage which they have maintained on the proceeds of their own labour, and to which they have devoted the greater part of their lives. The other prizes were given for acts of benevolence of a similar kind.

On the proposition of M. Benjamin Raspail and twenty-four of his colleagues a report has been drawn up in the name of the Seventh Commission d'Initiative, recommending the sale of the Crown diamonds of France.

By the death of M. Alphonse Thys, France has lost one of the oldest of her native composers. He was born at Paris on March 8, 1807, received his musical education at the National Conservatoire, and in 1833 gained the "Grand Prix de Rome," of the benefits of which, however, he declined to avail himself, as he refused to leave Paris. Following his profession in the French capital, he wrote many songs and pianoforte pieces, and afterwards began to write for the theatres. His earlier works for the lyric stage were operettas, a class of composition of which he and M. Adolphe Adam were the originators. He founded, in conjunction with M. Bourget, the "Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique," of which he was for several years the president.

SPAIN.

The remains of the Infanta Maria del Pilar arrived at the Escurial on the 7th inst., when a funeral mass was celebrated, attended by the King, the members of the Royal family, the Ministers, and a number of other personages. The Patriarch of the Indies officiated. King Alfonso, while returning with his sisters to La Granja, met with an accident. The carriage containing the Royal party was upset and the King's right arm was dislocated, but was easily reset. The Princesses sustained no injury; but General Echaque, who was in attendance, severely sprained his wrist. King Alfonso was able on Saturday to sign several decrees without experiencing any inconvenience, and his doctors are of opinion that a speedy convalescence may be expected. His Majesty has personally replied to the telegrams addressed to him by the principal European Sovereigns and several Princes and Princesses, some expressing condolence on the death of the Infanta Maria del Pilar, and others congratulating him on his escape when thrown from his carriage. Queen Victoria telegraphed to his Majesty congratulating him upon his escape in his recent carriage accident; and the King replied thanking her Majesty for her message, and adding that his health was satisfactory.

MEETING OF THE EMPERORS OF GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

The Emperor Francis Joseph arrived at Gastein on Saturday last, and was received by the Emperor William, with whom he dined at the castle. Next morning the two Emperors exchanged visits, and took a cordial leave of each other, the Emperor of Austria afterwards departing from Gastein. The Emperor of Germany left Gastein on Tuesday afternoon. Previous to his departure his Majesty expressed to the Burgomaster the satisfaction he felt at the great benefit he had derived from the waters, and at the arrangements made for his meeting with the Emperor of Austria.

CANADA.

The Governor-General and her Royal Highness Princess Louise arrived at St. John's on the 6th inst., and met with an enthusiastic reception. At Moncton, on their way, a French address was presented to his Excellency and the Princess. This city was elaborately decorated with garlands and flags, and numerous mottoes were displayed bearing the words "Welcome," and "God bless our Queen." A formal reception was held at the railway station, at which addresses were received and replied to by the Governor-General. A procession was then formed to escort his Excellency and her Royal Highness through the streets, which were very crowded, great enthusiasm being manifested by the inhabitants. The Governor-General and the Princess Louise arrived at Fredericton, New Brunswick, on Tuesday, and met with a brilliant reception.

The Quebec Legislative Assembly on the 6th inst. rejected a motion of the Premier to reprimand a member for using offensive language towards the Treasurer. But it was not regarded as a defeat by the Government, as the Ministers claimed that it was caused by a misunderstanding among their supporters. In the evening the Legislature, by 31 against 27, passed a vote of confidence in the Government. On the 13th the Legislature, by a majority of two, passed a vote of confidence in the railway policy pursued by the Provincial Government.

INDIA.

A telegram from Simla of last Saturday's date states that the evacuation of Afghanistan by the British troops has begun, and will, General Stewart expects, be completed by Sept. 1. Parliamentary papers have been issued containing a long despatch addressed last month by the Viceroy in Council to the Home Government giving a review of the policy of the Indian Government towards Afghanistan, and a despatch in reply from Lord Cranbrook approving the action of the Indian Government and expressing a belief that the policy embodied in the Treaty of Gundamuk will, if pursued consistently, secure both British and Afghan interests, and promote the stability and peace of the Empire.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, telegraphing on Sunday, says that cholera is still prevalent among the troops and natives at Candahar. The total number of European cases up to the 6th inst. was seventy-five, of which sixty had proved fatal. The disease is reported to be spreading towards Herat. He also states that the disaffection in Rumpa is reported to be spreading, and that the Madras Government has dispatched considerable bodies of men and munitions of war to the disturbed district.

A telegram from the Executive Commissioner at Sydney to Sir Daniel Cooper announces that the opening of the exhibition is now fixed for Sept. 17.

King Menelek of Shoa, the southern part of Abyssinia, has informed the Anti-Slavery Society that he has now abolished the slave trade throughout the whole of his dominions. The despatch is written in Amharic, and sealed with the King's great seal.

A curious lawsuit is pending at Mayence. A man who had insured his life for a considerable sum attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself. A relative cut the rope in time to save the man's life. The insurance company now wish to have the policy declared null and void, because the assured has intentionally injured his health by his attempted suicide.

M. Cogalniceano, Roumanian Minister of the Interior, has issued a circular to the Prefects giving them minute instructions as to the exercise of their powers with a view to the development of the country, by the careful maintenance of public order, the promotion of hygienic regulations, the opening up of fresh roads, and the advancement of education and agriculture.

The Pope has issued an encyclical on the teaching of philosophy, which fills ten columns of the Osservatore Romano. His Holiness holds that the greater part of the evils which afflict society in the present day are due to the inculcation of false philosophy; and says that philosophy, in order that it may attain its end, must be subject to faith. After a minute survey of the results of the philosophic inquiry of the Fathers, he exhorts the Bishops to adopt in their ecclesiastical schools the teachings of St. Thomas Aquinas.

The Bulgarian Cabinet has addressed a manifesto to the nation, in which it enjoins the observance of the Constitutional laws and the preservation of the peace of the country, and states its determination to take all possible measures for preventing disturbance in the Principality; at the same time it declares its intention to direct its energies without delay to the work of internal organisation, and will endeavour to merit the sympathy of foreign Powers.—On Sunday, in the presence of Prince Alexander, the Bulgarian Ministers, the British Diplomatic Agent, and many public functionaries, thirty-eight students, who have completed their studies, received diplomas as assistant-surgeons.

It is stated in several of the papers that the draught charter of the proposed Victoria University has, in accordance with the request of the Lords of the Privy Council, been submitted to that body. According to this draught the University would have the right of conferring upon all persons, whether male or female, who have pursued a regular course of study in any of its colleges, and passed its examinations, all degrees which can be conferred by any other University of the kingdom, with the exception of medical degrees; the Privy Council having declined to confer power as to these, at a time when legislation on the whole subject of medical degrees, and the licensing power for the practice of medicine, has been proposed to Parliament, and remains unsettled. The charter contains provisions for establishing a convocation of graduates of the University, with appropriate rights and functions.

A great fire broke out on the morning of the 8th inst. in the Latin quarter of Serajevo, in the Herzegovina. Owing to the wind being very high at the time and the supply of water being deficient, the flames spread rapidly, and the Catholic, Servian, and Jewish districts, and the whole of the commercial quarter were burned down. More than a thousand buildings were destroyed, and ten thousand persons are rendered homeless. They are encamped in the squares and gardens of the town. A relief committee has been organised to supply them with food and shelter and to collect subscriptions on their behalf. The Emperor of Austria has subscribed 10,000 fl. It was not until eight o'clock on the following morning that, by the unremitting exertions of the military under the Duke of Wurtemburg, the further spread of the conflagration was checked. Three of the soldiers were killed. The fire is supposed to have been caused by some excise officers sealing casks in a spirit warehouse. According to an official report issued by the Town Council of Serajevo, the total loss occasioned by the late fire amounts to 23,000,000 fl. The Servian merchants estimate their losses at 3,000,000 ducats.

NEW BOOKS.

Mr. W. R. S. Ralston, who has made the subject of "Russian folk-lore" his own, gave a few years ago, if memory can be trusted, a brief but lucid sketch of Russian history from the very earliest times to a comparatively modern date, and a perusal of that little work would form an excellent preparation for a study of The History of Russia: by Alfred Rambaud; translated by Leonora B. Lang (Sampson Low and Co.), two large volumes, by no means too large for the purpose, in which the tale of Russia's growth from its primitive state to the proportions it had assumed in 1877 is told in a fuller and more elaborate style, of course, than befitted the unpretentious introductory lectures of Mr. Ralston. And the English translation, in its two large and expensive volumes, is a far more imposing work, with all manner of expansions and additions, than the original French publication, which is believed to have come out in the form of one inexpensive volume. However, the translation appears to be excellent, and among the additions which make the English version more bulky as well as more serviceable than the French is an index, less complete, perhaps, than it might have been, but certainly much better than none at all. There are critics who discern in M. Rambaud's work a disposition to be more than a little kind to Russia's faults, to regard all that is Russian, in fact, with an unduly, an outrageously favourable eye; and the secret of this partiality is traced to his belief in the natural attraction of France towards Russia and Russia towards France, so that the French may some day derive from the Russians as much benefit, from the military and political points of view, as the Russians are considered to have already derived from the French. However this may be, and whatever bias may be shown by M. Rambaud, however light may be the touch with which he sketches Russian atrocities, and however vivid may be the colours in which he paints the more admirable scenes of Russian history, it is probable that the English reader will find in the English translation, with the extensions and additions already adverted to, a fuller and more readable account than is to be found elsewhere, within a reasonable compass, of the origin and progress of the great Russian empire. Granted that Russians and Poles differ, as they would be pretty certain to do, touching the questions connected with Lithuania and Ruthenia; granted that M. Rambaud "Russianises" all through his work; and granted that he tones down the conduct of certain ferocious and bestial Russian sovereigns; yet these are matters of comparatively little consequence to the reader who is concerned primarily with the spread of an empire rather than with the moral qualities of the people and the sovereigns who built up that empire. At the same time it is, of course, but right that the reader should know whether the author whose narrative is consulted may be regarded as completely trustworthy; and, this being so, it is worth while to bear in mind that M. Rambaud has been taken to task for allowing himself to be led by his Russian proclivities into error and misrepresentation arising chiefly from his uncompromising adoption of Russian views. It being premised that there are maps and illustrations to assist the reader, a description of the manner in which the two volumes are arranged may be attempted. The first begins with a discourse upon the geography of Russia, and ends with the early years of Peter the Great; the second, beginning with the continuation of Peter's reign, ends with a few brief remarks upon the late war in the East, and with a statement of the present position, when "Russia, sketched out by Rurik, dispersed after Iaroslav the Great, reunited by the dynasty of the Ivans, Europeanised by Peter the Great and Catherine II., delivered from serfage by Alexander II., now enters into a new phase of her history," which will be emphatically "the history of the Russian people," as distinguished from "the history of the Russian State." As with France and other countries, so with Russia; there is no general consent as to the date which the historian should assign to the origin of the modern State. As regards France, should we date from the Carlovingian, or the Merovingian, or the Capetian dynasty? As regards Russia, should we date from the invitation accepted by Rurik, who established himself at Novgorod; or from the first of the Princes who intrigued at Moscow? Russian historians take the former date, and Polish the latter. It has been complained that M. Rambaud follows the Russian practice; yet he writes distinctly of the Muscovite princes: "They were the founders of the Russian empire, as the Capetians were of the French monarchy." Surely this is enough to prevent the reader from being misled, enough to show in what sense certain conclusions are to be accepted. Again, as regards Ivan called "the Terrible," who assumed the title of Tzar, M. Rambaud has been severely handled for not joining in the hue and cry with which that abominable tyrant's memory has been pursued, and for palliating rather than exaggerating or simply exposing the revolting savage's incredible cruelty. But, at any rate, M. Rambaud tells enough to let intelligent readers form their own opinion; and a little whitewashing is the order of the day. "Ivan's character," says M. Rambaud, "was a strange compound of greatness and barbarism. Cruel, dissolute, superstitious, we see him by turns yielding himself, with his favourites, to the most shameful excesses, or, covered with a monkish garment, heading them in processions and other pious exercises. . . . His brutal habits and the facility with which he used his iron staff, had a tragic conclusion. In an altercation with his son Ivan he struck him, and the blow was mortal. . . . Without allowing himself to be biassed by Ivan's numerous cruelties, the historian ought fairly to compare him with men of his own time." This may be lenient treatment, but it is better than parading "the whole of the disgusting details," and raising the readers' gorge without much increase of their historical knowledge. But, whatever objection may lie against M. Rambaud for his tendency to slur over the bestialities of Russian tyrants, suspected of being more than half lunatic, there will probably be few to deny that he has produced a literary work which, to judge from the English translation of it, is excellent reading, and which, if it contain some information deserving of speedy oblivion, contains considerably more deserving of constant remembrance.

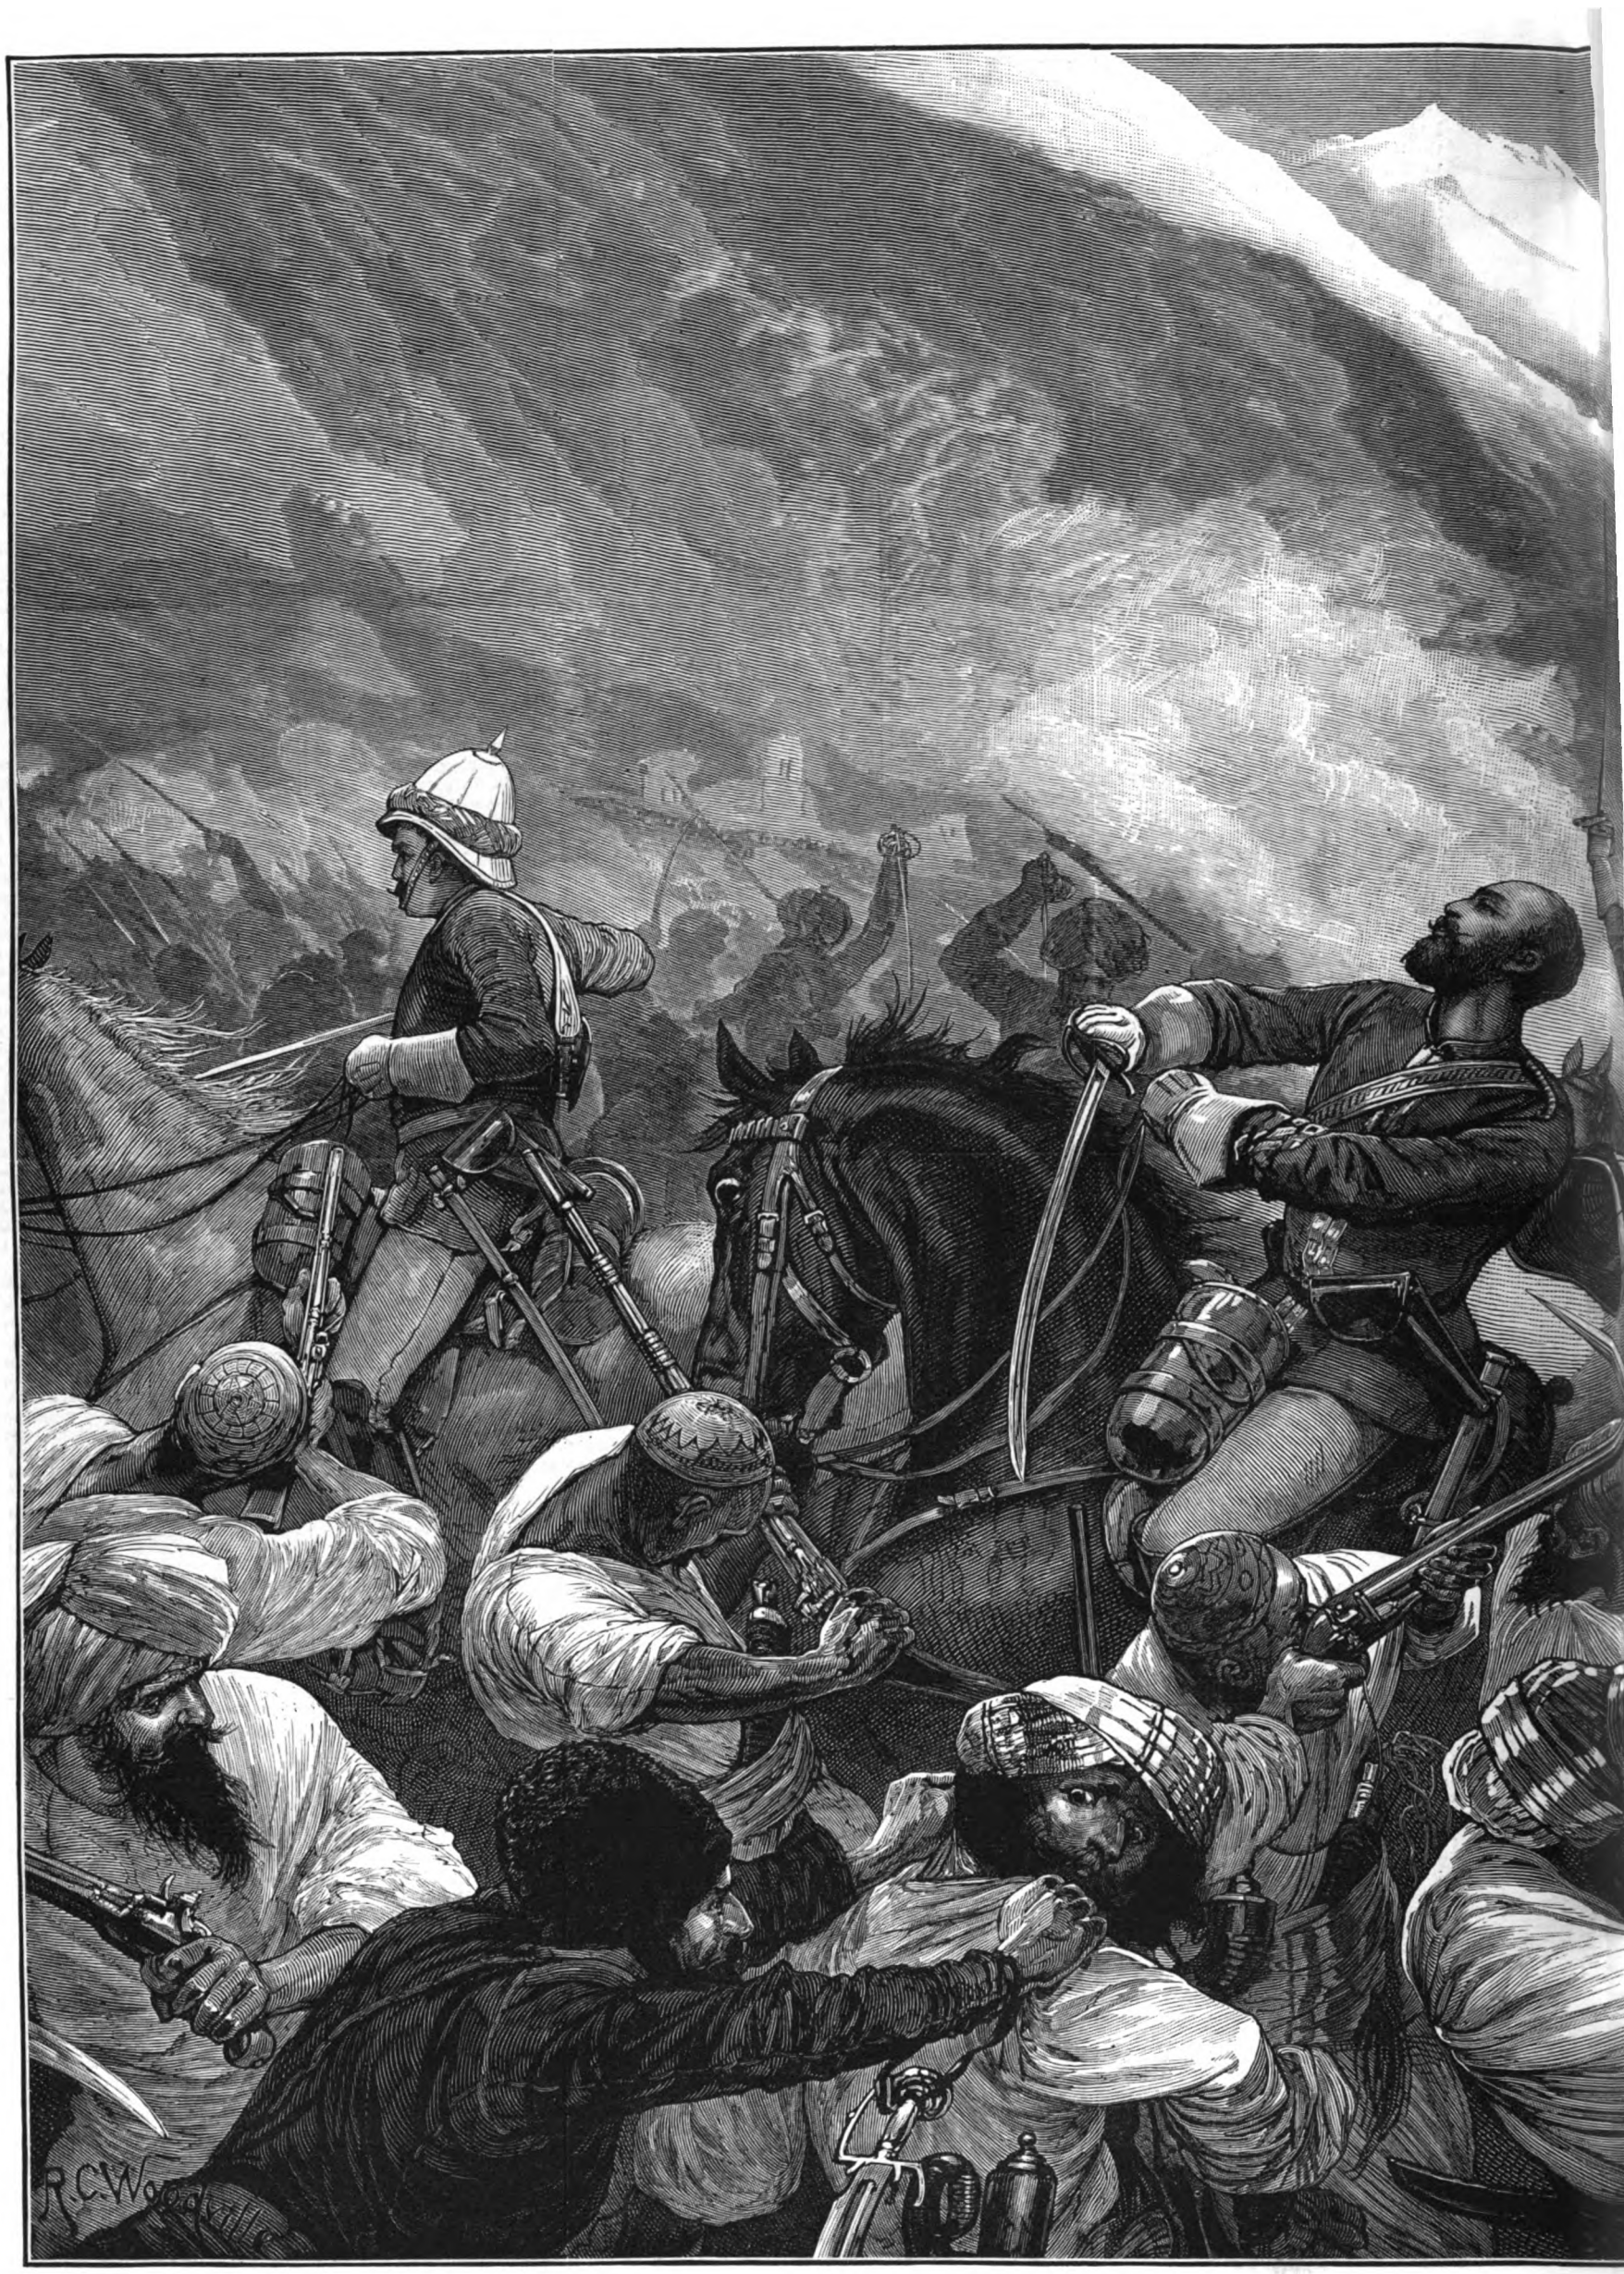
If there be any prospects of the spread of European knowledge and of the Christian religion among our native Indian fellow-subjects, it is worth while to read the Life of Alexander Duff, D.D., by Dr. George Smith, the first volume of which is published by Hodder and Stoughton. It is worth while, in any case, to become acquainted with the biography of a great man, and we should say that Dr. Duff was really one, if measured by the amount of intellectual and moral energy that he threw into his life's work, and by the breadth and loftiness of its aims. He went out to India in 1829 as the first Scottish Kirk Missionary, and immediately conceived the idea of a grand scheme of education for Hindoo youth, who were to be instructed, at least in the higher classes, through the medium of English literature, history, and science, completely breaking the mental fetters of old Asiatic tradition. In 1835, he was back in Scotland, pleading for this object with such powerful eloquence, and organising the forces at his disposal with such commanding skill, that seeming impossibilities were half vanquished at the commencement of so bold a task. With the spirit of his revered master Chalmers, he fairly lifted the public mind off the plodding path of precedents, and carried it along with him in a vehement course of enthusiastic labours, which have actually yielded some fruit, though not yet all that he expected. The narrative is well related by Dr. George Smith in this volume, extending only to the year 1841, when Dr. Duff was again personally directing his Mission Schools and Colleges in India, much thwarted by the retrograde measures of Lord Auckland's Government, but resolved to persevere and to succeed in the end. A second volume will describe the progress of this grand enterprise in later years, and the remainder of a long and active life, the usefulness of which, both religious and social, was felt in North Britain, as well as in our Eastern Empire. Those who are familiar with the interesting "Life of Norman Macleod" will recollect his visit to India, with a Commission from the General Assembly of the Scottish Kirk, which threw fresh light upon the results of Dr. Duff's previous undertaking. It is a remarkable example of philanthropic endeavours begun and continued with uncommon strength of purpose, and destined, we trust, to prove largely beneficial, though it must be a work of time.

An accomplished authoress, Miss M. Betham Edwards, has made of her Holidays in Eastern France a very agreeable volume (Hurst and Blackett, publishers). She enjoyed leisurely visits to the country houses of French friends, with whom she saw the domestic and social life of the people, as well as different scenes of natural or historic interest. The district she first visited was that of Brie and the valley of the Marne, not far from Paris eastward. Her description of the richly cultivated land and well-to-do folk is full of comfort. Their cheese and fruit, much of it destined for the English market, are the means of great prosperity. The French peasant farmer, in these favourable circumstances, adds the occupation of rented fields to his small freehold estate, and becomes equal to the average English agriculturist in the scale of his business. His wife and daughters, living so near Paris, wear the city fashions, read books, and play the piano. A cheerful seat of industrial enterprise is Noisiel-sur-Marne, with Menier's famous chocolate manufactory and model village of workpeople. The splendid mansion of Baron James Rothschild at Ferrières, with its treasures of artistic decoration, is also described. At several towns of that district, or of the neighbouring Champagne, Miss Edwards found attractive subjects of antiquarian study. Provins, the romantic abode of the old Counts who once ruled the province, is a place to take the instructed fancy. Troyes, with its noble cathedral and other characteristic memorials of the past, has claims upon the tourist's attention. Then Miss Edwards shifts the scene to a not less interesting country, further to the south-east. This is Franche Comté, with the respectable city of Besançon; the highlands towards the Jura, Montbéliard, which is a Protestant town, and the upper valley of the Doubs, with its picturesque subalpine scenery. It is a delightful region, except for the bad inns; and she fills many bright pages with charming pictures of what she saw in leisurely carriage-drives, accompanied by her friends, ladies and children, to this or that place in a tolerably wide circuit. From Montbéliard to St. Hippolyte, Maîche, and Morteau, on the Swiss frontier, with the falls of the Doubs and one or two beautiful highland lakes, is an excursion worth the effort in any fair summer time; but a railway is henceforth to make it easier than now. From Besançon there is an opportunity of visiting Ornans, the inviting abode of the gifted landscape-painter Courbet, a stanch Republican who got into disgrace by demolishing the Napoleon Column of the Place Vendôme at Paris. The scenery of the Loue is found well deserving of his admired works of art, taking their subjects from its manifold natural beauties. Miss Edwards passes on to Salins and Lons-le-Saulnier, and thence to Bourg-en-Bresse, in the department of the Ain. The features of the country along the slopes of the Jura at this part are singularly bold and striking. Salins, with its mineral waters and commodious hydropathic boarding-house, is an approved resort of those in search of health. In going higher up there is a sad lack of travelling conveniences, as the diligence is extremely tedious, fatiguing, and disagreeable. For pedestrians, or those who can hire carriages and horses for themselves, the French side of the Jura is highly recommended. It is, as Miss Edwards remarks, what the Germans call a "spazierlich" territory. This limestone range of mountain, though it does not rise above 8000 ft., presents a greater variety of grand and beautiful forms than is displayed by an equal extent of the mighty Alpine ranges. Deep ravines and gorges pierced by foaming torrents, crags and rocky precipices, hanging woods and lofty pine-forests, caverns adorned with stalactites, grassy dells, glades, and "combes," abound in this beautiful region. The old towns, with their historical traditions and associations, afford matter for pleasing study of another kind. We remember Mr. S. Read's fine picture of the interior of that richly-decorated church of Brou, near Bourg-en-Bresse, with the stately monuments of Philibert, Duke of Savoy, his wife, Margaret, Duchess of Burgundy, and Margaret of Austria, his mother. These names give an index to important parts of European history, which may be perused with advantage by the tourist following in the steps of Miss Edwards. Her book is one of real benefit to the reader, as it both refreshes and enlarges our conceptions of Eastern France.

Holiday visitors to Oban, if they are seriously addicted to Celtic legendary antiquities, should take for their reading on wet days a book called Loch Etive and the Sons of Uisnach (Macmillan). It is a series of thoughtful discussions, in the form of imaginary dialogues between several friends concerning the topography and probable early history of the shores within a few hours' excursion north and east of Oban. The Scots from Erin here settled in the seventh century of the Christian era, when they came over the sea to Alba, which was the land of the Picts, or Cruithne, before they conquered and made it Scotland. These Scots were the Dalriad tribe or clan, led by exiled or adventurous Princes of Ulster, whose exploits are told in songs of the Irish bards. It is a good idea of the author of this book to bring together, for comparing and reconciling their statements, those Gaelic traditions of Ireland and the Ossianic or other West Highland tales of Celtic origin preserved in Scotland. With this view, he employs such different interlocutors as Cameron, the Scottish Highlander; O'Keefe, the learned Irishman, who is perfectly familiar with all the literary remains of primitive ages in his own country; and a Lowland Scotchman named Loudoun, with two ladies, Margaet and Sheena, and a schoolboy, Willie. They are an intelligent and agreeable party, but the conversations are too apt to fall into mere lectures delivered by O'Keefe, with an occasional commentary on the part of Cameron, which might have tried the patience of the younger audience. Some of the curious old stories, however, will be found very amusing. The best is that of the troublesome company of bards and their wives, to the number of several hundred, presided over by Seanchan or Shenkin, going to stay at the Court of Guaire, King of Connaught. They were terrible satirists, and chartered libertines in the abuse of their art to personal calumny and scandal. It was the law and custom of that age to give a bard whatever he or his wife chose to ask, however strange and rare or difficult to procure. These reckless visitors tormented King Guaire by calling for the most extravagant luxuries—"a pet cuckoo in an ivy-bush at Christmas," or a dish of strawberries in January; a dress made of the spider's web of many colours; a red-eared white cow, with her liver of tallow, and large quantities of ale brewed from a single grain of corn. The chief of the cats, whom the bards had satirised, would have carried off Seanchan to be scratched to death, but St. Kieran threw a red-hot bar of iron at the cat. Marvan, the King's nephew, a swineherd, who was also a prophet and potent magician, at length discomfited these insolent bards, asking them for songs and stories which they did not know. They were bound to recite whatever they were asked for, and as Marvan knew more than they did, they were forced to depart. The rich humour and gaiety of spirit in these Irish legends contrasts pleasantly with the sombre sadness of the Ossianic poetry. As for the "Sons of Uisnach," they are considered by Mr. Skene to have been Cruithne, or Picts, of an earlier date than the Dalriadic invasion. But Uisnach, now Usny, was the name of a place in Ireland, and the Irish legends tell of three brothers, Naisi, Ainli, and Ardan, from the Court of King Conor at Emania, near Armagh, with a young lady called Deirdre, or Darthula, whom Naisi had married, emigrating to the land of Alba, and dwelling there in peace, till they were betrayed and slain upon returning by invitation to their native country. The ruins of a conspicuous ancient fort, Dun Mac Uisneachan, sometimes called Beregonium, are minutely described, with the aid of engraved views and plans. An explanation is given of the modes of building in early times, more especially that of melting or vitrefying by fire the stones of a wall, to bind them compactly together. Druidism, though its traces are few, and its existence, as an organised religious system, appears more than doubtful in that country as well as in Ireland, engages some attention. The volume contains much that is both interesting and instructive. It is published without the author's name.

A stout-hearted Scottish minister, whether of the Established or Free Kirk or the U. P. we do not know, the Rev. W. Forwell, of Dundee, spent his long summer holidays in a daring feat of amateur seamanship. With his son "Bill," a boy of fourteen, embarking at Broughty Ferry in a half-decked yawl 20 ft. long and scarce 8 ft. broad, he sailed all down the eastern coasts of Britain and across the Channel to Calais, afterwards safely sailing back. This was accomplished between May 18 and Aug. 24, with ample leisure for stopping and looking about, visiting friends here and there in seaport towns, and running up to Paris by the railway from Calais or Boulogne. On Sundays, or Sabbath days, as a religious Scotchman would call them, Mr. Forwell made it his rule to be on shore, attending local public worship, or sometimes preaching and leading prayer for his Presbyterian brethren. His robust piety and morality, on the principles of the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, are vigorously expressed in frequent bursts of sentiment. Men and manners, as well as the wonders of the sea and sky, and the ways of Nature and Providence, draw out his unpolished eloquence with startling force of feeling. He is, in short, a hearty good fellow and energetic sort of Christian, a valiant, shrewd, and careful sailor, and a cheerful comrade, but not a graceful writer. The Cruise of the Silver Cloud may be classed with those of Mr. John Macgregor, better known as "Rob Roy." It is published by Messrs. Blackie and Son.

Sunny Italy has many a cool and shady recess, as we learn from Horace long since, on the forest-covered slopes of her central mountain range, as well as on the southern declivity of the Alps. A Nook in the Apennines, by Mr. Leader Scott (published by Kegan Paul and Co.), is thus inviting even in summer. It is at Lucchio, in the highlands above Pistoja, near the boundary of Tuscany and Lucca, that the author with his family, including "Aunt Louisa," sojourns from June to the end of September. He is an artist of some repute, and his eye for the picturesque finds many objects there of landscape or costume-figure, building, or household furniture, worth a few telling strokes of his pen or pencil. Walks and rides in the neighbourhood, seldom leaving the happy children behind, and frequent talks with the intelligent native peasantry, supply much variety of entertainment. The scenery is fine, with luxuriant groves of chestnut-trees around, and the valley of the Lima stretching beneath, guarded by the Poggio Bombolante and the Prato Fiorito, not to name the more distant peaks and dome-shaped heights, wearing new aspects with the hourly changes of sunlight or cloud in the sky. Neighbourly villagers, with three presiding grandmothers of the community, whom the author whimsically names after the three Greek Fates, give rise to many small incidents of frank sociability. Mr. Leader Scott is also an antiquary; and his studies of the Etruscan, as well as of the mediæval, past in this secluded district, though not set forth at length, seem to lend a substantial interest to the local descriptions. A number of small engravings are interspersed throughout the book.



Alderman King, the Mayor of Portsmouth, laid the foundation-stone of a new Masonic hall and club last Saturday. Mr. W. W. Beach, M.P., Grand Master of the province of Hants and the Isle of Wight, afterwards consecrated a new Masonic lodge, to be called "The Duke of Connaught Lodge," at Cawte's Hotel, Southsea.

A special meeting of the Huddersfield Town Council was held yesterday week to consider a proposed gift of twenty-five acres of land by Mr. Henry F. Beaumont for a public park at Dungeon-wood, about a mile and three quarters from the centre of Huddersfield. The council almost unanimously decided to accept the gift, and it is proposed to spend about £5000 in preparing the ground for a park.

Dr. Frankland, in his monthly report on the London water supply, states that the Thames water supplied by each of the five companies drawing their supply from that source was, during the month of July, much polluted with organic impurity, and was unfit for dietetic purposes. The West Middlesex Company's water was, moreover, "slightly turbid, and contained moving organisms." The Lea water, delivered by the New River and East London Companies, was only slightly superior to the Thames water. The New River water was "slightly turbid, owing to suspended crystals of carbonate of lime." The deep-well waters supplied by the Kent and Colne Valley Companies and by the Tottenham Local Board were, as usual, clear and bright and of excellent quality.

The Right Hon. W. H. Smith, First Lord of the Admiralty, who presided at the closing of the Westminster Industrial Exhibition on Saturday last, gave an address, in which, after reviewing the work which had already been done, he pointed out that future exhibitions must not be merely a repetition of that which had just been held. Each year's exhibition must be an advance upon its predecessor, so that it should compare favourably with exhibitions in other quarters, otherwise it would not carry out the object in view. He believed that the conditions under which we lived were most favourable for the development of cheap, good, and thorough work, and that English workmen, if they only sought to make this a real school of technical education, need have no doubt as to their success in the race of the world.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Is there any clause in the Police Act, or in any Act of Parliament concerning the government of the metropolis, under which statute parents can be summoned and fined for allowing children of tender years to wander without protection in the public thoroughfares? I ask the question, first, because (being infirm, and generally pressed for time) I am obliged to use a great many hansom cabs—say a thousand in the course of a year; next, because the shortest cut from where I live to the City and the West-End is, in the first instance, through the narrow part of Gray's-inn-lane and Fetter-lane, Holborn, and in the other through Dudley-street, Soho (formerly Monmouth-street), or Seven Dials; and I never traverse any one of these thoroughfares without my heart sickening and my blood running cold at the hairbreadth escapes of small children from being run over. In Dudley-street mere infants are allowed not only to lie about the doorsteps and the foot-pavement, but to sprawl in the gutter and totter about the roadway with imminent peril to their poor little lives and limbs. Last Sunday but one, at a quarter to six in the afternoon, I hailed a hansom in Pall-mall, and bade the driver take me to Bloomsbury. He was a careful, steady man, who would have satisfied Sir Roger de Coverley. But he drove through Dudley-street, which was, as usual, littered from end to end with small children. Suddenly there was a shriek of horror, and a rush of people towards us. The cabman pulled up at once; but there was a little child under the wheel.

The parents of the poor little thing lived in Dudley-street, and its father was fetched. He was lying down, he said, at the time of the accident. The mother I did not see until the next day. Fortunately, there was another hansom cab empty close by. Into this vehicle I put the injured child and its father; whilst into my own cab I took a decent working man who had witnessed the accident and could testify to the careful driving of the cabman. Then we made the best of our way to Charing-Cross Hospital. I say the best of our way, for my horse managed to cast a shoe; we were surrounded by a howling mob, asking in vituperative language what I thought of myself for running over poor people's children (as though the accident had been any fault of mine); and between Dudley-street and the Hospital there was not a single policeman to be seen. Providentially, there were no bones broken; but the poor little fellow's knee-caps (he was just two years and a half old) were bruised, and he was badly shaken. He was at once and kindly seen to at the Hospital, and was well enough in the evening to be given up to his mother, who brought him in her arms to my house next day, telling me the most awful story of his sufferings. On the whole, what should have been an eighteen-penny drive, cost me close upon a couple of pounds. I was thankful to have got out of it so cheaply. I was thankful that I was not to be haunted to my dying day by the image of a little child killed or fearfully crippled. And this kind of thing is going on every day. Can nothing be done to stop it?

I notice that Mr. Charles Reade has presented Mr. Charles Warner with a handsome silver loving-cup of antique fashion and bearing an inscription testifying Mr. Reade's admiration of the humour, passion, and tenderness displayed by Mr. Warner in the characters of Tom Robinson in "It is Never Too Late to Mend," and Jean Coupeau in "Drink." The presentation took place on the stage of the Princess's Theatre, in the presence of the assembled company. Mr. Charles Warner is an excellent actor, and richly deserves his testimonial; but with what beverage, may I ask, is his loving-cup to be filled? Obviously, not with any fermented liquor. The remembrance of Coupeau's terrible fate has, it is to be inferred, long since converted all Mr. Walter Gooch's company into the sternest of teetotallers. No nice hippocras for you, Mr. Charles Warner; no cool Badminton; no soothing sangaree; not even a draught of the mild and refreshing "shandy gaff." Might not, under the circumstances, a patent filter have been a more appropriate tribute to the leading actor in a most powerful and edifying temperance drama?

The old Queen's Prison in Southwark, erst known as the "Bench," and by gentlemen debtors popularly called "No. 1, Belvedere-place," just as Whitecross-street prison was called, from the name of its respected governor, "Burdon's Hotel," is to be pulled down; and the site, which covers three acres and a half, will be available for metropolitan improvements. Perhaps the enterprising builders who have erected the handsome pile of dwellings called the "Palatinate" in the New Kent-road, and the "Albany" at Camberwell, and who are about to build on the site of the old Surrey Zoological Gardens, may be able to do something with the disestablished "Bench," which after the so-called abolition of imprisonment for debt (it is in reality no more abolished than the tallyman and the pawnbroker are abolished) was converted first into a prison for military offenders, and next into a House of Reception for convicts brought up from Portland, Dartmoor, Chatham, and Portsmouth, to be enlarged on ticket-of-leave. In this last aspect there is a notice of the "Bench" in that very curious book "Five Years' Penal Servitude."

A capital leading article on the old "Bench" as a prison for debtors appeared in the Daily News of Wednesday. The writer, however, has fallen into one or two slight errors. He remarks that the traditional "Dolphin" pump in the racquet-ground was "always employed by a kind of Lynch committee to punish the pitiful wretch who had allowed himself to be so completely ruined as to be unable to pay his 'chummage' or 'footing;' but the iron dolphin has long since ceased to pour torrents on the heads of the truly poor and wretched. "It was not so, and charity forbid it should be so," to paraphrase Mr. Fox in the terrible tale with which so many of my lady correspondents, in the days when I gave "nuts to crack," proved themselves so conversant. No kind of "footing," fees, or "garnish" were, in modern times, exacted from debtors in the "Bench." As for "chummage," that system was of direct pecuniary benefit to the poor debtor, for if he were "chummed" or billeted upon a comparatively wealthy prisoner, the latter, in order to have a room to himself, "paid out" the person chummed upon him; that is to say, he made him a small weekly money allowance to enable him to find quarters elsewhere. As for the Dolphin pump, it had, besides supplying excellent water, two uses: first, it was employed as a kind of pillory for debtors who had escaped, and had been brought back to the "Bench." These were known as "Bolters." See a poem in a curious book called "Elegies from St. George's Fields" (or some such title), by Giorgio di Castelchiuso. I had the book once; but I lost it: that is to say, I lent it to a friend. The other use of the "Dolphin" was a fearfully vindictive one. Woe to the attorney's clerk who ventured into the inner courts of the "Bench" with the intent to serve a writ on any of the gentlemen detenus. The odds were ten to one that the gentleman detenu's indignantly sympathising comrades would set upon the writ-serving clerk, put him under the "Dolphin," and pump on him. He might think himself lucky if he escaped drying after his ducking, by being tossed in a blanket.

I wonder how many modern poets, even to the greatest, have been indebted for the noblest of their images to a certain satirical rhymester of the seventeenth century, of whom it was written by Dr. Johnson—"The date of his birth is doubtful; the mode and place of his education are unknown; the events of his life are variously narrated; and all that can be said with certainty concerning him is that he was poor." Turning over the "Genuine Remains of Samuel Butler, author of 'Hudibras,'" I lighted on these lines—

> It was about the middle age of night,
> When half the earth stood in the other's light;
> And Sleep, Death's brother, yet a friend to life,
> Gave wearied Nature a restorative.

This noble passage occurs in a burlesque poem called "Repartees between Cat and Puss at a Caterwauling." But where had I seen that image touching Death? Forthwith I turned up Shelley's "Queen Mab":—

> How wonderful is Death—
> Death and his brother Sleep!
> One, pale as yonder waning moon,
> With lips of livid blue;
> The other, rosy as the morn,
> When, throned on ocean's wave,
> It blushes o'er the world:
> Yet both so passing wonderful!

I read in a weekly journal entitled The Britannic, "devoted to the Financial, Commercial, and Social interests of British subjects in the United States of America," a paragraph which may possibly interest the members of the Folk Lore Society. It is a list of popular superstitions which, according to the Britannic, still command fervent belief in many parts of America:—

White specks on the nails are luck.
Whoever reads epitaphs loses his memory.
To rock the cradle when empty is injurious to the child.
To eat while a bell is tolling for a funeral causes toothache.
When a mouse gnaws a gown some misfortune may be apprehended.
Beggars' bread should be given to children who are slow in learning to speak.
If a child less than twelve months old be brought into a cellar he becomes fearful.
A child grows proud if suffered to look into a mirror while less than twelve months old.
The first tooth cast by a child should be swallowed by the mother, to insure a new growth of teeth.
By bending the head to the hollow of the arm the initial letter of the name of one's future spouse is represented.
Women who sow flax-seed should, during the process, tell some audacious lies, otherwise the yarn will never bleach white.
When a stranger enters a room he should be obliged to seat himself, if only for a moment, as he otherwise takes away the children's sleep with him.

I should like to know how many of the above superstitions obtain, or have obtained, in England. I may mention that I have been obliged to abridge the list, which in its entirety would extend to double the length that I could afford to give.

The appeal which I ventured to make in this column last week on behalf of Mr. John Baldwin Buckstone has met with a very generous response. With hearty gratitude I acknowledge receipt of the following donations for the relief of the aged and distressed actor. Lord Londesborough's gift was the first to arrive (last Saturday morning), and his Lordship's name naturally heads the list. Otherwise, I have not attempted to classify the schedule with any reference to the amounts sent or the rank of the sender.

The Right Hon. Lord Londesborough, £5; J. L. Bowes, £2 2s.; E. Gilbertson, £1 1s.; do., additional, £1; John Duguid, £5; "One who often saw him act," 1s.; Horatio Pym, £1; E. C., £1 1s.; Mrs. Forster (Ewell), £1; T. Lloyd, jun., £5; Sir William Fraser, Bart., M.P., £25; Mrs. L. R. (Maidstone), £5; James Kemplay, £10; Louisa Place, £1; Colonel Grattan, £1; Mrs. E. B. Harding, 5s.; J. C. D. B., £5 5s.; A. V. H., £2 2s.; Major T. R. Parr, £1 1s.; J. E. Kent, £1 1s.; Thomas Bratton, £1; "A Poverty-stricken Clerk," 2s. 6d.; "An obolus for B.," 10s. (this was a half-sovereign gummed under the flap of an envelope in a registered letter, but without any other sign or indication); H. P. Nethercote, £1; J. O'Fallon, 10s.; Sir Bernard Burke (Ulster King), £1; T. Edgar Pemberton, £1 1s.; O. V. K., 10s.; Frank C. C., £10; Sir Henry Pottinger, Bart, £3 3s.; W., £10. Total, £102 15s. 6d. up to Wednesday evening. I may add that, almost without exception, these donations were accompanied by letters containing touching expressions of kindly feeling towards Mr. Buckstone personally. Next week I will tell kind friends and subscribers what I have done with the money subscribed, and give a further list of donations.

P.S.—Several correspondents have very courteously cleared up the bewilderment which beset me as to Lady Margaret Macdonald having been the great-grandmother and the godmother of the late Miss Sinclair, and the "protectress of Charles Edward" as well. Next week I will summarise the voluminous explanations volunteered. G. A. S.

AN INCIDENT OF THE AFGHAN WAR.

The battle-scene represented in our large Engraving is that of the death of Major Wigram Battye, of the Queen's Own Corps of Punjaub Guides, in the conflict of April 2, at Futtehabad, with a large force of hostile Khugianis, a people of the hill-country, between the Shinwarries and Ghilzais, overlooking the right bank of the Cabul river. We gave a full account of this action in our publication of June 21, for which the Engraving was prepared, but it has been deferred from unavoidable difficulties, owing to the pressure of other subjects upon the available space in our pages. Major Wigram Battye was a brother to Major Quintin Battye, who was killed at Delhi, in 1857, while serving with the same regiment. Wigram Battye entered the service in 1859, was dangerously wounded in 1863, and performed some highly meritorious services. He accompanied one of the Prussian or other German armies, in 1870, through the war in France, and was at the siege of Paris. The troops engaged at Futtehabad on April 2 last, under command of Brigadier-General Gough, C.B., consisted of two squadrons of the 10th Hussars, the Guides Cavalry Corps, and 1000 infantry, with four guns, opposed to 5000 of the enemy. The cavalry charge was led by Wigram Battye, who received two bullets in his thigh, but refused to retire, till his horse was shot under him. In falling from his horse he was struck in the chest by another shot, and died in a few minutes. The enemy were speedily routed, and the two British officers killed, Lieutenant Wigram Battye and Lieutenant Wiseman, of the 17th, had a soldier's funeral at Jellalabad. Our Special Artist, Mr. Simpson, though not present at the fight, made his drawing of the scene from materials furnished by eye-witnesses of the whole affair. The officer riding in front, as shown to the left-hand side of the Engraving, is Lieutenant Hamilton, of the Guides, who has received the Victoria Cross for his gallantry upon this occasion. He is now in charge of the Guides who form the escort of the new British Resident at Cabul.

The members of her Majesty's Government were present at the usual whitebait dinner at the Ship Hotel, Greenwich, on Wednesday evening.

PITH OF PARLIAMENT.

Ministers having, greatly daring, dined off whitebait and goodness knows how many other luxuries at the Ship, Greenwich, on Wednesday, and the remaining Parliamentary business having been transacted with a dispatch not unsuggestive of bagging ever so many brace of grouse on the Twelfth, it was left to the Lord Chancellor to perform the funeral rites of the Session by reading the Queen's Speech on Friday. Her Majesty called Parliament together at an unusually early period—on Dec. 5 last—in order to communicate the intelligence that a hostile expedition had been sent from India against the Ameer of Afghanistan. The conclusion of the Afghan War, and the apparently approaching close of the Zulu War, obviously furnished the principal paragraphs for the Queen's Speech. Less beggarly would have been the array of important domestic measures in all probability had the Commons evinced as much business-like promptitude as a diminished House did in the last days of the Session. Not that pertinacious opposition, or "obstruction" was altogether dropped. Mr. Chamberlain, to wit, was energetically persistent in his objections to the Public Loans Bill, which asks local bodies for a higher rate of interest, and restricts the sum to be borrowed by any one authority to not more than £100,000 a year. At last Saturday's sitting, the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave as his reasons for pressing the measure that Government had lost on the loans negotiated at the former low rate of interest. But Mr. Chamberlain contended that the bill would greatly increase local burdens, and deaden local enterprise, and moved that it be read that day three months. Whereupon, the Chancellor of the Exchequer actually ventured on a quotation as a retort courteous:—

> It is a very good world that we live in,
> To lend, to spend, or to give in;
> But to beg, to borrow, or come by your own,
> It 's the very worst world that ever was known.

Sir Stafford Northcote was rewarded by the grateful sound of laughter; and a little later Mr. Chamberlain withdrew his amendment. His aversion to the measure, however, was conspicuously shown again in Committee. Tooth and nail, so to speak, he opposed it in the small hours of Tuesday morning last. Day dawned, and far away north on the glorious morning of the Twelfth grouse were being bagged at Balmoral and Abergeldie for her Majesty and the Prince of Wales; but still Mr. Chamberlain carried on his fight against long odds—22 to 67, 21 to 66, 19 to 66, and 16 to 66—and it was not until after six a.m. that the Public Works Loan Bill was ordered, amid Ministerial cheers, to be reported as amended. Still the appetite of Ministerialists for legislation was not satisfied. The Parliamentary Elections and Corrupt Practices Bill was passed through Committee; the East India Loans Bills were read the third time; the order for the Game Laws Amendment Bill was discharged, in spite of Sir Charles Dilke's remonstrances; and it was not until ten minutes past seven on Tuesday morning that hon. members separated—doubtless to the relief of the jaded and overtaxed officers of the House.
